Whether to leave them to be responsible for themselves or to help them stand up and take responsibility.

Only that last attitude might be the difference between him and me.

“Assistant Writer.”

"Hmm?"

“I have a favor to ask.”

That one difference made me speak.

“Please summon one disciple of each constellation, including the Sword Emperor Sect.”

“...That’s something I can do, but why?”

“I am a hunter. A hunter has certain things to do.”

I knew what I wanted to do.

“I will ascend to the next stage.”

Chapter 297: The Legend Himself (2)

---

Disciples from various constellations began to gather in the cave hideout.

“Assistant Writer? You were alive? That's surprising.”

“Hearing about the chaos in the tower yesterday, it was your doing, wasn't it?”

Disciples serving different constellations. Among them were those who had lost their constellations long ago, and some who hadn't lost them but were on the run from the tower.

They were the non-mainstream hunters of the 50th floor.

“Wow! Impressive! The tower has issued an extermination order.”

A woman in a reversed hood tapped the Assistant Writer on the shoulder.

“How badly did you piss off those spider bastards to get an extermination order? I’m envious. Hey, Assistant Writer, you should ditch that constellation like Hamusutra and come to us. We’ll treat you well!”

“...The fact that I haven't twisted your wrist off is the last bit of courtesy I have as the person who invited you. Be grateful for my rational and elegant manners.”

The disciples chattered and found spots to their liking. Some sat on flat stalagmites, others lay down, and some placed their rag cushions...

At first glance, they looked like a ragtag bunch.

It was a scene akin to a flea market.

"Hmm."

But my senses had been sharp since a while ago.

‘These hunters... are strong.’

-Well, they're all ragamuffins chased by the tower.

The Guardian Spirit crossed his arms.

-Otherwise, they wouldn't have evaded the tower till now. Either they're clever, lucky, or just strong. Having even one of these traits makes them strong.

‘Each person gathered here is at least at Paladin's level.’

I looked around. In our world, one of the top ten, maybe even five, would be the average here.

‘50th floor is indeed not to be underestimated.’

The hunters I met in Monopolized Poisonous City were not weak, but somehow lacking. At best, they were at the level of, ‘Oh, you know how to use Aura? Not bad.’

However, the disciples gathered now were different.

‘There seems to be an uninvited guest hidden too.’

I glanced subtly into the depths of the dark cave.

Even a hunter who hid their presence and quietly observed was among them.

It was truly a lineup worthy of the 50th floor’s reputation.

“First of all, thank you all for gathering today, even though you probably don’t have money for today’s meal.”

The Assistant Writer stood up.

She walked to the center of the meeting. The disciples looked at her, but they were either not paying attention or pretending to be disinterested.

“There are people here I haven’t seen in 10 years. Some we can no longer see. I...”

“Hey, writer lady.”

The woman who had tapped the Assistant Writer's shoulder earlier raised her hand. She was chewing something.

“Sorry to interrupt your passionate welcome, but...”

“...What?”

“I’ve been very uncomfortable since earlier. It probably isn’t just me. Don’t misunderstand. I’m not complaining about not having chairs or cushions, we know you can’t afford it.”

The woman laughed and turned her gaze...

Directly at me.

“What’s with that guy?”

"....."

“My gut is rumbling. The rat tails I ate yesterday feel like they’re coming up my throat. Writer lady, imagine if you were invited to a friend's house and they had a penguin wandering around without even a cage. Would you be able to eat?”

Despite her tone, the hunter's eyes were not smiling.

The noisy air quieted down.

I realized then. The reason the disciples weren't focused on the Assistant Writer wasn't because they were rude. They were, in fact, paying attention to [me].

Just as I was surprised by their capabilities, they had sensed me as well.

“...Yes. I was about to introduce him.”

The Assistant Writer sighed.

“Let me introduce him. This person is...”

“Hello. Nice to meet you.”

I stood up. As my body moved, some disciples reached for their waists, ready to draw weapons at any moment.

It couldn't be helped. We were strangers. To convey friendliness as much as possible, I smiled broadly.

“My name is Kim Gong-Ja. Thank you for calling me a penguin. I've always been curious about the feel of a penguin's skin since I was a child.”

“Kim Gong-Ja? Hey, that's not a title but a name. We're not joking around here. Tell us your title.”

“Yes. My title is King of Death.”

".....!"

The air in the cave tensed palpably. It was not a metaphor. Several disciples who had been conserving their energy suddenly surged their aura.

“King of Death? The one Mahos put an extermination and pursuit order on?”

“He devoured numerous worlds and turned countless humans into undead, that heretic cult leader!”

“Assistant Writer! Why did you invite such a lich to the meeting?”

Uh-oh.

Why is it turning out this way even after I kindly answered?

-You're actually enjoying this, aren't you?

‘That’s an unfair accusation. Please stop the slander.’

I wasn’t intentionally enjoying it. It's just that discovering the undefined joy in seeing people scream at the sight of me being a terrifying villain was incidental.

“Hah...”

I unfastened my Holy Sword from my waist, still in its sheath. Startled! The wary disciples flinched.

Showing them I had no hostility, I slowly set the sword down at my feet. I then showed them my empty palms.

“Look.”

Still smiling broadly.

“I don’t bite.”

"....."

“The [Warhorse of the Eternal Plains] may have declared me a public enemy, but Mahos doesn’t truly consider me an evil lord. He just opportunistically used me, and he did that for you.”

“For us? Mahos?”

The hunter asked.

“He’s like a ruffian among constellations. For us, really? What do you mean?”

“Assistant Writer told me. If you’re not part of the tower, you can’t ascend to the 51st floor. That’s the current situation here. But you don’t want to join the tower, nor... do you have the power to break it.”

"....."

“I’m sorry. I don’t mean any offense. It’s just that from the constellations’ perspective, the situation must be frustrating. Maybe Mahos thought I could be a kind of [breakthrough].”

Why did Mahos become hostile as soon as I reached the 50th floor?

Because I snatched his apostle, Goldencup? Was it just for that reason he decided to fight? Maybe, but if he truly wanted me dead, he wouldn’t have gathered some randoms for a surprise attack.

Hunters gathered in the cave hideout, showing they were the [real deal].

"Mahos wants to make me the new boss."

"....."

"To replace the tower."

I spoke with certainty.

"...Indeed."

The hunter closed her eyes.

She looked at me with half-opened eyes, "So, to make you the [new boss] and then subdue you. I see. It's just like the Constellation Killer, basically turning you into a [seasonal event boss]."

"Yes. That's my guess. If you have no teeth, you use your gums."

The other disciples murmured in agreement. "Aha," "I see..." They seemed to understand our conversation.

I quietly smiled, looking at the cave ceiling.

[‘The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains’ remains silent.]

Sometimes silence is an affirmation.

“Okay, King of Death. That’s a very plausible point.”

The hunter stood up.

“But why tell us? It’s hard to say that’s wise. You’ve just given us more reason to see you as an evil lich.”

She smirked, fiddling with the hilt of her dagger.

“It is probably easier to defeat you than to break the tower, right? I was getting tired of living like a beggar on the 50th floor! I feel like joining Mahos’s quest.”

It was a clear provocation.

“Of course. That’s also your choice.”

I laughed heartily, spreading my palms.

“But, is it really easier to kill me than to bring down the tower?”

“What?”

“You, being skilled hunters, must have killed many enemies. You must be accustomed to the line between life and death. But, everyone.”

I smiled amicably.

“Killing someone is realistically a very difficult thing, isn’t it?”

“...What are you trying to say?”

“It’s simple. Mahos didn’t consider me a [replacement for the tower] without reason. Maybe I really am [as hard to subdue as the tower]. Just me, alone, replacing the entire tower. Can you really defeat someone like me?”

The hunters, including the casual one, gasped.

I humbly smiled, scratching the back of my head.

“You haven’t even caught Constellation Killer yet.”

Provocation needs provocation.

That's the lesson I've learned.

“Huh.”

The hunter smirked.

“That’s good too! Let's see if you're really on par with Constellation Killer—”

“No. Stop it, [Berserker].”

At that moment, someone emerged from behind me. A man wrapped in bandages from head to toe. He made no sound of footsteps or breathing, only his voice flowed without any trace.

The disciples were startled, having just noticed his presence. Even the hunter frowned.

“...[Paparazzo]? What’s this? How long have you been hiding like a cockroach?”

“I’ve been here before you all came.”

The bandaged hunter, Paparazzo, muttered.

“Looks like my skills haven’t rusted yet. No one here detected me.”

“Hah? Obviously. Who can find you when you’re hiding?”

“He did.”

Paparazzo pointed at me. His hand, from the nails to the back, was completely wrapped in bandages.

“He's been aware of me and cautious since earlier.”

"....."

“He aroused my competitive spirit. Throughout your conversation, I constantly looked for an opening to snap his neck. But even when he put down his sword, there was no gap.”

“That's...”

“It means he's stronger than us. Clearly.”

The hunter, [Berserker], gritted her teeth.

“Really at the level of the tower? Hey, don't be kidding.”

“I don't know how strong exactly. At least, he's a step ahead of us. I'm not so foolish that I'll fight a stronger opponent and lose my life. I think you're the same.”

Berserker glared at me again, her eyes scanning me from head to toe. Eyes filled with killing intent, competitive spirit, and most importantly, suppressing her pride.

Yes.

That was a gaze I liked.

“It’s okay.”

I smiled brightly.

“I won’t kill you!”

"....."

To my consideration, Berserker clenched her fists. She huffed and puffed, then slowly moved her hand away from the dagger.

‘Oh?’

She's not going to attack? I was a bit disappointed.

I was looking forward to seeing the martial prowess of a 50th-floor strongman.

Ignoring my disappointment, the Guardian Spirit chuckled.

-You really know how to make a scene for your initiation.

Thanks to one intruder, the imminent explosive situation was avoided.

"....."

"....."

However, the atmosphere in the cave hadn't changed. In fact, it grew tenser. Even the previously relaxed disciples began to clearly guard against me after hearing the conversation between [Berserker] and [Paparazzo].

Many disciples swallowed hard.

"Ugh."

This was awkward.

I had tried to approach softly to avoid this atmosphere.

I scratched my cheek. Not everything in the world can be solved with words and smiles. It's important to think positively.

"Well. It's good that we avoided any bloodshed. It's definitely a good start!"

"....."

"The reason I asked the Assistant Writer to invite you all here is simple. It's hard for me to bring down the tower alone... Although I could summon my own forces, that wouldn't be meaningful. It would just be like the [Sword Emperor's Return]."

"...What do you mean?"

“Just showing [victory] is not enough.”

I clapped my hands.

“I’m more interested in you all winning than just me.”

“What?”

“Assistant Writer.”

I turned to the Assistant Writer.

“You said you're not the [protagonist of this story].”

The Assistant Writer remained silent.

Repeated silence can also convey intention, so I understood various things.

She wouldn't have said that just as self-deprecation. That statement carried weight.

But...

“Why does it have to be that way?”

“You....”

“Not just to the Assistant Writer.”

I looked around at the disciples again.

I said,

“The Constellations that have been forgotten on this 50th floor, the ones losing power and possibly their status, please contact them. As disciples of these Constellations, I believe you have a way to communicate.”

The disciples looked at me with suspicious eyes.

I hadn't done anything yet.

Still undeterred by their prejudice, I kept smiling brightly.

“Please gather [all your quests]. I will unify them and help you all reach the 51st floor!”

"....."

The hall fell silent.

From behind, the Assistant Writer muttered lowly,

“...Hey, haven't you heard that your smile is suspicious? If you talk like that while smiling, everyone will think you have a dark heart, only care about power, and treat human lives like flies, you son of a bitch.”

That's a harsh thing to say.

Raviel likes my smile, you know.

Chapter 298: The Legend Himself (3)

---

The man's hair was disheveled, and dark circles hung under his eyes. With emotionless eyes, he gazed at me.

"Greetings. I am a disciple of the [Warhorse of the Eternal Plains], honored to have received his flag."

The man spoke.

"Pleasure to meet you. I am the King of Death."

"I know. Ordinarily, our paths would never cross. Never. But [Holed-Up Head Librarian], [Berserker], and [Paparazzo] requested me."

The black-haired man surveyed the surroundings. The deep underground cave. The hunters who had gathered at my request were standing at a distance, giving us wary looks and pondering whether listening to me had been wise.

"It's rare for the three of them to ask something together. I enjoy rare events."

"Thank you for accepting the invitation."

"Don't mention it."

The disciple of Mahos curled his lips slightly.

"I should be thanking you. After this conversation, I will capture you. For the first time in a long while, I will pleasantly complete a quest assigned by Mahos."

"So, why did you want to see me? If you're here to surrender, I welcome it anytime."

I smiled.

"I want to understand all of you."

---

"Understand? Us?"

The petite girl frowned. Her golden hair was tied in two buns on either side of her head. They looked warm enough to touch even in the coldest winter, but there was no need to do so. Her voice always seemed to be fueled by anger, 365 days a year.

She was a disciple of [The Incarnation of Love and Lust] - Babbit*.

*Baravit has been changed to Babbit, due to context clues and some reader's corrections.

"Yes. I want to deeply understand the Constellations you serve."

"You're funny. It's already a joke to say that a person can understand another person, and you, a mere human, want to understand Constellations? If [Holed-Up Head Librarian] hadn't asked, I wouldn't have set foot in this stinking cave."

As she was about to launch into a tirade, the disciple of Babbit squinted. She waved her hand in annoyance, as if to shoo away a mosquito.

"Ah! Stop it. It's noisy. I'll talk to him myself!"

It seemed Babbit was continuously sending her messages. Truly favored by her Constellation, she spoke to Babbit more freely than ordinary disciples could imagine.

"Sheesh. Really, Babbit, what do you see in someone like him..."

"I will bring down the Magic Tower."

"....."

"But merely doing it alone is meaningless. Your quests, the Constellations you serve, I will intertwine them all to strike at the Tower."

"What are you talking about..."

"To do that, I need to properly understand the nature of the Constellations."

I looked straight at Babbit's disciple. She sat nobly, her red cape spread over a damp stalagmite, serving as a cushion in her own small territory.

"Being a disciple like you, you must communicate more openly with your Constellation. I want to converse with your Constellation through you. More vividly, more accurately. Deeper."

"....."

"What does Babbit like? What kind of quests does she prefer?"

I poured the tea for the disciple.

Through the red liquid of the tea, the girl's expression was reflected.

"What is Babbit like to you as a Constellation?"

---

"The disciples of the [Warhorse of the Eternal Plains] are like an army."

The man spoke.

"An army?"

"Yes. Ordinary disciples are like soldiers. A disciple like me is a general. We only think about the victory in battle and the spoils of war. To us, every battlefield is merely a [dungeon]."

He took a sip of his tea. His eyes widened, and he looked down at the teacup. "...Delicious." After blinking a few times, he returned to his expressionless state and looked at me.

"Where was I? Right. Our quest is to clear dungeons. When we topple the tower and plant our flag, only then can our quest from Mahos be considered complete."

He smiled faintly.

"You're planning to gather various quests from different Constellations and clear them all at once? That's ambitious and brave, King of Death, but it lacks practicality."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because Constellations are too different from each other."

The disciple of Mahos spoke with certainty.

"We must destroy the tower. However, for instance, [The Incarnation of Love and Lust], Babbit would propose a completely different quest. And that would be irreconcilable."

"....."

"Meet with Babbit's disciple first. Then you will understand what I mean. You'll see how impossible your plan is."

---

"We need to win over the tower's Elder."

Babbit's disciple finally spoke.

"We, or rather Babbit, place the utmost importance on human relationships, dismissing everything else as unnecessary. For us, clearing the 50th floor isn't about demolishing the lifeless tower structure, but winning the heart of the Elder, the leader of the Tower and mother of all spiders."

She asserted confidently.

"But that's impossible."

"Why is it impossible?"

"The Elder of the Tower has never opened her heart to anyone."

Babbit's disciple drank her tea. "What? Damn, it's good." She vented her irritation and then sighed.

"Our Babbit's power is the [Pink-Hued Rom-Com]."

"....."

"Don't look at me like that. I didn't name it. I'll give you a smack. Anyway, with [Pink-Hued Rom-Com], it becomes easier to fall in love. Let me give you a demo."

She put down her teacup and joined her hands together. Closing her eyes, she prayed. Pink light flowed from her hands, enveloping the ground within a five-meter radius with a soft glow.

Aside from that, no other peculiar sign was noticeable.

"Now."

When she opened her eyes again, they were filled with seriousness.

"I'm ready. Go ahead."

"Me? Go ahead with what?"

"I don't know. Just do anything. Stand up or keep talking, whatever. No matter what you do, you'll immediately understand the nature of this power."

"Um... then."

I picked up the teapot. The girl's teacup was empty.

Just as I was about to pour her a second cup...

"Oh?"

I stumbled.

There was nothing on the floor that I could have tripped over, yet I somehow misstepped.

I quickly tried to secure the teapot, but then I stumbled a second time. Like an acrobat failing a tightrope walk, my body swayed.

"Whoa? Whoa!"

Splash!

I ended up falling over, along with the teapot.

The person I had fallen on was none other than Babbit's disciple.

"....."

"....."

I blankly looked down at the disciple, who in turn stared back at me. Indeed, I had fallen onto her, unintentionally assuming a push-up posture.

What laws of physics or mechanics had come into play here?

"As you can see."

Unlike me, Babbit's disciple was utterly unfazed, behaving as if the situation was as natural as spilled water from an overturned cup.

"In the realm of Babbit's power, whatever you do, however much you struggle, people inevitably become closer to each other, whether in physical or emotional terms."

"Ah..."

That does ring a bell. I think the Heretic Inquisitor showed it to me once.

Right. Babbit was the Constellation that turned everything into a love-comedy event.

“For instance, even as you fell, you were mindful of the teapot until the very end. Because of that, I wasn't splashed with hot water. Instead, you ended up dousing yourself with tea.”

Drip. Drop.

Red tea trickled down my face, soaking my hair. Droplets running down my jaw exquisitely missed Babbit's disciple's cheek, landing right beside it.

“Now I've come to understand that you're someone considerate of others. I didn't want to know that. I didn't want to get closer to you, yet here we are, physically and emotionally closer.”

“Wow.”

“Exactly. To add, right now, I have a man's face drenched in red tea in front of me. Statistically speaking, men are four times more attractive when wet.”

There's a statistic for that?

“.....So annoying.”

Babbit's disciple irritably pushed me away. She stood up and shook off her cloak.

“See? Do you get it now? Our Constellation is obsessed with love, plain and simple.”

"....."

“No, if it was just love, I'd find it cute. But Babbit doesn't just adore love. [Hatred], [Regret], [Obsession], [Possessiveness]. She loves all intense emotions that humans can have towards another. And she's convinced that the person to clear this 50th floor isn't the tower itself, but the Elder who leads it.”

The disciple smiled.

“Can you handle it?”

It was a mocking smile.

More at the situation itself than at me and more at herself than at the situation.

“When a person lives for over a thousand years, King of Death, you don't say [I've lived for a thousand years]. You say [I've been dying for a thousand years]. The Elder of the Tower is a big shot who's been dying for that long. Do you think you can extract even a shred of emotion from her, whether it's affection, hatred, obsession, or regret?”

Clatter.

The disciple took out a gold coin and placed it on a flat stalagmite. Then, she brushed past me, her cloak trailing behind her.

"That's for the tea. Keep it."

"Wait a moment, please."

I grabbed her cloak.

Tug.

The weight of her body pulled against my grip.

"What?"

"It might be impossible to gain the Elder's affection, but drawing out hatred is feasible."

".....You seem to misunderstand. The hatred Babbit speaks of isn't just an extension of annoyance."

The disciple flicked my hand away with a snap.

"True hatred, akin to the weight of love. A lifelong dedication to despising someone, cursing them, letting that hatred become a part of you – only such profound emotions are recognized by Babbit. Do you have what it takes to extract such deep hatred from someone who's lived a thousand years? Do you possess something worth hating for a millennium?"

I nodded affirmatively.

"Not in me."

"See that..."

"However, I can still draw it out."

I looked intently into Babbit's disciple's eyes.

Her eyes were the same red as her cloak. The cloak was like a fortress, an extra layer for those who couldn't feel secure in their own skin. Her eyes were similar, with twin concentric circles settled in her crimson irises.

"I have a master who's the most hated person in the world by the Magic Tower's Elder."

"....."

"Even if others can't, my master can provoke the Elder's emotions. No. He can drive the Elder mad."

[‘The The Incarnation of Love and Lust’ listens intently to your words.]

"Entrust me with your quests. Share them with me. It might be impossible alone, but with my master's name, anything is achievable."

Silence fell.

Babbit's disciple slowly parted her lips.

".....Who is your master?"

---

"The Sword Emperor."

I replied.

"....."

The unchanging expression of the disciple of Mahos finally cracked. He froze, his teacup raised. Only after the steam from the tea thinned did the black-haired man manage a short snort.

"A man who died a hundred and fifty years ago? That's absurd."

"A hunter who reached the 99th floor. A legend. Do you really believe he left no trace and just died? There are countless ways to leave a legacy. Reincarnating as another person, wandering as a ghost, or even hoping for a successor to carry on his will..."

"....."

"I can prove that I am the Sword Emperor's successor."

I smiled.

"Imagine. If I were truly his successor, provoking the tower's Elder would be possible. The Elder, in unprecedented fury, would reveal her emotions towards me. I can accomplish the quest set by the 'The Incarnation of Love and Lust'."

"Not just that. The emotion the Elder will show towards me is hatred, a bottomless, abyssal hatred. She will issue a kill order and deploy all of the tower's forces to wage war against me. If we win that war..."

".....So the quest given by 'Warhorse of the Eternal Plains' can also be accomplished at the same time."

The black-haired man, a disciple of Mahos, bowed his head in thought.

['The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains' listens intently to your words.]

"Entrust me with your quests."

I continued.

"I'll show you evidence that I am the Sword Emperor's successor in a while. The Constellations will recognize it. What you need to consider now is whether my proposal is realistic or not."

One by one, I spoke to the representatives of each Constellation.

"I can bring down the Magic Tower."

I would weave all the quests of the Constellations into one.

I named this operation:

The Grand Campaign.

[‘The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth’ listens intently to your words.]

[‘The Lonely Seeker’ listens intently to your words.]

[‘The Last Sword Left in the Wilderness’ listens intently to your words.]

[‘The Bell That Rouses the Dead’ listens intently to your words.]

I nodded affirmatively.

"Spread the word that the Sword Emperor's successor has returned to this land."

Volume 13 – Chapters 299-324

Chapter 299: Grand Campaign (1)

---

On the day the Sword Emperor revealed himself on the 50th floor, all the constellations of that era whispered.

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains invites you to join.]

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow recommends you a long campaign.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth invites you to join.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust proposes the role of Apostle to you.]

[The Lotus Reflected on Water invites you to join.]

[The Lonely Seeker...]

Starting from the renowned constellations and extending up to the lesser-known ones.

It was certain. This human would shine under any constellation! By sewing together quests offered by the constellations, the Sword Emperor was bound to grasp the most dramatic love, victory, and life in this world.

-Hmm.

But it was evident in his eyes. The Sword Emperor's eyes were clear. Those eyes would accept the bitterness of any wound unflinchingly.

-Interesting.

He didn't consider himself a human too precious to be wounded, nor did he arrogantly think that he didn't need to be. He simply strived to become stronger, monstrously so, in his heart.

-But, I refuse.

While surrounded by the beckoning starlight, the Sword

Emperor smiled slyly.

-I choose none! No constellation! I will ascend to the 100th floor, witness its landscape first, keep it to myself, and stay silent about it. I won't tell you anything!

With his hair redder than the sun, the King of Swords laughed.

-If you're curious about what's up there, stand up and follow me! Friendship isn't about climbing a mountain together. Only those who have climbed the same mountain can truly share friendship!

The Sword Emperor became a star himself and vanished.

The 99th floor.

The place where he fell as a meteor was just one step away from the ultimate stage.

No one could find his remains. It was impossible to reach the 99th floor. Even those who arrogantly claimed to be his followers couldn't approach it.

Was he really dead or was he still on the 99th floor? Or perhaps, he had reached the 100th floor and vanished without a trace.

The Tower revealed nothing. The rumors spread all over the tower and ran rampant .

-.....

There was someone else who had reached the second highest stage after the Sword Emperor - A mage. She ventured up to the 90th floor but as soon as the Sword Emperor's presence disappeared, she turned away.

-Idiotic bastard.

She was the elder of the Magic Tower.

---

I've learned much while climbing the Tower, but if I were to choose the most pragmatic realization, it would be this:

It's hard to solve everything with just words.

"Damn!"

Chaang!

With an unpleasant metallic sound, a spear flew through the air. It was held by the Apostle of Mahos, a man with black hair.

I whirled my Aura, sending the spear flying far into the distance.

“Kuh...!”

“You're strong.”

I flexed my shoulder muscles. They were starting to cramp up.

The man tried to control his Aura and bring the spear back. But in a battle of Aura, it was difficult for him to best me.

My master, even while being consumed by the zombie virus, could manipulate her muscles, intestines, bones, and heart through the art of Ki Telekinesis.

I am her successor. My training journey has been different from others.

‘Well. This isn’t the first time a duel like this has happened.’

I spoke leisurely.

“It’s no flattery but you really are strong. Probably among the top five if you were in our world.”

“How presumptuous...! I haven’t even used the power of Mahos yet!”

“Same here. I haven’t called the legion of my family yet.”

I sheathed my Holy Sword.

“When I call my family, things get amazing.”

“What?”

“The sky turns upside down, and the earth flips over. It sounds like a lie, right? It's true. If you knew who the shadow of my family is, you'd probably have a heart attack.”

It's the Constellation Killer, you know.

“...Even if it's a lie. If it's true, why don't you call such a powerful army?”

“They're guarding the house.”

I shrugged.

“What if someone invades from another world while I'm away? Those kids are guarding the house so I can roam around freely now. They are all as strong as me.”

"....."

The Apostle of Mahos bit his lip hard.

[You have passed the test.]

[The quests for your subjugation and tracking have been lifted!]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains acknowledges you as a temporary disciple!]

[From now on, you will share the main quests with the Warhorse of the Eternal Plains.]

Okay.

The Apostle seemed hesitant to accept the outcome of the fight, but the Constellation he served had cleanly conceded. Mahos recognized me becoming a [temporary disciple] and participating in his quests.

This meant I could directly participate in the quests led by Mahos, even though I wasn't officially serving him.

A rare case. An exception.

“What a disgrace. Get out already.”

Pushing aside the Apostle of Mahos, another hunter emerged.

“Greetings! I am one of the Apostles of [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth], known as [The Jester].”

The hunter, true to her name, was dressed as a jester. Her face was covered in red and white makeup, the thick layers obscuring any emotion she might have shown.

“I heard you intend to become a disciple of all the Constellations existing on the 50th floor.”

“Just a temporary disciple, though.”

“Haha. How interesting!”

Despite saying it was interesting, the Jester’s face told a different tale. Behind her, more than ten hunters were waiting. All of them, regardless of their strength, were Apostles of various Constellations.

They had come to test me on behalf of their Constellations.

“Since Mahos has tested your [strength], I shall test your [luck]!”

Crrrrk.

The Jester brought a table over.

Then, she placed 13 [cups] upside down on it.

“A labyrinth is ultimately about wandering to find the right answer!”

The Jester smiled.

“No matter how twisted the maze or how sinister the dungeon with traps is, if you boil it down, it’s just like these 13 cups. Come on, come on, King of Death. Among these cups, only one contains a candy that you can eat first.”

The Jester tapped the cups, tuk, tuk, tuk. Clear glass. Inside each cup was a candy that children would love.

“In other words,”

“The other 12 contain candies that shouldn’t be eaten.”

“Haha! Exactly! You got it right!”

The Jester beamed a pleasant smile, the kind that makes her feel refreshed but leaves others feeling sour.

“Each and every one of them is extremely poisonous!”

“These unremarkable glass cups may seem ordinary, but they are relics. An item bestowed upon me directly by [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] in recognition of my clowning around! Ordinary aura cannot penetrate them, nor can any skill discern what’s inside!”

Right. I know that.

“Alright! Alright! King of Death. As a challenger seeking the favor of all constellations, although it's just a trivial display of talent, join me in my little prank...."

"I'll gladly accept."

I immediately picked up the fourth cup and ate the candy inside.

"Eh?"

The Jester, who had been grandly bullshitting, was taken aback. Ignoring her, I nonchalantly chewed and swallowed the candy.

"It's mint-flavored. I prefer yogurt-flavored candies."

"....."

"Do you know about yogurt candies? They're sweet and have a slight milk-like flavor, delicious really. They often have them at barbecue places. Those are truly delicious."

Silence ensued.

The Jester slowly covered her face with both hands.

Her face looked utterly shocked.

“How can this be...! Holy shit! Oh my God! How on earth...!?”

I chuckled lightly.

“Does this mean I’ve passed the test?”

“I-I don’t know! How can a mere jester like me judge someone born with such incredible luck? Terrifying, truly terrify-”

“It’s not over yet.”

She hesitated.

“What do you mean?”

“You said it yourself. Among these, there is a candy that [can be eaten first].”

I removed the sixth cup.

“Which means there is also a candy that [must be eaten later].”

And without hesitation, I ate the candy inside.

"....."

“So, I’ve eaten two now. How many are left?”

“...One left.”

“Okay.”

I deliberately looked at the remaining glass cups with a wide grin.

‘How come defeating Mahos's Apostle seems less challenging than this?’

These tests weren't new to me. While they might be a first-time experience for others, I had already faced them several times.

‘I needlessly died nine times already.’

I've been experiencing the same day for the tenth time.

If it were a battle of skills, maybe, but in a test purely based on luck like this, even I have no control. The first few times, I died screaming after eating candies laced with deadly poison. Then, even after I guessed right and was elated, I died an hour later.

The candy that was [safe to eat first] also contained poison, necessitating the sequential consumption of other candies to avoid death.

“Which one has the tasty candy, I wonder? This one? Or this one? Hmm. It’s tough. Both look delicious...”

Unaware of my time loops, the Jester just stared at me blankly.

“How...? Neither skills nor Aura can detect it...”

“Ah.”

I picked up the first cup.

“It’s this one.”

"....."

“This candy was practically begging me to eat it, claiming it was totally harmless. So noisy. I feel sorry for it, so I have to eat it.”

I unwrapped the candy and chewed it. The poison from the first candy was neutralized by the second, and the second candy's poison was completely detoxified by the third.

Normally, the Jester would have watched me slowly suffering from the poison and gloated, 'Hahaha! Are you in pain? It must be tough! Come on! Come on! Hurry up and choose! Your own answer! Your own correct answer, pick it with your own hands!'

"Is it over now?"

"....."

But now, having cleared the mission in less than a minute, she just stood there with her mouth agape.

I gave her a bright smile.

"I often hear that I have good luck."

[You have passed the test.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth acknowledges you as a temporary disciple!]

[From now on, you will share the main quests with The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth.]

Indeed.

[You have passed the test.]

[The Lonely Seeker acknowledges you as a temporary disciple!]

[From now on, you will share the main quests with The Lonely Seeker.]

The Guardian Spirit refused all offers from the Constellations.

He climbed the Tower stoically, nobly, but solitarily.

Yet, he failed.

[You have passed the test.]

[The Last Sword Remaining in the Wilderness acknowledges you as a temporary disciple!]

[From now on, you will share the main quests with The Last Sword Remaining in the Wilderness.]

Why he failed remains unknown.

One thing is clear: even a hunter as formidable as the Sword Emperor failed the journey alone.

The path he trod is not the right path.

It's nothing but a dead end.

I'd rather believe that the Sword Emperor failed not due to inability or lack of strength, but due to the fact that he simply chose the wrong method.

No.

I believe it.

Therefore,

[You have passed the test.]

[The Bell that Rings for the Dead acknowledges you as a temporary disciple!]

[From now on, you will share the main quests with The Bell that Rings for the Dead.]

I will walk a path entirely opposite to the one he chose.

-.....

If the Guardian Spirit walked the path of the righteous, I will walk the path of the demonic.

If the Guardian Spirit ascended alone without creating any alliances, I will build forces. I will gain favor with the Tower's residents. I will unite the great guilds. I will accept the love of a lover, the loyalty of a retainer, and form a family.

I will establish a lineage.

[You have passed the test.]

[You have passed the test.]

[You have passed the test.]

The Guardian Spirit served no Constellation.

Therefore, I will serve [all Constellations].

“...Good.”

As the evening sun set, the queue of more than ten Apostles had been reduced to just one.

“I have to admit. We, or rather I, underestimated you.”

The last remaining Apostle wore a cloak redder than the sunset.

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust].

The Apostle of Babbit, a girl, stared at me intently.

“You've proven yourself strong and lucky. Even if it's not purely by luck, you must have a skill that makes your success seem fortuitous.”

The girl took off her cloak, dropping the heavy fur onto the ground.

She then pulled out a water bottle.

“But do you truly understand [love]?”

Swoosh!

Babbit's Apostle drenched her own head with water. Dew slid down her lustrous blonde hair. The setting sun was ablaze, and the light that painted the sky red also slipped into the droplets on the girl, quietly coloring her cheeks.

“You and I. Let's see who can make the opponent's heart flutter first.”

Babbit's power unfolded, enveloping the surroundings in a pink hue.

The girl, as if her previous stoicness were a lie, wore a sorrowful smile. The corners of her eyes drooped, and all arrogance and pride vanished from her face.

[Come closer].

The Apostle's smile, her slow gestures, her gaze, all beckoned me.

“I'll say it in advance. I'm sorry.”

The sunset was falling for her.

“You’re going to like me.”

"....."

I shook my head.

“I have many identities, like everyone else.”

I slowly approached Babbit’s Apostle.

“The leader of a cult, the head of a family, the director of a troupe, a father to someone, a friend to a race, and now, adding to this list, I will be a temporary disciple of Mahos, Babbit, and many others. And as I climb the Tower, more titles will attach to me, but...”

I stood firmly in front of the girl.

The Apostle, drenched in water, looked up at me.

“The first identity I hold will always remain unchanged.”

I smiled.

“I am the man of the most beautiful being in this world.”

"....."

“She has no heart, so I gently offered her mine.”

Before being a hunter, I was someone in love.

And then.

[You have passed the test.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust acknowledges you as a temporary disciple!]

[From now on, you will share the main quests with The Incarnation of Love and Lust.]

That day, I made contracts with numerous Constellations.

Chapter 300: Grand Campaign (2)

---

"The Magic Tower has officially started tracking us down."

Thud.

A bundle of papers was placed on the old table. It was a document brought over by the [Assistant Writer]. She wiped her forehead and looked at me, exhaling deeply.

"The city has formally issued a decree of extermination. A hefty reward has been promised to anyone who captures the escaped prisoner from the dungeon - Hamusutra's followers. For those who catch or provide information on the 'unknown rogue' who helped them escape, the reward is twenty-eight times greater... It seems they've found the mark you left at the entrance of the secret passage."

"That's good news."

I quickly skimmed through the documents.

The papers were filled with information about the Magic Tower, especially about the leader of the Magic Tower, the so-called Elder.

"I was anxious about when they would discover it. It seems that they are quite slow in their actions."

".....What exactly did you write there?"

"The Sword Emperor has returned."

I smiled.

"I just wrote those five words. Nothing much."

"....."

The Assistant Writer was agape with shock.

"You're really crazy, you know."

"What is common sense, Ms. Writer? It's probably the average of living in this world, the norm of life. And this world is, on average, a complete mess. Being called crazy, being abnormal, in other words, is the opposite of this mess. It can be considered normal."

"Right. You lunatic."

It's strange.

Why does no one take my serious words seriously?

Massaging her forehead, the Assistant Writer sighed deeply. Her sigh would've bore a hole in the floor of the cave if it could.

".....I admit that you're extraordinary. You've earned the trust of the Head Librarian and persuaded numerous Constellations. You might be the first in history to have [Simultaneous Membership] with double-digit Constellations."

"Thank you for the compliment."

"But you shouldn't provoke the Magic Tower recklessly."

The Assistant Writer said.

"The two words most hated by the Magic Tower in the universe are 'Sword' and 'Emperor'. The Elder of the Magic Tower considers herself the antithesis of the Sword Emperor. In story terms, an archnemesis. A sworn enemy."

"I know."

I snapped my fingers.

Swish.

Letters appeared before my eyes. A quest window. A window I had received dozens of times before, but the hologram I was seeing now was different.

The characters looked as if they were written by hand, shimmering and adorably sparkling.

+

[Grand Strategy! Shake the Elder's Heart★]

Constellation: The Incarnation of Love and Lust

Difficulty: SSS

Objective: Oh my! Someone claiming to be the successor of the Sword Emperor has appeared in the world. His alias is the King of Death! A warrior who has just reached the 50th floor is causing a stir!

Is he really the heir to the Sword Emperor? Or could he actually be the Sword Emperor himself...!? (Thump)

If the King of Death really has a connection with the Sword Emperor, my goodness, The Elder of the Magic Tower won't sit still! Because the only person who ever drove a stake into her cold heart was the Sword Emperor! (Dramatic)

Will the King of Death restart the heart of the most sinister spider?

If so, what music will the beating of that heart play? Love? Hate? Or perhaps love-hate? (Wink) Any rhythm will do. All I,

Babbit, expect from the King of Death, is the sound of the Elder tearing apart!

Shatter the Elder's heart.

To all followers serving Babbit. Support the King of Death with all your might.

Prove that you are worthy to step beyond the 50th floor.

*Currently participating in the quest as a [Temporary Follower].

+

I nodded.

"I claimed to be the heir of the Sword Emperor because I know. Right now, the Magic Tower must be treating me as a very suspicious person."

I tossed the bundle of papers down.

Before the last vote, [The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages] had told us about the history of the Magic Tower and its members.

However, there was no information about the Elder who rules the Magic Tower. No knowledge of when she was born, why she settled at the 50th floor, or why she prevents other hunters from ascending further.

The situation was the same for the hunters who resided on the 50th floor. None of them knew about the Elder of the Magic Tower. The documents provided by [Paparazzo] contained plausible speculations and inferences but no truth.

"They won't believe that the Sword Emperor has really returned. Not yet."

But there was one truth known to everyone.

That the Elder of the Magic Tower hates the Sword Emperor.

"'Not yet,' you say...?"

"Yes. Not yet."

To shake the Elder's heart, I need to use the existence of the Sword Emperor appropriately.

"I am the only one who knows certain information privy only to the Sword Emperor and the Elder. For example, hmm... Right, the words the Sword Emperor said to the Elder when he destroyed the spire."

"....."

"If I release this information, the Elder will realize immediately. Ah, this guy is truly the heir of the Sword Emperor. I must crush this guy as soon as possible."

In the past, when I was with the Constellation Killer, I used words left by the Sword Emperor. Not a single word was different. As soon as the Elder of the Magic Tower heard my words, she became enraged and attacked us.

-Zombie. Just so you know, I have a lot more things to say that will piss her off.

'How reassuring.'

-Right?

'Yes. Your character is so reassuring.'

In other words, I have several trump cards to lure the Elder.

Perhaps, in this world, only the Sword Saint and I know of these cards.

".....How do you have such information?"

The Assistant Writer looked at me suspiciously.

"Do you have a skill to read people's pasts? Or are you really the successor of the Sword Emperor?"

"That's not important. What's important is that I have the means to provoke the Elder. And right now, I need to [appropriately] agitate her."

I lightly tapped the documents.

"Appropriately? What do you mean?"

"It's not enough to just anger the Elder. The [Incarnation of Love and Lust] is very clearly demanding in the quest - overturn the Elder from her roots. Therefore, I will—"

I narrowed my eyes.

"Slowly but gently, shake the heart of the Elder."

「 Could the Sword Emperor really have returned? 」

「 No. It can't be. 」

「 The evidence is insufficient. 」

「 But, what if he really did return? 」

"We can't just instantly reveal that the Sword Emperor has returned. It's too weak. The impact is too weak. The truth, when found by oneself rather than handed down from the heavens, creates a bigger ripple in a person's heart."

"....."

"Do you understand, Ms. Writer? We need to show the Elder at the perfect place and moment that the Sword Emperor has returned. To do that..."

"We need a script."

The Assistant Writer spoke softly.

She wore the same expression as me. Eyes scheming a plot. The gleam of someone trying to pull another person in scheming to steal their heart.

The same look carried by the eyes of Hamusutra.

"What do you want from me?"

Now we're getting somewhere.

"First, spread rumors on the streets of the city."

"Heh."

"The Magic Tower has not officially recognized the return of the Sword Emperor. The Elder probably thinks, 'Some madman is impersonating the Sword Emperor to provoke us.' But if rumors of the Sword Emperor's return start circulating publicly..."

"It'll start to bother her. Even if she doesn't want it to."

The Assistant Writer's eyes sparkled.

"Good. What's next?"

---

Hey, King of Death. What's going on?

What is it, Mr. Berserker? You seem flustered.

What do you mean what is it? The Magic Tower folks are going crazy. Just yesterday, they were sitting back after issuing the extermination decree, and now they've suddenly formed a search party and are stirring up the streets!

---

"Just rumors of the Sword Emperor's return won't shake the Elder's heart. It'll just mildly annoy her. We need to go further. We must target the blind spot in the Elder's heart."

"Tell me."

The Assistant Writer rapidly moved her quill.

"I'm writing it down now. Tell me all of your strategies. I'll adjust anything that seems off."

"We'll touch on the resentment and anger accumulated by the the hunters of the 50th floor."

I enjoyed the sound of the quill scratching on paper.

"The Sword Emperor is not just a hunter, he is a symbol. The Elder blocked the 50th floor, creating a blockade, however, the Sword Emperor broke through it and moved beyond... The rumor of the Sword Emperor's return is an attack on the Elder. [We hate the current situation under the Elder's rule over the 50th floor. We're sick of it. We want someone like the Sword Emperor. We want the Sword Emperor to return and shatter these nightmarish days.]"

"Indeed. That's it... I get what you mean."

Blind spot.

The Assistant Writer's hand moved even faster.

"Like, directly telling the Elder, 'You are wrong,' with the rumors?"

"Exactly."

"Sigh."

The Assistant Writer didn't look at me. Her eyes were fixed on the words her pen was writing. Laughter seeped into the paper from the Assistant Writer.

"Alright. The return of the Sword Emperor is just a pretext. A tool to mobilize and incite the hunters dissatisfied with the Magic Tower's rule."

"Yes."

I nodded.

"And at the same time, it's a blade aimed at the Elder's heart."

Look, Elder.

I died.

I fell pathetically on the 99th floor.

But why do hunters still remember me, even though I died long ago? Why are they so enthusiastic about me?

It's simple.

I was right, and you were wrong.

"The more the city buzzes with rumors of the Sword Emperor, the higher the resentment against the Magic Tower."

Even though you're alive, you can't defeat me, who's already dead.

Even though I'm dead, reduced to a mere ghost, I am stronger than you are now.

"If the Elder thinks of the Sword Emperor as just annoying... She won't react much. If it's just a rumor she'll leave it alone, thinking it'll die down. But, if the Sword Emperor still occupies a place in the Elder's heart. If she truly loathes him to the bone, she will definitely react."

"....."

"Excessively. An overreaction, almost neurotical."

How about that?

".....How can you be so sure?"

"Hatred is like that."

Do you still want to kill me?

"The Elder will react violently. She must."

---

The Magic Tower folks have lost their minds.

They were always crazy, but this time they've gone too far.

Just for mentioning the Sword Emperor's name, they threaten to throw everyone in prison. This is madness. It's just idle talk in the taverns. Why are they reacting this strongly? Did they hit a nerve?

At this rate, even those without a clue might start believing that the Sword Emperor has really returned.

Strange, even for a rumor we started.

---

"I've learned something since coming to the 50th floor."

"What's that?"

"From this stage onwards, we have to play the game of incitement and fabrication."

[A quest has been issued by The Incarnation of Love and Lust to their followers.]

"Whether the rumor about the Sword Emperor's return is true or not doesn't matter to ordinary hunters."

[A quest has been issued by The Last Sword Left in the Wilderness to their followers.]

"They all serve the Constellations."

[A quest has been issued by The Lonely Seeker to their followers.]

"The words of the Constellations are truth, and the content written in the quest is reality. If the quest window hints at the return of the Sword Emperor, regardless of its authenticity, the hunters will act under the assumption that 'The Sword Emperor has returned.'"

[A quest has been issued by The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth to their followers.]

"Just like how I was hunted down as an evil lich."

[A quest has been issued by The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains to their followers.]

"Spread the rumors throughout the city. When the Magic Tower starts oppressing hunters aggressively, issue quests through the Constellations. And in every quest, hint at the return of the Sword Emperor."

「 Is he really the successor to the Sword Emperor? 」

「 Lately, there are rumors in the Monopolized Poisonous city that the Sword Emperor has returned. 」

「 It might be hard to remember, but in the past, when the spire was destroyed.... 」

「 Warriors! 」

「 Why is the Magic Tower oppressing you so harshly? 」

「 Perhaps he is the Sword Emperor himself. 」

"That will decide the major trend."

"....."

The Assistant Writer's quill stopped abruptly. She slowly raised her head, and our eyes met.

I pulled out a handkerchief from my pocket. The soft touch wrapped around my fingertips. A comforting sensation. The only spell that could calm my mind.

Then I said,

“Then, a coalition against the Magic Tower will be formed.”

---

Chapter 301: Grand Campaign (3)

---

-We don't know who you are. Consider it a blessing that we don't! If we knew who you were, we would've cut your arms and legs into tiny pieces using a nail clipper, smashed your eyeballs with a hammer, and then... Yeees! Your family, friends, no, even the place you were born! Your world that dumped a piece of trash like you here without even properly separating the garbage! Everything! We will shred everything! Oh! Look forward to it! I really wonder if your precious vocal cords will still sing like a nightingale even when split into 23 pieces....!!

Click.

The Assistant Writer turned off the recorder. It was a magical recorder, not a mechanical one. A magic item that perfectly captured the skill [Storing Human Voices].

"This was the official statement broadcasted over the Monopolized Poisonous city yesterday."

"The official statements I know of usually have a different vibe."

"We might consider this normal, but... King of Death. Because of you, the spiders of the Magic Tower are seriously pissed off."

"Do you regret it?"

"What?"

"I'm just asking, Ms. Writer. Do you feel that the decision to work together with me was a bit hasty?"

"What are you talking about? I'm obviously—"

The Assistant Writer dropped the recorder.

Crunch.

Her high heel stomped on the magic device.

"Obviously, I'm having the time of my life."

The Assistant Writer's twinkling eyes were smiling mischievously.

"I never understood why the Head Librarian chose a man like you as his emissary. But now I think I get it. You, with a face that looks clueless about the ways of the world, know how to play with people's hearts."

"That's harsh. I don't play around. I always live seriously."

"Ah, sure you do. That makes you even more despicable! You're the best."

I can't tell if that's an insult or a compliment.

Kwaaaa... Aaaah....

A distant explosion was heard. The vibrations traveled along the cave ceiling, causing droplets to fall from the stalactites. The cold water dripped onto our scalps. We both shook our heads like cats.

"Damn it."

"It seems the Magic Tower has sent another search party to the cave."

"Yeah, we'll be discovered here soon. Let's move quickly. It would be cliché to film a chase scene in a cave, befitting a horror flick!"

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth guides you to a safe zone.]

[The Lonely Seeker distracts the intruders.]

We fled under the protection of the Constellations. Kwaaaang... Kooong... The explosions grew more distant as we hastened our steps.

The Magic Tower has been aware that we are hiding in the underground caves for a while now. The current vibrations are caused by the tower's spiders casting magic spells in their frantic search for me.

'They must be desperately looking for me.'

'But the caves in the Monopolized Poisonous city are bizarrely vast.'

We quickly moved to our next hideout.

'Even if one entrance to the cave collapses, a new one appears the next day. It's as if this underground world is a giant monster, constantly alive and moving.'

A terrain difficult to search.

Moreover, numerous Constellations and countless disciples are aiding us.

In a head-to-head confrontation, the Magic Tower might have the upper hand, but in this game of hide-and-seek, they're at a disadvantage.

"What's the next plan? Huh?"

The Assistant Writer asked with excitement.

"Hmm."

Ever since the Grand Campaign started, the Assistant Writer has been very enthusiastic. I would outline the grand strategy, and she would adapt the rumors to the local circumstances. Fabricating, spreading, and reproducing them to steer the situation our way.

'Just like a disciple of Hamusutra.'

Is this also my responsibility?

I forced a bitter smile.

"Next, we need to meet the members of the Sword Emperor's sect."

---

We do not recognize you.

---

"The Sword Emperor's sect?"

The Assistant Writer smiled.

It wasn't a soft smile. It certainly wasn't one filled with kindness.

Humans smile even when testing others.

"A bunch of maniacs obsessed with swords. I can't even call them a sect. It's just a group of people who individually worship the Sword Emperor gathering for practice. Their daily routine is simple - breakfast, practice, lunch, practice, dinner, practice, sleep, and then practice again... What do you plan to do by meeting such lunatics?"

"We are gradually seeing the rise of an Anti-Magic Alliance."

Kooooom.

Another explosion echoed from beyond our hideout.

It seems the battle between the Magic Tower's search party and the resisting disciples had intensified.

[The Lonely Seeker requests reinforcements from other Constellations!]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust is too busy watching the campaign.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains advises handling it alone.]

[The Lonely Seeker spews indescribable curses.]

The local broadcast had also become intense.

"But it's still not enough. Even though it's alliance, it's just a coalition of Constellations who have grievances against the Magic Tower. Until now, the Constellations have continuously attacked the tower, and each time, the tower has won. Hunters who aren't part of the coalition will think, [No matter what, the Magic Tower will win again this time].

"Yeah, right."

The Assistant Writer readily agreed with my reasoning.

"Even if they don't like the Magic Tower, many Constellations still cooperate with it to some extent. No, even if an alliance is formed, not all Constellations will actively participate. They'll wait and see how things go. If the situation turns unfavorable, they'll quickly withdraw."

That's how the world works, the Assistant Writer said.

[Shiny feels sorry for not being able to help other Constellations.]

[Several Constellations remain silent.]

[The Lonely Seeker cautiously asks who that was.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust says they don't know.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains also doesn't know.]

[Some Constellations feel fear towards an unknown entity.]

"That's exactly it."

I pressed down on Shiny's hilt. The holy sword hummed. It seemed to sulk at my gesture to be quiet.

"The quest windows of the Constellations are indeed powerful. The disciples will accept the premise that the Sword Emperor has returned and join the Anti-Demon Alliance without hesitation. But... conversely, [other hunters who can't see the quest window] won't be much affected."

For more impactful incitement and fabrication, something else is needed.

A joker card.

"That's why the lunatics from the Sword Emperor's Sect need to step in."

The group that would rise faster than anyone else if the Sword Emperor really returned.

If this faction moves, even unrelated third parties will be swayed, 'Could the Sword Emperor have really returned?'

They are the Sword Emperor's Sect.

"....."

The Assistant Writer grinned.

"Of course, I can arrange a meeting. But you know this, right? The two forces most enraged by the rumor of the Sword Emperor's return on the 50th floor are the Magic Tower and the Sword Emperor's Sect. King of Death, if they find out you're behind the rumors, they'll probably tear you to pieces!"

"Haha."

I laughed.

Because I understood all too well why they would react so violently.

"How dare that nobody impersonate the Sword Emperor and deceive the people?"

"Yes, that's it."

They were people who still served the 150-year-dead Guardian Spirit.

Their faces were unknown, but probably fully armed with fervent devotion to the Sword Emperor.

Then a completely unknown kid impersonates their god... Well, it's natural they'd be angry. I understand. They want to kill me, but...

"It's okay."

That's only if I were a liar.

I smirked bitterly.

"Because I really am the successor of the Sword Emperor."

---

Let me say it again.

We do not recognize you.

We only allowed you to enter our sacred altar because acquaintances begged us just this once. Not executing you right now is our last act of mercy.

Get lost.

What do I need to do for you to acknowledge me?

We don't acknowledge anyone.

Acknowledgement isn't given, it's earned.

If you're so confident, use a sword, not words. Kid, even if you win, it doesn't mean we'll acknowledge the Sword Emperor's return!

Is that so? That's problematic.

Hmm.

What?

Hold on, wait a moment. Let me ask something to this noisy guy... Ah, yes. Hmm. I see.

You there, with the impressive beard.

Is your alias the Demon Vanquishing Spear?

Are you talking about me?

Well, the alias is as you said.

Yes. Your real name is Mihustra Pelennoban, from the Ten Thousand Sword World. Born in the same world as the Sword Emperor, but you only encountered him after ascending the Tower.

.....What nonsense are you spouting? Seems you have some worthless skill. Kid Priest, if you try to deceive the world with a clown's trickery, my spear will show you the fear of heaven...

You always followed the Sword Emperor, seeking his teachings.

.....

The Sword Emperor found you annoying. Once, he even used his movement techniques to escape from you just to see if you'd follow. But you always managed to catch up and pleaded for a single lesson.

The Sword Emperor said to you when you were alone.

With his own mouth?

.....

There.

Your alias is the Mysterious Sonic Roar. A master of sound techniques. Your real name is So Cheon-Myeong, a member of a renowned family in the Ten Thousand Sword World, but actually an illegitimate child. You lived a hard life outside from an early age.

.....

You were deeply captivated by the Sword Emperor. The person who ascended the martial realm without any help from his prestigious family.

You begged to ascend the Tower with the Sword Emperor, but he found it bothersome and refused and you couldn't accept it.

Every night, you went to where the Sword Emperor stayed and imitated a cat's cry to the top of your voice. When the Sword Emperor came out in a rage, you ran away, and as soon as he tried to sleep, you sneaked back in and started the cat cries again.

Then one winter, when you were pretending to sleep, the Sword Emperor caught you and beat you up badly.

.....

The Sword Emperor said.

Kid. Do you know why I'm hitting you?

Because I'm weak but shamelessly sought your teachings?

No, it's not that.

Because I disturbed your sleep? That's not it either.

It's simply because you imitated a cat's cry.

I hate cats.

Very much.

So now, you're going to be hit a lot.

.....

Hmm.

The atmosphere is tense.

If I've touched on some unpleasant memories, I apologize.
I'm just trying to earn your recognition. No matter how much you deny it or find it hard to believe, I truly came here to carry on the will of the Sword Emperor.

I know the alias of the person sitting there, staring blankly. It's Unfettered Floral Bow. I know your name, origin, the time you spent and the conversations you had with the Sword Emperor. I know all about everyone here.

Everything the Sword Emperor knew, I know.

.....

Ah. Of course, even saying this might be hard for you to accept.

If talking were enough, you wouldn't have joined a crazy group like the Sword Emperor's Sect.

Come at me.

I'll face each of you one at a time.

.....

.....

You...

What are you?

My alias is the King of Death.

I am the successor who received Aura from the greatest of all time in the Ten Thousand Sword World, the heir who inherited the sword from the supreme being of a certain snowfield, and one day, I will step even further than the Constellation you worship.

So, please, grant me a lesson.

Seniors.

---

"The disciples of the Sword Emperor's Sect have repelled the Magic Tower's tracking team."

The Assistant Writer walked on.

"And right in the middle of the street, regular hunters are quite agitated. The disciples of the Sword Emperor's Sect are known for not interfering with outside affairs, but this time, they've clearly opposed the Magic Tower."

We were climbing through a cave passage. The passage had stairs, gradually increasing our altitude. The underground pressure and earthy texture flowed down my thighs and calves.

"The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains, the Lonely Seeker, they're all rallying their disciples. The Incarnation of Love and Lust... may not be much help in battle, but might unexpectedly provide help in terms of connections. Well, you know."

Thud.

"We're on the verge of completing the Anti-Magic Alliance."

Light shone at my feet.

Not from the torches in the cave or the magical light summoned by the Assistant Writer, but from a weak ray of sunlight streaming from the gloomy sky above.

"Congratulations, King of Death."

Ten days.

After hiding in the underground caves, I looked up at the sky for the first time in a while.

"In a hundred and fifty years, we've acquired the sharpest blade of rebellion for the first time."

The sky of the 50th floor was dotted with spires.

The towers, painted jet black as if mocking the brilliant sky, had no windows, refusing to let anyone in or out.

Above all, the five towers looked like fingers, as if trying to grasp and pull down the sky.

Who do they resemble?

"Good."

I smiled, looking at the Magic Tower.

"Let's see if we can bring down the Elder."

Chapter 302: The Grey Spider (1)

---

It feels like I've never felt a refreshing breeze in my life.

The scent of maple leaves was intense in autumn, because there was no other scent at all. Spring was fresh. In summer, it smelled of fish, making every scent revolting.

The 'Grey Spider' wished to die every autumn.

-The Witch Clan.

Who came up with such a name?

Witch (魔女) (Manyeo) didn't simply refer to a mage who practiced magic. In Niglus-Kukulu, the language of this world, the word 'Ma (魔)' was laden with nuances of all sorts of hatred and contempt. [Forsaken], [Sacrilegious], [The 23rd], [Cursed].

‘Ye (女)’ didn’t just signify a gender. To begin with, there were more than four genders. The binary concept of male and female didn’t apply.

Mirgal, a word which approximately translates to [Grey]. The 3 primary colors, Red, Green and Blue, dominated the world, while [Grey] needed seeds from other genders to produce offspring.

[The Cursed Grey Race].

The Witch Clan.

The season the ‘Grey Spider’ was born in was autumn.

-Poor thing.

Perhaps the mother didn’t know what she was saying.

-Why be born into such a world...

The mother failed to recognize the true value of her newborn child. The child was born with a natural blessing which made her remember 'everything seen and heard.' The child had already heard and felt a lot while in the womb.

The mother gave birth to a genius but didn't realize it.

-Poor thing...

A handful of moisture.

A bit of blood.

Eyes looking down and a hand caressing the forehead. Sympathy masquerading as love, resignation mimicking comfort, death disguised as life. That was the smell, the smell of a mother.

The smell of autumn.

-Why be born in such a place...

The Grey Spider grew to hate the world.

---

-I have no particular feelings towards the Elder.

The Guardian Spirit said.

-For me, feelings are actions, Zombie. It's just that they often don't show on the surface, but that's also an act. Maybe feelings just happen as they come? Those who live as life goes on might think so. But not me.

The guardian Spirit crossed his arms.

-I decided not to care about the Elder. If she had invited me to climb the tower together, maybe she would have followed me. We might have even become friends. But I chose not to. Not just the Elder! I didn't make a single companion.

I asked why.

-Because countless people in this world don't even get a chance to make companions.

Guardian Spirit looked up at the Magic Tower.

-Only lucky people are able to have friends. Even lovers are obtained by coincidence, Kim Zombie. The fact that you've made so many companions, made friends, served a master, and met a loved one, it's all thanks to luck. Even though it's a treasure you earned through effort, the mere fact that such people were born is a miracle.

Thud.

We stepped off the last stair and exited the cave.

-Never assume that everyone is granted such luck.

I followed Guardian Spirit's gaze up to the spires.

-Life with no one by your side exists. Some never experience luck until death. Many lives are betrayed when they hold hope. Such people eventually give up and despair. They no longer see a reason to struggle or aim higher than where they are now.

The Magic Tower truly deserved the prefix Ma.

Buildings are bases for living. They have doors and windows to go out into the world and peek outside.

But the Magic Tower has no doors. It's dyed black from the top to the bottom. A black that doesn't reflect the sun, but a black that swallows even sunlight.

Thus, the Magic Tower resembles a body, not a building. It is a will to reject the world, not an extension of it. The finger-like towers seem to rise from the ground, reaching for the sky.

-That's what I wanted to show them.

I glared at the finger-like towers.

-It's okay not to have companions.

I counted the seconds in my mind.

-It's okay not to find love worth dedicating your life to.

23 seconds, 22, 21...

-It's fine even if fate doesn't grant you luck.

18 seconds.

-Still, you can ascend.

15 seconds.

-Look! I am the Sword Emperor. I reached the zenith of this world alone. Why did I ascend? Not for the person in front of me. Not for those who lived in my era. They can all go to hell!

5 seconds.

-For those without anything. For those with no one. I ascended the tower to show you, to [prove] to you! Even though no one gave you meaning.

1 second.

-You have already become meaningful to me.

Beeeeep.

A buzzing noise erupted in my mind. Someone was trying to send a telepathy message. It was the Magic Tower.

Merely gazing at the tower for more than 23 seconds was enough to trigger a response. It's a system. A warning not to look at us, observe us, or even think about crossing us. In a timeline devoured by regression, I had exploited this unwritten rule.

「 Ah, ah. Mic test. Mic test. Who's looking over there? 」

As expected, the Magic Tower's spokesperson sent a message through telepathy.

「 Talk nicely before I gouge out your eyes. We're really stressed these days. We don't have time to play with psychos. I mean, of course, I love catching those crazy bastards and torturing them, but we're too busy for that now... Huh? What? 」

The drowsy voice suddenly sharpened.

「 You're with the Assistant Writer, aren't you? Hey, shit. You damned fugitive! 」 Beeep!

The telepathy wave intensified. Just as the spokesperson said, the Assistant Writer was beside me.

Looking up at the Magic Tower. I wasn't the only one who violated the 23-second taboo. The Assistant Writer had also gazed at the tower since exiting the cave.

「 You, there. You are dead! How dare you show your face so shamelessly? And being with that writer... You're the King of Death or whatever? Look at these bastards. Hey! Frickin' lackeys! Go report to the spiders immediately! 」

Also,

It wasn't just the two of us.

「 .....? 」

Beeeeeep!

「...Oh, look at that? It's not just one madman!」

The telepathy wave fluctuated again. The spokesperson initially targeted me, then the Assistant Writer, and then someone else, sending simultaneous telepathies.

「Fine. You all have gone mad, haven't you? Good. Ha, this is fun! We've already prepared a punitive force for you!」

Beeeeeeep.

「We've called the colonial garrison from the other towers too! Ha ha! Heard of the 'Baron of Bone Thorns'? We just called them from headquarters after 300 years, all fired up! You'll learn how many tiny blood vessels are in your body...」

Beeeeeeep.

Beeep! Beeeeeeep.

「...I'll show you! What the hell? Really, what is this? Hey! Hey! You're really asking for it... Uh, no. Here's some good news. In the last few days, our proud elite forces have been gathering! It's been centuries since such a large force assembled! Ah ha ha! Great! Look! The Fallen are ready to deploy----.」

Beeeeeeeeep!

Beeeeep! Beep, Beep!

「...」

Beep, Beeeeep! Beeeeep! Beep!

「.....」

Dozens.

"Uh..."

Hundreds.

"Now,"

Thousands.

"Summon the Elder! Right now!!"

All of us, united in the Anti-Magic Alliance.

The refugees who walked out of the cave through dozens of entrances, the hunters silently holding their drink at the open-air bar, the followers who were bargaining with mat merchants on the streets as usual.

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust declares war on the Magic Tower.]

[The Last Sword in the Wilderness declares war on the Magic Tower.]

[The Lonely Seeker declares war on the Magic Tower.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth declare war on the Magic Tower.]

[The Bell that Rings for the Dead declares war on the Magic Tower.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains declares war on the Magic Tower.]

I raised the Sword of Rebellion.

The power that didn't even permit a gaze.

The Magic Tower, a den of evil, set up an eternal prison on the fiftieth floor.

Our declaration of war started by just looking at it.

-So, I have no regrets.

The Guardian Spirit smiled.

-I lived as I wanted. I showed the unfortunate and unlucky ones who are going to be born endlessly in the future. Ascend! Right now, you have no one by your side. But that's just a coincidence. Tell coincidence to go to hell, raise your middle finger, and ascend like me. Higher. Higher! Even higher!

The spokesperson no longer spoke to me.

Only sounds of confusion and panic could be heard.

-If you're concerned about the people I didn't look after in my past life.

And...

-Look after them, Kim Gong-Ja.

Sccccrrrrreeeeech!

It was a wail, a noise that refused to become sound, a scream. As metal grated on metal, all five spires vibrated in unison, and five fingers raised their nails to tear through the dark sky.

It felt like my body was being torn apart.

"It's the [Lament of the Tower]."

The Assistant Writer murmured.

It's been hundreds of years, she swallowed her words.

"...When one tower cries, it's a [Mockery]. A warning that requires a force enough to subjugate a city. When two towers cry, it's a [Kick]. It's the power to conquer a stage. The cry of three towers is used to subjugate another world. When four towers cry, it signifies the intent to subdue multiple worlds."

"All five towers are crying now."

"Yes."

The Assistant Writer nodded.

"[Regardless of who you are, die. We will annihilate you]."

Shadows spread over the five towers.

It seemed like someone threw a stone into the sky. Ripples spread across the gloomy sky. But those ripples were so black that they swallowed the clouds of the fiftieth floor and the few rays of sunlight that leaked through them.

"Good."

From the inverted shadows, one by one, things fell.

-A time of yearning for war also exists.

A black meteor shower.

-The hungry brats are crying, but our Magic Tower isn't so generous to just let it go. Cry. If you want to cry, cry. Do as you please.

Each falling meteor was a figure. Mages, witches, beings called spiders, all cloaked in black, were pouring down.

I realized that the shadow covering the sky was a giant summoning circle.

The Magic Tower too, sensing the coming storm, had prepared for summoning in advance.

"Today might be a day that comes only once in a thousand years for you."

Boom!

Witches holding meteors crashed into the city center. Boom! The open-air bar was destroyed. Shabby houses crumbled. Boom! Boom! Countless meteor showers devastated the streets. Screams echoed.

Dust billowed throughout the city.

"But for us, it's just another day added to a thousand years."

Thud.

From beyond the dust cloud, black spiders emerged.

Some held a severed head in their left hand. Others played with a severed arm as if it were a basketball, smiling slyly. Beyond the dust cloud where the spiders emerged, there were no screams or groans.

It was the noise of buildings collapsing.

"The King of Death?"

The spiders murmured.

"Is our prey's name really the King of Death? The Tower lacks sense."

"It always has."

"It always will."

The spiders were far apart from each other.

Someone destroyed the city's western gate. Someone else destroyed the northern bar. Another went to the central square's statue. The ones farthest apart were literally on opposite ends of the city.

Yet, they conversed as if they were huddled together.

"Maybe it's a less impressive title. The translation could have gone wrong. Maybe it's something more plausible like the Reaper of the Underworld or the Priest Comforting Ghosts, who knows?"

"Those are probably just worse names which we got wrong."

"Thanks. I'm happy to see you after 90 years. It's a relief that your annoying nature hasn't changed in those years."

"I'm famously known for calming the hearts of those around me."

"I hate to admit it, but let me tell you. Comrades, I missed your bullshit!"

"You're actually a bitch, that's why."

"Now I feel like I'm home."

They casually exchanged telepathies as if it were natural.

Distance didn't matter. A city's gap was meaningless.

Their auras traversed the city, heading somewhere. The spider that received it shot the aura to another comrade. In my senses, the aura of thousands of spiders exchanging was clear.

If one were to look down from the sky. It would look like.

"A spider's web."

The moment I casually uttered those words.

The spider web covering the city stopped.

I felt gazes.

Multiple gazes.

-----You're the King of Death?-----

Simultaneously. Thousands of tongues whispered.

Someone's lips moved. Aura flowed. It was, so to speak, the violence of numbers. It wasn't particularly malicious or cursed. Just the fact that thousands of spiders spoke at once, for a moment, my head swayed.

'That's right.'

Blood rushed to my head.

'These are the beings the Sword Emperor faced.'

My heart pounded.

'The rulers of the city.'

I gripped the hilt of my sword. Shiny, no, [Goddess of Protection] Hwiya vibrated. Whether a butterfly plunging into a spider's web is considered suicide or not is determined only by the butterfly's flapping wings.

"I've chosen the right person."

I smiled.

"I am the King of Death, the successor to the Sword Emperor."

In that instant, thousands of spiders swarmed me.

---

Chapter 303: The Grey Spider (2)

---

Blood splattered.

-Keugh, huck!

The Grey Spider looked down at the body indifferently. Glancing around, she spotted someone tender, trembling like an aspen.

Isn't that an amusing sight?

The Grey Spider smiled.

-Are you scared?

-Hic, ah... hiiik...

-Why are you scared?

The Grey Spider waved her hand, and instantly, the person was dragged right up to her nose as if caught by an invisible hand.

-Hi, eeeek!

-Are you a god? A god shouldn't tremble. Shaking like that, you look more like a human. Your devoted followers would be disappointed to see you like this.

Ah.

The Grey Spider tilted her head slightly to the left as if just remembering something.

-They won't be disappointed, since they're all dead.

-S-Spare me! Please spare me! Spare me!

-Yeah. I like that phrase. There's something about it that never gets old. When people are about to die and they beg for their life, that's the moment. You're probably hanging onto every word I say right now, right? Wondering if I'll spare you or kill you.

This time, the Grey Spider tilted her head to the right.

-You should've done that earlier.

Blood splattered again.

-Aaaaaaah!!

-Hey. I heard from your companion. There's a separate world where you gods live, right? We call it the Divine Realm. I'd love to visit, but I don't know the way. Can you secretly tell me how to get there?

-Ah, uh, ugh...! Ahhh, save me, save me...!

-You're quite a crybaby.

The Grey Spider tapped the tip of the nose of the person she was holding in her hand.

-Tell me now.

-..... .., .....

-Come on.

-Stage... s-stage... [Transfer]...

The world was enveloped in a bright white light.

The Grey Spider watched the light, winding around like tentacles, and chuckled.

-So, this is how it is?

That day, a world's tower was set ablaze.

The massacre was easy. The [Divine Clan] had entrusted the attack to a few warriors. Except for a few enemies, they could not use aura, nor were they adept in magic.

The Grey Spider was frankly disappointed. It was boring. Exterminating the five clans under [Divine Clan]'s control would have been more challenging.

-It's unprecedented, a subjugated clan rebelling and destroying the ruling clan.

Hop.

Footsteps were heard from behind. Turning around, she saw a platinum-haired child with hands clasped behind, looking at her intently.

-Who are you?

-I'm the Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages. Just Princess is fine.

-I didn't ask for your name.

-Hmm. I'm like a guide to those kids.

The Princess pointed a finger down the mountain. The city was on fire, an inferno blazed through it. Magic-made clay walls encircled the outskirts of the city, and all life was being scorched inside it.

-But they're all either dead or even worse off. Well, it can't be helped, I guess.

The Princess smiled faintly.

-Congratulations! From now on, you are the ruler of this tower!

-.....

-It's an unexpected situation, but not against the rules. Certainly not a breach. Your Witch Clan was rightfully part of the 40th floor, and now, being the only survivors, you have the right to ascend to the 50th floor.

The Grey Spider remained silent.

The silence was not out of confusion. She was just processing the overwhelming influx of information. Combining what she had learned while massacring the [Divine Clan] and what the Princess had just said, the Grey Spider easily came to a conclusion.

-Hmm.

But there was one puzzle she couldn't solve alone.

-Are there other clans like us under servitude?

-That is correct.

-So, those who ascend the stage, do they all go to the 50th floor like this? Making themselves gods and using lesser clans?

-Not necessarily, but they all do.

-So every human who arrives at the 50th floor is treated as a god?

-Yes. At least until now.

Indeed.

A smile formed on her lips.

-Thank you.

-Why?

The Grey Spider responded.

-You've just given me a reason to not die.

---

It was clear from the moment our eyes met that we were formidable foes.

"Everyone. Even if we're working together for the first time in decades, surely we haven't lost our edge to the point of not being able to catch a mere newbie who just ascended to the 50th floor?"

"I'm too old to fight on instinct. Let's communicate our strategies through telepathy."

"Sorry, but that won't work."

As the spiders charged forward, they exchanged words. All were accelerating in a time stream, enhanced by aura. Before a cloak could flutter once, they had exchanged numerous sentences, listened, and rebutted.

"Why not?"

"That guy, the King of Death, is listening to our conversation."

I could sense tens of spiders in the north of the city simultaneously casting magic. In the east, a group jumped over the city walls, probably using invisibility magic before circling around to ambush me from behind.

"Really? He's not just some rookie then. I've upped my speed."

"Increase it more. He's still tracking us with his eyes."

"Increase it more?"

"More."

"Stop."

"How is it now? If we compress the telepathy further, some of us won't be able to hear."

"No use. He's still [listening] to us."

One of the spiders coldly muttered.

Seems like that spider had temporarily taken command. It was not exactly a commander, but definitely serving as a control tower.

"Moreover, he's at ease. His stream of time is faster than ours."

"What, no way! Impossible!"

"He's not moving at all. He's just standing there. Isn't he just pretending to listen?"

"It's not that. He's not just standing still..."

Found it.

".....! Transfer the command to [Baron of Bone Thorns]!"

At the instant the control tower transferred the command, I discarded a piece of my memory, sharpened my aura, and shot towards the location of the control tower's voice.

Kwaaaang!

The very moment the control tower called for the transfer, the balcony of the shabby 3-story apartment building where she was hiding was sliced open.

"-----"

The pause in the spiders' breath was distinctly felt for a moment.

"Attention. I am the [Baron of Bone Thorns]."

A dry voice murmured. It was a different individual from the one who had just served as the control tower. The tone of the murmur carried an effort to suppress the rage towards me.

"From now on, I will exercise command. I won't allow telepathy for spiders below the rank of viscount."

".....Damn it. Crazy."

"Agreed."

"Serena just got taken down in one hit!?"

"She's not dead. Not sure if that's good news, though."

".....!?"

The initial control tower had passed command to a spider farthest from me. Probably thinking that would buy more time.

But that's exactly why I could read the move.

Immediately after downing the control tower, I focused on the north side of the city. Of course, a dry voice near me pretended to be the commander, saying things like 'no telepathy allowed' or 'prepare for bombardment.'

It was a fake.

The dry voice wasn't the [Baron of Bone Thorns]; even if it was, it wasn't the commander.

The real commander was the one who had been briefly giving orders like [Agree], [Phase], [Ready].

A clever fake. They must have agreed on this before the battle.

But I wasn't fooled.

"Warning!"

I shrugged my shoulders.

And swung.

The loaded strike shot out. It was stronger this time. The sword strike sliced the sky, cleanly cutting through the northern wall. It struck a terse spider hiding behind it. Just before being incapacitated, she screamed a warning to her comrades.

"Target, Constellation Killer level! Warning! Target----"

And the sound was cut off.

"....."

"....."

The web of spiders fell silent.

Crunch.

Someone ground their teeth. Tsk, a tongue click sounded, and ptooeey, the sound of spit echoed. However, not a single word was spoken.

Not a single word.

"You made a good choice."

Even so, the exchange of blows continued.

"Having a commander is just asking to be sniped. It's better for each one to attack me separately. Hmm. It diminishes the significance of gathering thousands, but it's better."

"However, saying I'm Constellation Killer level is a mistake."

A bombardment of magic from the north hit me. Bang! Kwaang! I carefully dodged the falling blue magic cannons.

"I'm stronger than him."

The flanking force from the outskirts hit my back.

There were 24 in total. Specializing in assassination, they wore masks covering the lower half of their faces. They swung their swords simultaneously. A nearly perfect formation, though not quite a battle array.

"Too bad."

I respectfully moved the holy sword.

"If it was me before reaching the 40th floor, I would have died from this."

Demonic Heavenly God Art.

The First Form.

Sword of Starving Death.

The surroundings erupted into chaos instantaneously. Shadowy tendrils, like wraiths, sprung from my shadow. They seized the spiders' wrists, ankles, and necks, hurling them to the ground. "Keugh!" "Huk!" The spiders' breaths were stifled.

"I've heard a lot about you."

The tendrils of shadow did not stop there. Hundreds of gestures spread in all directions. They climbed the outer walls of buildings and seeped through the cracks of windows. "Ah," "Keup!?" "That's impossible..." Spiders that had been lying in ambush inside the buildings fell.

"Witch Clan."

Flames engulfed the surroundings.

"Regardless of the world, the common stage to ascend to the 50th floor involves becoming a god and ruling one's own race. You were originally a subjugated race in the 40th-floor world... essentially, a race guided by hunters."

"You're wrong!"

A spider within the range of my Demonic Heavenly God Art shouted. A formidable opponent, she had repelled the shadowy hands five times.

“We misjudged! It’s not that the King of Death pulled in the constellations to beat us! It’s the other way around, damn it! We worry about each other, which limits our attack range...!”

“But the hunters who ruled you made a mistake.”

Thump.

The fifth exchange of blows did not continue into a sixth. A hand struck the back of her neck. The spider fainted, succumbing to a deep sleep from the pressure point strike.

“Damn it! Is this silence meaningful?!”

“They marked you, the Witch Clan, as the scapegoats. They nurtured the five clans with care. However, the Witch Clan was made to be despised by all, taking on the anger and condemnation meant for the gods.”

“That’s right! Staying silent just means being attacked!”

“Push forward with numbers!”

“That might have been a good strategy. But they didn’t consider the possibility that you would become so strong, annihilating the five clans and even the revered hunter gods.”

“He’s a monster...”

“Bombardment! Bombardment first, then attack!”

“Fallen Ones!”

The web of spiders quivered. They uttered a word, and I muttered five in response. We were both in an accelerated time stream, but between us flowed an insurmountable torrent.

“Erase that crazy bastard completely!”

What followed was as such.

The Fallen Ones were literally those falling from the sky. Wrapped in special magic, they plummeted from the high skies. Whether it was a suicidal attack, I couldn't tell.

Not knowing, I decided to act first.

“What----”

I leaped from the ground, shooting into the sky. I met eyes with the spiders who were just beginning their fall. We were so close, the trembling of their eyebrows was visible. I touched the forehead of the first falling spider, causing her to faint.

Demonic Heavenly God Art.

The Third Form.

Sword of Submerged Death.

Seven in total. I engulfed the Fallen Ones' squad in a torrent of aura. The leader, seeing her comrades fall, hesitated for a second, committing a fatal mistake. The Fallen Ones lost consciousness and tumbled endlessly.

“One must always consider all the possibilities.”

I landed first, then caught each of the Fallen Ones as they descended, gently placing them on the ground. They groaned in their unconscious state, tormented by nightmares.

“Someone you think nothing of, can in fact, be stronger than you.”

I dusted off my hands.

“Right, everyone?”

“You all make the same mistakes. That’s how it is – making mistakes, learning from each other, fixing shortcomings if possible. That’s what life should be. I believe we can surely help each other.”

Around me, hundreds of flames flickered.

Tendrils formed by aura writhed around.

“.....King of Death.....”

Someone seemed to mutter.

“No, the Great Demon King...”

Hmm.

I gave an awkward smile.

"That's just propaganda and distortion, you know?"

---

Chapter 304: The Grey Spider (3)

---

The spiders froze at the sight of my smile.

"....."

"....."

I have met many individuals with long life spans throughout my time.

It is possible to overcome the limits of life inside the tower.

There are humans who have survived over a hundred years and constellations like Hamusutra who have wandered for tens of thousands of years. I realized one thing after meeting them.

Fear is constant.

“This is troublesome.”

I smiled broadly.

My feet were quicker than my words.

I dashed out, and in the next moment, a spider hiding in the rubble let out a short scream, “Heek.” We locked eyes at close range. She was a freckled member of the Witch Clan. I pressed her pressure points whilst I gave her a reassuring smile.

“Ah...”

“No matter how eternal it feels, a thousand years is hardly eternity.”

I hummed.

What was the meaning?

Nothing.

“A peony fades in ten days. A thousand years is all it took for the fall of the Tower’s autumn.”

The spiders scattered across the city were listening to my every word.

Desperately trying to find meaning in them.

That’s enough. If it creates even a little confusion, I’m willing to feign leisure and spout these cryptic phrases.

“Ah. I should have worn a black robe. It’s a historic moment where a thousand-year-old demon overthrows a thousand-year-old tower, and I didn’t pay attention to fashion. Well, it’s a minor detail. My master would surely laugh heartily.”

“Retreat!”

A commanding spider shouted as if spewing blood.

“Retreat! Retreat! 33rd Battalion, even for a moment, stop that monster!”

“Retreat, but where to...”

“Regroup at headquarters! There’s no answer here! The elders must step in!”

Objectively, the tower still had the upper hand in power.

Since the battle began, I’ve taken down just over a hundred enemies.

But I targeted the commanding figures, disrupting their leadership. The spiders, relying entirely on telepathy for communication, lost their means to oppose me once their wide-area network—the 'web'—was torn apart.

[The constellations’ quest progresses.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains orders the followers to advance!]

It signaled a divide and conquer strategy.

[Quest progress. The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth reveals the enemy's escape routes.]

[Quest progress. The Bell That Rouses the Dead posts the identities of those who perished in past rebellions throughout the city.]

[Quest progress. The Incarnation of Love and Lust exposes the identities of spiders of count level and above.]

As soon as it was clear that the campaign was advancing, the constellations promptly provided 'adequate rewards' and 'appropriate motivation' to their followers.

The reason they hadn't urged their followers before wasn't due to a lack of will to resist the tower.

In the end, it's the humans walking on the ground, not the stars in the sky, who clear the quests. The constellations respond as their followers advance.

"Hahaha! This is exhilarating!"

A hunter who had joined the rebellion in the underground cave roared.

“Return my constellation! You bastards!”

“...The King of Death and the Sword Emperor boasted so much, but to think it would really come to this. Honestly, I was skeptical... But yes, this might indeed be our last chance. Everyone, as an apostle of Babbit, I command you. Even if fighting isn't your forte, rise up in desperation.”

“Splendid.”

The balance of power between the two forces had been reversed.

The web, like a barrier over the monopolized city, was disassembled piece by piece.

Apostles of numerous constellations whose voices were suppressed for ages, seized control of the city. The north, the west, the south, and the east. In open pubs and lined-up taverns, blue, red, yellow, and white auras rippled like waves. These ripples overlapped, shaking the city's sky.

“Hiding underground and whispering in each other's ears ends today.”

Whoosh! Something resembling a rocket shot into the sky.

It was a strike packed with condensed aura. It wasn't a sniper shot like mine which aimed for commanders. In fact, it targeted no one in particular. The rocket headed for 'the sky'.

And it split the lower edge of the dark clouds.

Weak. A weak strike. Embarrassingly so, compared to the Sword Emperor's strike. But a sword's value is always determined by what it cuts, not by the hand that wields it. In that sense, the rocket launched by the apostle of The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains was indeed precious.

“Let's go, cavaliers.”

Light leaked through the split clouds.

“Follow the King of Death, the Sword Emperor's successor.”

The city erupted in cheers.

“Damn it, you vermin!”

A spider raged.

“We retreated because of that guy, not because we were afraid of you insects! Where do you bugs get off talking like that? Just wait, I’ll show you...”

Ah. There.

I launched a sword strike.

“What!?”

The spider's voice jumped in surprise. Along with the sound of the building collapsing, the spider's frantic bouncing could be heard.

“Hey, you without any decency! Why do you attack while someone is talking, huh? My squad just got wiped out because of that! Unbelievable. Seriously, are you really the Sword Emperor's successor? Eh? You've been smiling stupidly! Your face reeks of bad luck, just like the Sword Emperor, ah, damn!"

I struck once more.

"Shit!!"

With that scream, the voice ceased.

The commander, who thought he wouldn't be targeted just for transmitting telepathy, was gone. The brave soul who held onto command despite knowing his fate was also gone. And the lunatic who, even though aware of his impending doom, wanted to curse till the end, had just made his exit.

Only one role remained.

"—Right. This feels familiar."

Someone with the strength to be complacent, holding an irreplaceable baton, and not forgetting to curse until the end.

“It’s a familiar shittiness. A different face, but this level of bad luck reminds me of ‘that guy’. Shockingly similar. It’s a different direction, but the bad luck is just as strong.”

Without hesitation, I attacked in the direction of the voice. And then, boom! For the first time today, my attack was neutralized in mid-air.

“May I ask...”

In the distance, through the clouds torn by the rocket.

Her finger was pointed amidst a ray of sunlight.

“Where did you learn such a shitty attitude?”

Behind the finger.

An expressionless face gazed down from the shadows.

Her hat's brim was so long and wide that not a single ray of sunlight could penetrate through.

“If there’s a specialized hospital for removing shitty attitudes, please let me know. From my point of view, that’s the root of all evil. If cockroaches keep crawling out no matter how much you stomp, there must be some academy breeding them somewhere.”

The Elder of the Witch Clan, Niglus-Kukulu, the Liberator.

The annihilator of five clans. The forsaken owner of grey. The slayer of gods. The witch who nailed six constellations. The greatest landholder. The master of all spiders. A hunter with countless aliases, revered even by the constellations, alongside the already deceased Sword Emperor and the virtually dead Constellation Killer.

"....."

I smiled.

No matter how many aliases she carried, it didn't matter. I had already decided what to call her after hearing the old stories from Guardian Spirit.

“Pleased to meet you, 'Grey Spider'.”

I called her as planned.

“I am known as the King of Death.”

"....."

Ha, a short scoff escaped her.

“The King of Death? More like the boss of the underworld. You should fall into hell and play king there, kid. Why crawl out here and cause chaos?”

“Ah. It already feels like hell being alive, so there’s no need to go to the underworld.”

“It seems you're not the kind to be silenced with a word.”

“If I’m a brat, does that make the Grey Spider an elder brat?”

"What..... What?"

The Elder seemed momentarily at a loss for words.

I shook my holy sword and smiled.

“I’m kidding, I’m kidding. It’s just a joke to lighten the tense atmosphere.”

"....."

The Elder twitched her lips, then looked down on me with disdain, followed by a realization. Quite a variety of expressions could be seen. She placed one hand on her forehead while holding a staff in the other.

“A true lunatic. Damn...”

Why does everyone I meet seem to realize that 'lunatic' is the most fitting word to describe me in the vast universe? It’s quite a mystery. A mystery indeed.

“Please understand.”

I shrugged.

“I am the Emissary of the Sword Emperor. I’m just acting crazy as method acting. Normally, I’m not like this.”

“You’re definitely not his successor.”

Hmm?

“I’ve seen your swordsmanship. Your aura control is skillful. But you’re different from that Sword Emperor bastard. There’s venom in you. Yes, you harbor poison in your heart.”

While speaking to me, the Elder’s gaze wandered around.

‘Aha.’

Of course.

Right now, the constellations are encouraging their followers with quests. But these quests are based on the premise that I am the [Successor of the Sword Emperor]. If it turns out that I have nothing to do with the Sword Emperor, starting with [The Incarnation of Love and Lust], the quests will have to be halted immediately.

That's why the Elder is speaking loud enough for everyone to hear.

‘Smart.’

A pinpoint attack.

The Elder clicked her tongue.

“Swordsmen, do they call it orthodox and unorthodox? Even I, uninterested, can see. King of Death, you naive child. You're walking the path of unorthodoxy. The intent in your sword is completely opposite to his. How could you be his successor? Yeah, right.”

The silence of the followers was palpable. They either halted or continued fighting, all while listening to the exchange between the Elder and me.

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust looks troubled.]

The constellations, too.

“The Sword Emperor is dead.”

A giggling laughter adorned the sky. The Elder's laughter caused the tail of her broomstick to slightly shake, mocking the restlessness of the constellations.

“Even if he left a secret technique and trained a successor, purely assumption of course. Maybe there's a disciple of his somewhere! However, King of Death, you are not his disciple.”

Let's wait a bit more.

“The Sword Emperor's will is carried on by you? What was his will? To rebel against our Tower? Ha. If that's the case, thousands of you would be his successors!”

"....."

Just a little longer.

“Vermin. Constellations are always like that. Ah, there’s never a decent one among those self-proclaimed gods. Even though they know it’s not true. Even though they clearly know it won’t work, they still try to advance the campaign, bringing in some kid and making a fuss about the Sword Emperor’s return...”

“Hey.”

Yes.

“You losers.”

Now’s the time.

“Sometimes you need to get some air. Staying cooped up all day like you guys isn’t good for you.”

There was hesitation.

“Here, consider this a favor! I’ll give you a free remodelling today!”

"....."

"I'd usually laugh [Haha] at this point. But even as a master of method acting, I can't laugh like that. There's a certain dignity humans should maintain, right?"

The gaze.

I could feel her looking at me. When eyes truly meet, and only the exploration of each other matters, time seems to stop. Everything else becomes insignificant.

Until a moment ago, the Elder was fully focused on bringing us down. Speeches, provocations and schemes. She was ready to relentlessly attack our weakest points, buying time for the retreating spiders, making followers doubt the constellations, and ultimately winning the war.

All that became insignificant.

"Hey."

Among the countless names she possessed.

I chose the nickname only the Sword Emperor had used.

“Grey.”

"....."

“Are you still living like that?”

Showing the Sword Emperor’s expression, tone, and smile.

“Why don’t you ever change, whether it’s a hundred years or a thousand?”

“I think that’s also a disease. A disease. You’re basically challenging the world. You think you’re losing to the world if you change? I’ll call this disease the ‘Grey Disease’ from now on. Consider it an honor.”

“You.”

You, the Elder said.

“You—”

“Haha.”

"....."

“Or so I would say.”

I smiled.

“I’m just kidding. It’s a joke.”

"....."

“How about it? Was it a bit funny this time?”

And then, I saw.

The clouds swirled over the city due to the immense flow of magical power. The spiders retreated to the spires, flinching to look back, gazing up at the sky. The sight of five spires vibrated, causing an earthquake throughout the city.

I saw many things, but.

“Okay.”

They were insignificant.

“I wanted to see that look in your eyes.”

The moment I raised my holy sword.

The magic storm in the sky engulfed me as well.

---

Chapter 305: Reunion (1)

---

Throughout my life, I've never really felt a cool breeze.

-Hey.

But a hot wind? I experienced it once.

-I've heard your name often.

The heatwave suddenly blew from behind.

-Are you the Grey Spider?

-.....

-It's hard to pronounce. Let's just call you Grey. How about it, Grey? It sounds friendly. But why is it so stuffy here? No windows? What about ventilation? Is this even a place for humans to live?

The Grey Spider sighed and turned around.

The man was red and hot.

Though it was autumn and everything was turning red, this man's hair resembled the sun more than the autumn leaves. His eyes, the slight upward curve of his lips, his shining white teeth. Everything about him flickered like summer.

He wore a sleeveless uniform with the word 'Sword' boldly written on it.

When sight magic was used to check the back, there was 'Emperor' written on the back of the uniform.

-A true lunatic, damn.

The summer-like hot man must have his brain fried from the heat.

Above all, his sweat was hot.

Not the stale kind, but fresh sweat from exercising.

He always trained relentlessly. As the rumors said, his blood vessels and ki paths were always bustling with aura, leaving no room for waste to accumulate. His sweat was probably clearer than a newborn's.

Like dew on a ripe apple.

From his sweat, only the temperature was felt. The heatwaves could be seen. His muscles glistened in the sun. His sweat resembled hot dew. If the sun had a face, it would probably be smiling just as blatantly.

-Why?

All of it denied death.

-Jealous?

-How did you get to the top floor of this headquarters? Only I can access this secret lab, but I won't ask how you got here. Firstly, it would be a waste of my time, and secondly, it would only give you a chance to brag about yourself.

-Grey is quite a smart kid. Who's the good girl? It's Grey, of course!

-And I won't fight either. Because if we fight here, my precious research tools will be destroyed. Sword Emperor, I'm trying my best to maintain my composure. I ask you to stop provoking me for your life and my peace. Otherwise, I'll fuck you up, you son of a bitch.

-What? You're more sane than I thought.

The Sword Emperor plopped down on the sofa. A treasure found 600 years ago when destroying a kingdom, its softness embracing the sitter was phenomenal. It was also the Grey Spider's place to rest when she got tired of her research and the world.

-Oh? Wow, this sofa is so squishy! What is this? It's amazing.

It was also a sentient magical item.

-Aaaaah?!

-Just spit it out before I rip your mouth open and weave it into a scarf.

-I already got bitten by this sofa on my fabulous butt!?

-I know you're a legendary hunter, Sword Emperor. You've only been on the 50th floor for a fortnight, right? The streets are already buzzing with your achievements.

-My butt! My butt! Aaaaah! My cute plump butt!!

-Damn it.

The Grey Spider whacked the sofa with her staff. Finally, the sofa let go of the Sword Emperor's butt and closed its mouth.

-Ha, hi, hoo... Ha, hi, hoo... That was close.

-Just tell me what you're going to do.

-Oh, I was just curious. You've been holed up here for over a thousand years? I wanted to see what kind of person does such an epic shut-in act.

-So?

-Turns out you're more normal than I thought. Ouch, it hurts.

The Sword Emperor patted his butt. The Grey Spider frowned.

-Normal? Who are you calling normal?

-You, Grey.

-.....I've heard many things, but being called normal is a first for me.

-Anger where it's due. Taking responsibility in your own way afterwards. Sounds like a perfectly normal adult to me.

The Sword Emperor shrugged.

The Grey Spider was speechless.

-You know that in the Tower's basement, six constellations are nailed down as power generators, and that we have conquered dozens of worlds?

-There must be reasons for each.

-.....

-Just by looking into your eyes, I can tell. Whether you're just a brat throwing a tantrum at the world or someone who weaves her own rules into the world's web. Grey, you're the latter. You might have been hurt in the past, but you seem to have coped well enough.

-.....Ha. A guy I met three minutes ago is acting like a sage.

-I don't think it's presumptuous.

The Sword Emperor smiled slyly.

-It took a thousand years for you to be here, and a thousand years for me to meet you here. Three minutes is just the result of a thousand years. Life is ultimately about waiting to meet someone.

-.....

-So am I your destiny? Sorry, I'm not.

The Sword Emperor stood up.

-I need to climb the Tower more alone than anyone else.

-.....What do you mean?

-There are people less fortunate than me in this world. They too could ascend if they wished. I've decided to climb alone to prove that to them.

-Ha.

The Grey Spider scoffed.

-Such a noble sense of sacrifice.

-Yes. It is a noble deed.

The Sword Emperor bowed his head.

-I'm sorry.

-.....

-I must accomplish what I want to do. No matter what. I'm dedicating my life to leaving a mark in this world with my sword. So, I don't have time to look after you. Even as a ghost, I'll fulfill my mission.

The Grey Spider was enveloped in strange emotions.

She felt the man in front of her genuinely apologizing. It seemed like he knew exactly what he should apologize for and what she should be apologized to for.

He was just a man she met five minutes ago. But the Grey Spider felt his footprints already imprinted in a dry territory of her heart. It would take many winds to erase even their traces from this desert.

-.....

-Wait. Keep living. Days better than now will come.

-You.....

The Grey Spider opened her mouth.

-You're so irresponsibly annoying, aren't you?

-Huh.

The Sword Emperor laughed.

-Tomorrow, I'll ascend to the 51st floor.

-I didn't permit that.

-Don't worry. I'll give this place a makeover and take the price.

-You think it's that simple?

-If you're annoyed, if you dislike it, follow me.

-.....

-I have no comrades or lovers. But a stalker secretly trailing me is a burden I must bear as a celebrity. Follow and see me ascend the 100th floor. Trust me, Grey!

The Sword Emperor's smile shone like the sun.

And it was hotter than the desert.

-You shall be the second person to conquer the 100th floor.

---

Constellation [The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains].

Objective: Defeat the Tower's forces on the 50th floor.

Quest Progress: Favorable.

Constellation [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth].

Objective: Reveal and expose all the facilities and terrains inside the Magic Tower.

Quest Progress: Beginning.

Constellation [The Bell that Rouses the Dead].

Objective: Engrave the names of those sacrificed by the Magic Tower in the past 150 years on the five spires and commemorate them.

Quest Progress: Favorable.

Constellation [The Lonely Seeker].

Objective: Each follower must find and defeat a rival from the Magic Tower in a one-on-one duel.

Quest Progress: Favorable.

And.

Constellation [The Incarnation of Love and Lust].

Objective of the Constellation [The Incarnation of Love and Lust]: Shake and topple the leader of the Magic Tower, commonly known as the Elder, by any means necessary.

Quest Progress:

"Shit..."

Currently ongoing.

"You son of a bitch!"

A storm of magical power engulfed me.

"Wow, this is on a whole different level..."

"I knew you'd come back alive! Reincarnation? Possession? Why? why did you return without dying!"

I hastily raised my aura and unfolded the Demonic Heavenly God Art. Shredding my shadow into hundreds of pieces, I simultaneously attacked the Elder. Boom! Hundreds of explosions erupted in the air.

-Zombie.

Behind the dust clouds from the explosions, the Elder stood unharmed. Enraged and flying towards me, her fingers twitched, conjuring dozens of spells. My attacks were all intercepted.

-Sorry, but can you repeat what I'm saying?

"Sure, go ahead."

-Aren't you exactly the same as 150 years ago?

I smirked.

"Hey, Grey."

"Die!"

"Aren't you just the same as you were 150 years ago? A bit, well, how to say it? Just like that."

"I'll kill you! I swear, I'll tear you apart and scatter your soul across the universe, then smother it with shit!"

She's fierce.

"You knew the heart of the remaining humans! Sword Emperor!"

The magic the Elder of the Tower wielded was indeed splendid.

Each moment, thirty-six different spells shot towards me, all with varying directions and speeds, ruthlessly slicing through the flow of battle. An attack without any discernable pattern. It was a carpet bombing.

Pop!

For the first time since the battle began, blood dripped from my cheek.

"Blathering about people's hearts, living however you please, then dying just like that! Not even once did you get to see the view from the 100th floor, you bastard! You died alone, didn't you!"

-Hahaha.

"That was my only mistake in life, allowing a man like you even a single chance!"

-Well, the 99th floor was quite tough. Couldn't help it, you know?

"Become ashes!"

Swoosh.

A blade-like magic force grazed my calf. Luckily, it didn't sever any nerves, but the stinging pain was evident.

"You always do this, convincing people with all your fancy words that it's different this time! It always ends in failure! Sword Emperor, how are you any different from those bastards? You're just a fucking smooth talker!"

Honestly, it was dangerous.

I pride myself on surpassing the Constellation Killer, but right now, I was being overpowered by the Grey Spider. Was it because she was a great mage whom I faced for the first time? Or was her magic amplified by her rage?

"Many! So many! Bastards!"

She was strong.

Even when I unleashed the Demonic Heavenly God Art First Form: Sword of Starving Death,

"How dare you, to me, after all these numerous emotions!"

She easily countered it.

She seemed to know too well what it felt like to be starving.

"What's so special about you! Conquering the Tower alone, showing those less fortunate than you – what have you shown, Sword Emperor!"

The Elder quickly grasped my offensive moves and twisted them.

"Do you know? After you died, the Sword Emperor's sect was formed. Ha! Isn't that a comedic masterpiece? A religion, of all things! You tried to show how great a human can be, but it ended up glorifying the greatness of a god! People—humans—they never acknowledge someone greater than themselves. Only after becoming a god do they recognize it! Sword Emperor, in the end, you just created another deity in this world!"

Frostbite, Poison, Plague, Bludgeoning, Scorching, even Suicide.

From the first to the ninth heaven of the Demonic Heavenly God Art, the Elder trampled all over them, breaking through, and finally reaching right in front of me.

"I'll ask you one more time!"

She was furious, though she too was injured by my drawn sword, with blood spurting from her arm and thigh. But no wound seemed fatal. Had she lived too long to accept new wounds?

The Elder stood right before me.

Her magic, like a spear, crossed with my sword.

"Why shouldn't I kill you!"

"....."

Thump.

My heart throbbed.

‘.....Semi-Divine Eye.’

Ever since I met the Tower Master and witnessed her trauma, and the screams from all over the world, this sixth sense awakened within me. It subtly reared its head.

The phenomenon where the past or future of the person I am fighting faintly appears.

This strange occurrence has no set rules. Like déjà vu, it occasionally pierces the other person's heart and mine without any warning.

「 Follow me. 」

Not the voice of the Guardian Spirit, but the Sword

Emperor's voice to the Elder rang out for a moment like an echo.

「Wait. Keep living.」

「Memorize the scene of me ascending the 100th floor.」

「Even as a ghost, I will fulfill my mission.」

「Trust me!」

The Elder's emotions, overlapped with that voice, were conveyed to me. Just as the Sword Emperor said, the Elder had secretly followed him.

When the Sword Emperor reached the 99th floor, the Elder quietly waited on the 90th floor.

Without telling anyone.

「.....」

One week.

「 ..... 」

Six months.

「 ..... 」

Three years.

「 .....Right. 」

When six years passed, the Elder quietly stood up.

Muttering softly as she turned her back.

「 Stupid bastard. 」

The hallucination broke there.

"You stupid bastard!"

A clanging sound seemed to ring.

Was it an illusion?

But the scene that briefly unfolded before my eyes shattered like glass. Pushing aside countless shards, the Elder lunged at me.

Crack!

Her fingers stretched out and grabbed my throat.

"Why didn't I rebuild the sixth spire for over a hundred years! Why did I lazily leave the ruins untouched! To nail your remains to a stake, seal them, and make you the sacrifice for the sixth tower!"

"....."

The Guardian Spirit silently watched.

Behind the Elder.

Although the Elder was shouting at the Sword Emperor, he was actually standing behind her. Despite the pain eating at my throat, I kept looking at the Guardian Spirit until the end.

-.....

The Guardian Spirit was calm.

Expressionless.

Seeing his eyes devoid of any regret, remorse, or the slightest self-blame, I somehow realized something I had felt for a long time, only to confirm it at this moment.

“...No.”

I murmured.

“What?”

“The Sword Emperor... Your rival didn’t fail.”

I raised my left hand.

Squeeze.

I grabbed the Elder’s wrist, which was clutching my neck.

“Elder. The Sword Emperor never failed.”

“What are you....”

“I told you. He said he’d fulfill his mission even as a ghost.”

I looked down into the Elder’s eyes.

“The Sword Emperor didn’t fail. He just died.”

"....."

“He’s still climbing the 99th floor. But as a spirit, not a human. From the first floor... all over again.”

I said.

“Isn’t that right?”

"....."

In the silence of the Elder.

Yes, and...

-You’re right.

The Guardian Spirit slowly spoke.

-I’m still undertaking the 99th floor quest, Gong-Ja.

---

Chapter 306:

Reunion (2)

---

The situation was perplexing.

"Hey, who are you?"

"Can you see me?"

At first, I thought I was just lucky.

Having an expert who had climbed up to the 99th floor by my side was a blessing.

The higher I ascended, the more I realized how incredible the Guardian Spirit's achievements were. The 99th floor. A legendary realm that only legends can reach. Although the Guardian Spirit often took a bystander's attitude, there was no doubt that I was fortunate.

But then.

"Huh, this is strange? This shouldn't be happening."

"Where did that Gramps Marcus go, and why is a kid like you in front of me?"

"Take me back to Gramps right now!"

It was odd.

How could the Guardian Spirit so easily accept the fact that he had been split into 'two'?

"You only copy skills, not steal them."

"Meaning, there's 'another me' attached to Gramps as the Guardian Spirit."

The greatest of all time. Unmatched in the world. A reckless and disrespectful warrior, unwilling to accept any other strongest besides himself. How could such a person simply accept that he was split into two?

"Gramps or you. Who will succeed more as a Hunter? I'm a bit curious now."

Out of mere curiosity, as the Guardian Spirit said?

"I'll help you."

Is helping others the Guardian Spirit's nature?

"Let's conquer the tower once and for all!"

No, that's not it.

"Even if only one of us reaches the 99th floor, it's fine, right?"

I said.

"Sword Saint or I. It's enough for you if just one of us reaches the 99th floor. You don't care about the means, as long as it's achieved, right?"

-.....

"That's why you clung to the Sword Saint and then to me, despite splitting into two.... You weren't flustered."

I was mistaken.

It wasn't me who found luck.

"It's because the chances doubled for you."

The Guardian Spirit was the lucky one.

"The Sword Saint and I are different. He's a rich family's heir. I'm an orphan with no parents. He's old and accomplished, risking it all for another challenge. I, on the other hand, am young and unaccomplished, throwing myself into the tower. Mr. Marcus, who is skilled in the game called life and me, who is familiar with death. We're completely opposite."

So, the Guardian Spirit must have thought.

Very well.

"You possessed two completely different humans. As you can see, I'm desperately proving myself by attacking the tower, while the Sword Saint is still stepping back, immersed in training like a hermit. Two types. Two methods. Two possibilities, all of which you can experiment with."

Why?

Why such an experiment?

"Your goal isn't just to take me to the 99th floor. Well, it is, but to be more precise, to take either the Sword Saint or me to the 99th floor. That's your real goal."

-Heh.

The Guardian Spirit laughed.

-Hehe. Haha!

As if delighted.

-Ahahaha!

Crossing his arms.

-Yes! That's right!

With his hair redder than the sun.

-I can't hate you for this! Kim Gong-Ja, you calculate kindness. No. You have no choice but to calculate. You are convinced to the core that no one would help you without a reason!

"It's a personality built from childhood."

-And yet, you fabricate reasons for helping others! Hahaha. Fine. I don't mind. In fact, you didn't treat me with baseless kindness.

How boring it must have been.

Unable to have his own body.

Unable to roam the streets at will. Impossible to converse with others. Only able to follow where I go, and wander where I stay.

Such a life.

If a human endures such a life willingly, there's only one reason.

-Well done, Gong-Ja.

To have a purpose they desperately want to achieve.

-To take someone to the 99th floor. That's my job. My 99th floor quest. But there's a misunderstanding I need to correct.

"What is it?"

-It's not just about getting to the 99th floor. If that were the case, I would have quickly agreed when [Demon King of Autumn Rain] tried to coax you. There's a very harsh condition...

"Hey."

Someone murmured.

It was the Elder.

"No, [you two]. What are you talking about?"

She still held my neck. But she wasn't squeezing with the intent to kill immediately, as before. There was something more important now than killing me or eradicating the Guardian Spirit.

"Who are you talking to right now?"

"....."

"Is... Is the Sword Emperor there?"

"Yes."

I nodded.

"He's here."

"....."

"I'm not a reincarnation of the Sword Emperor. The Sword Emperor is definitely there, and so am I. The Sword Emperor is standing behind you, nonchalantly with crossed arms. He must have been there since he demolished the spire, ascended to the 99th floor, and returned here... The Sword Emperor has never been gone."

"....."

"He's always been there. Always challenging the tower."

The Elder looked expressionlessly.

Expressionlessly, she turned around.

-Oh, hi. Nice to meet you.

"....."

-I'm the 40% transparent Sword Emperor. If you want to adjust the transparency, please contact the tower and purchase the DLC. A scam? Oh, dear customer, it can't be helped. That's the trend these days.

"I can't see."

-Of course.

"I can't hear."

-As expected.

"I can't see or hear."

Tough luck.

The Elder bit her lip.

"What's the point then?"

She clenched her fist.

A storm of magic swirled.

With her right hand still grasping my neck, she invoked some kind of magic with her left hand alone.

It resembled a summoning spell with attractive force. Boom! Bang! Buildings split apart. Suddenly, a straight path like a highway opened up from where the Elder stood to the northwest part of the city. Any obstructing building was pulverized.

"-----!!"

A hunter was dragged in through this forcefully made path

as if caught in an intangible grip.

Whoosh!

The Hunter was pulled in at an unnaturally fast speed. As if his neck was always meant to end up in the Elder's left hand, he landed exactly there.

"---Kuh, ack!"

A muffled cry.

"You're the Apostle of [The Bell That Rouses the Dead]."

The Elder muttered softly.

"Yeah."

"Ugh, uh... what... what do you..."

"Use necromancy right now. There should be a ghost near me. Whether it's [Soul of the Dead] or [Crimson Bridge between Pity and Charity], use any skill or plead with your damn Constellation for power. Make it possible for me to talk to that ghostly bastard if you don't want your head to explode."

"Activating skill..."

A dark aura enveloped the area, surely including the Guardian Spirit. Pressured by the Elder's threats, the Apostle who used his skill trembled.

"There's nobody... nobody here. There's no soul of the dead near you, Elder. Despite the overflowing resentment, you've surround yourself with exorcism magic to prevent the curses of the dead from affecting you? Who would want to stay near you even in death..."

"Get lost, idiot."

The Elder flung her hand, sending the Hunter flying. He crashed into the building's outer wall with a loud thud! Without a chance to scream, the Hunter collapsed.

"I'll kill you."

The Elder glared at me again, grinding her teeth, her eyes fierce and resolute.

"Make it possible for me to see that bastard now."

-Forget it.

"No? Are you lying? Pretending? Pretending to talk to someone who isn't even here, just to deceive me? Don't make me laugh. I'll kill you."

-He won't die.

"How many times can a human skull be shaved off before it's gone? I'll delicately peel off your brain. Muscles. Bones. Organs. Nerves. I'll slice them thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of times."

-In the end, you will be the one to lose.

"So confident or are you pretending to be. Maybe you're just underestimating me? Fine. Your alias is King of Death, right? I'll ask you. Answer well. I can inflict the worst pain on you. Speak."

A thousand years of decay in her eyes.

"Aren't you afraid of death? You? A thing like you?"

"....."

I looked down at a millennium.

"I'm sorry."

"Threatening me like that won't change anything. It won't make any difference."

"....."

"The Sword Emperor told me."

You.

You have talent.

An incredible talent.

Of course, you don't have any talent in martial arts.

But regardless, you have a very rare talent.

"I'm not afraid of death."

Precisely because I've overcome it.

I've overcome it until now and I will in the future.

That's why.

He saw that in me.

"The Sword Emperor chose me."

"....."

I felt it.

The grip on my neck loosening.

Little by little.

"The Sword Emperor never betrayed you, Elder. He never broke his promise with you."

"I..."

"I waited six years. Six whole years for the Sword Emperor to clear the 99th floor. That should be enough, enough for a person to give up on themselves."

"So..."

"It just took a little longer than that."

"I thought you were dead."

A voice minced to pieces.

"Of course... Of course, I thought you were dead. No. It's as good as being dead. What is this? Don't lie to me. You, the Sword Emperor, didn't take much long to reach the 99th floor. You're the Sword Emperor. You're invincible. You left to conquer the tower alone. But why... why did it take so long? Don't lie to me. Why..."

"Skill Card, Open."

I stretched my hand towards the Elder's face.

Before her eyes.

Perhaps a bit of light and letters were engraved in her pupils.

+

[Sword Constellation]

Rank: A+

Effect: From another world, he cleared his world's tower up to floor 99 but failed on the 100th. Unsatisfied, he was unable to give up on his earthly desires, and has become a spirit.

He cannot physically affect anything in this world, but is able to communicate with the holder of this skill.

Be awestruck by his skill and experience, and ask him for guidance!

*Only the holder of this skill is able to feel his presence.

*Skill copied from Marcus Calenbury.

+

It was an undeniable truth.

"....."

At first, the strength in her grip faded.

"...No. This is your failure, your defeat. A Constellation? What's the point of conquering the tower even as a Constellation? You've become a god."

-That's why.

Then, the sharp angle of her brows crumbled.

-I never used the power of a Constellation. Not until now and nor will I use it in the future.

Every time I translated and voiced out what the Guardian Spirit said, the pillars that had supported the Grey Spider for a millennium, one by one, collapsed.

-I didn't use the power of messaging. I let go of the faith that gathered. You can think of it as an excuse, but I did my utmost to race. I wanted to remain human, even as a ghost. I know that it's a ridiculous story.

The expressionless look on her cheeks fell apart.

-Grey Spider.

"....."

-It's quite late.

Finally, the sneer on her lips crumbled.

-I'm sorry.

---

Chapter 307:

Reunion (3)

---

I translated the Guardian Spirit's words.

"He says he's sorry."

"....."

"For being late."

The Elder's breath slowed down. It might have even stopped for a moment.

"Ha....."

I couldn't see her face. The brim of her pointed hat was too wide. The shadow it cast was deep. Her eyes were hidden by her bangs.

I could only hear the sound of her grinding her teeth in a sneer.

"Ha."

As if living flesh was being ground on a millstone.

The Elder's life was being finely ground on her teeth. All that was left was a sneer scattering in the air around her.

"He's apologizing now?"

[Quest Progress.]

"It's just too late for that now,"

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust nods in agreement.]

"It's a ridiculous notion."

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust acknowledges your progress.]

"Surely you're not blaming me? After all, I have lived for over a thousand years, but one hundred and fifty years is just too long for a human. It's too long to be stuck on a single floor. Who could imagine spending one hundred and fifty years trying to break through?"

[The quest progresses.]

"It's too long, idiot."

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust declares quest completion.]

"It's just too damn long."

[Quest Cleared.]

[The temporary quest you participated in has ended.]

[All disciples of the Incarnation of Love and Lust are granted the right to advance to the next floor.]

"....."

Before I knew it, the Elder was holding my collar with both hands. She was a godslayer, a witch who nailed six constellations, the master of all spiders, and had five fingers.

"...This kid. You're the successor of the Sword Emperor."

-Yes.

"He wouldn't have chosen just anyone as his successor. Your lineage boasts tradition and legends. Even if I didn't care, you were always showing off."

-Of course.

"If this kid fails, you won't be able to reach the 100th floor either."

-Unfortunately, that becomes more likely.

Beyond the Elder's shoulder, the Guardian Spirit stood silently with his arms crossed.

The two conversed using my words as a shaky bridge.

"If you only chose him as a disciple because he can use Aura, I'll kill him."

-It's surprisingly up to you to decide who you kill.

"Draw your sword."

Thud.

The Elder let go of my collar.

She took a step back, then another.

Finally, her hair swayed, revealing her expression.

"It's not the gods who decide who can climb to the 51st floor. Tell those Constellations to get lost. Quests? Damn it. Go eat shit."

The Elder looked straight at me while pointing her staff.

"I'll test you, successor of the Sword Emperor."

"....."

"If you're too weak to climb the 99th floor, just despair here. By now, you've become a god after passing the 40th floor, having been treated like one by ignorant beings, enjoying all luxuries. At least kneel before me to show you're just a human. Admit to your people that you've been lying all this time. Even if you don't have the strength to reach the 100th floor, at least free your people from the oppression of lies. I'll question your qualification."

I glanced at the Guardian Spirit.

He showed no reaction.

So be it.

"I don't think Constellations are gods."

"They are just beings who can do a bit more than others. Calling them gods won't change anything. Grey Spider, whether it's the hunters who persecuted you in the past or you who now rule over hunters, to me, it's all the same."

I unbuckled my sword sheath from my belt.

"But that's just my opinion."

And I let go of it.

[The Goddess of Protection remains silent.]

Thud.

The Holy Sword fell to the ground, emitting a noise.

Having once led the Constellation Killer to another world, torn to pieces, then gathered by my hand to regain its full power, the Goddess of Protection, known as the Holy Sword, silently accepted its fall.

"I enjoy fighting according to my opponent's perspective."

I took a stance.

There was no sword.

Just like the Grey Spider, I only had five fingers.

"That way, I can completely shatter them."

I clenched my right fist.

"Come at me."

"I'll break you without borrowing the power of a Constellation."

I beckoned with my left hand, a cheap taunt.

".....Really."

Seeing that, the Elder, who had only let out a grating laugh until then, finally burst into laughter.

She took off her hat.

"It's clear that the Sword Emperor chose you for your personality, if nothing else."

Thud.

The black pointed hat fell to the ground.

"I chose magic because it allowed me to kill faster and more. I would have to fight each of the five races and subjugate the gods one by one with my fists. It was a simple choice for efficiency."

Her staff dropped.

Her thick robe dropped.

Lastly, the black hairpin holding her hair broke in her grip.

"I didn't neglect learning how to fight with my fists, though. Little one."

Her ash-colored hair flowed down.

"You might not know, but I am a genius among geniuses."

"Hmm. It's irrelevant to the current situation, but I'm reminded of an old saying about the world's most annoying person. I thought of it every time I saw the Sword Emperor, but now looking at you, Grey Spider, I'm reminded of the same words. I wonder why? Maybe because you two are a match made in heaven."

"Got wisdom teeth?"

"What?"

"Do you have wisdom teeth in your mouth?"

"...Yes?"

"Good for you."

The Elder crouched and assumed a fighting stance.

"If you lose a molar, use your wisdom tooth to fill it. Little one."

In an instant.

Her figure vanished.

---

The shock arrived before the sound.

Bang...!!

My skull twisted. Then, a loud noise echoed in my head, not my ears. The pain followed.

I realized that the Grey Spider's fist had struck my right cheek.

Right in front of me, the Elder stood with her fist clenched, laughing.

"Wow—oh—"

Aura.

Acceleration.

"Sword Emperor's girlfriend sure has a punch—"

"Tooth number 26. The first molar."

In the accelerated timeline, the Grey Spider muttered.

Bang!

On the opposite cheek, a sharp pain exploded.

"Tooth number 45. The premolar."

"-----"

"Oops. Two corn kernels are already gone."

Something whizzed past my eyes.

It was a bloodied tooth.

The Elder caught my tooth, ejected from my mouth, and deliberately rolled it in her palm.

"I find it weird that you're losing your teeth this early. Ah, I forgot to ask your age. Do you still have baby teeth? You'll get permanent teeth as you age, so take care of them."

"Okay."

I smiled.

"I'm okay with this kind of thing."

Then, like a snake, I reached out and twisted the Elder's wrist. As I faked a twist, the Elder resisted, not wanting to be dragged around.

But that was exactly what I wanted.

I relaxed my grip.

Like releasing a rubber band, my body shot forward.

Thump...!!

My forehead struck her face. It was a hammering headbutt. A squishy sensation vibrated on my forehead.

"You, motherfucker, son of a bitch—"

The Elder's nose bled profusely in mid-air.

Unfortunately, it couldn't be helped. Like me, the Elder must have strengthened her body with Aura, but when a sturdy forehead meets a sturdy nose bone, it's clear what would break.

"You shouldn't bleed like a child at your age, Elder."

I threw a punch.

"You're too old for this lack of dignity."

"I'll turn you into an old man by knocking out all your teeth!"

"Then I'll rejuvenate you, Elder. See? My nature is a bit better than yours, proven by..."

My tooth flew out.

"Wow, haha! Ah ha!"

My speech slurred. Losing three teeth affected my pronunciation, but what does it matter? I can use telepathy with Aura, so it's no problem.

"This is incredible!"

"You're insane!"

A crack sounded somewhere. It felt like a rib. Why am I not sure even though it's my body? Because before I could check which part broke, I had already smashed the Elder's shin. So we each belatedly realized our own pain.

"Aaaaah!!"

"Damn it, shit."

Screaming, I stomped on the Elder's foot. She swore and hit my jaw. Hits came from everywhere. We exchanged shouts of pain.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth is speechless.]

[The Lonely Seeker watches the duel.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains is dumbfounded.]

Suddenly, the Constellations also watched our brawl. But it was brief. As soon as the message in my head stopped, the Grey Spider lifted her right foot and slammed it down, Kwaang! Whatever magic was in that kick, I didn't know, but the noisy messages vanished instantly.

"Get lost!"

The Grey Spider's face, soaked in blood, contorted like a demon. Her roar echoed over the city she ruled for a thousand years.

"This is my fight! I'm not asking the star-headed bastards to gawk! If any Constellation spouts nonsense again, I'll hunt them to the depths of hell and rip their souls apart! So, shut up!"

What now?

"That's cool!"

"And you, shut up too!"

My jaw shattered. No joke, it really broke. But I didn't stop laughing. I reconnected the broken bone with Aura and replaced the severed nerves. The same for my ribs and just now, my left knee.

The Elder did the same.

Despite our battered bodies, our fists didn't slow down.

"The Sword Emperor says he hates you!"

-What?

The silent Guardian Spirit was startled. Regardless, I laughed heartily, throwing punches freely.

"He said he ran to the 99th floor because he hated you!"

-What are you saying, you punk!

"He was sick of being stalked by you!"

-No! Hey! When did I do that?!

"He said he felt peaceful for 150 years without seeing you!"

Lies and slander work wonders in provocation, especially in a situation far from ordinary, like exchanging punches, with broken noses, crushed feet, and split shins. Bullshitting truly is the way of life.

"This bastard is really fucking crazy?"

The Elder was furious, nearly fainting.

"Hey, hey! You're putting too much force in your punches! You'll tire before me! Ever heard of conserving energy?!"

"What kind of shitty advice is that!"

"Apologize to the Sword Emperor! He did nothing wrong! Don't you feel sorry for him! You cold-blooded... unbelievable!"

"Ah, shit. Ah, where did this lunatic come from..."

Good.

Her breathing was disrupted.

At that moment, thump...! I powerfully hit the Elder's side.

"-----Shit."

The Elder's face soured.

"I won't use the power of the Constellations!"

I burst out laughing.

"But I never said I won't use my tongue!"

"What kind of damned, wretched, crazy, ah, wow,"

"Okay. An opening."

I hit again.

"-----!!"

"Grey Spider! You are strong!"

Seizing the moment her rhythm faltered, I hit more, and more at the same spot. The rhythm shifted entirely to me. Blood rushed to my head, and endorphins flowed.

"Just that I am a bit stronger! Hahaha!"

"Ugh..."

"Why? Because I'm in front of the Sword Emperor! You can't afford to fall apart in front of the Sword Emperor you've longed to see after 150 years! To prove you're better, superior! But I don't have that! No way!"

Slap.

I stomped the ground.

"I've already made a fool of myself in front of the Sword Emperor!"

Then I launched an uppercut.

With all my strength.

"With one more embarrassing moment, what difference does it make?!"

"-----"

Time froze.

Ignoring the pain, I punched first, and the Elder staggered, wobbling in the position where her chin was hit.

"What the hell..."

I bet she had the most unjust expression in the universe.

"That, just like the Sword Emperor, you bastard..."

Thud.

Finally staggering, the Elder collapsed, spreading webs on the ground she conquered. She was unconscious, unable to close her eyes, glaring at me.

"Sigh."

However, standing on one's feet is greater than staring with two eyes.

I stood tall and laughed loudly.

"I won!"

And roared.

Loud enough to echo through the city.

"I won!"

-.....

No response came.

The Constellations were chased away by the Grey Spider. The ordinary followers and other spiders, busy fighting around the Tower, couldn't spare attention here. Everyone evacuated, fearing getting caught in our fight.

Only the Guardian Spirit watched me with an indescribable expression.

"See! Did you see!"

-.....

"My victory! I defeated the one you left behind, regretted, and thought you had abandoned! With my hands! My two fists! How about that!"

-.....

"You're proud, aren't you!?"

"Too proud to go insane, right!?"

Why?

-Yeah....

The Guardian Spirit looked terribly embarrassed.

-Kim Gong-Ja, I think I'm going insane because of you....

Of course.

The ultimate winner is me...

Chapter 308: Floor by Floor (1)

---

"King of Death... no, Mr. Gong-Ja. I'm sorry, but may I have a word...?"

"Surprisingly, Apothecary, you have the right to speak not just a word, but a hundred, even a thousand, as long as the listener is generous enough. And not to brag, but I'm quite a generous person."

"Mr. Gong-Ja, you are an idiot right now...."

That was the first thing the Apothecary said after examining me for 30 seconds.

"Not in a derogatory sense, but literally. Like, really, literally an idiot. Not just a normal idiot, but a massive one."

"That's a bit harsh."

"In that case, I'll call you pickled radish...."

"What?"

"Huh?"

I tilted my head in confusion, and so did the Apothecary. An incomprehensibly long moment passed.

The Apothecary continued nonchalantly.

"How can you still be alive in this condition...? Right now, I could write a thesis on Mr. Gong-Ja's condition. This is how it is with the arm. Like this. Yap."

"Aaaargh!?"

"You see how easily it bends, right? The curve is very smooth, just like this. Yap."

"Yeeek! Ouch, oww, eeeek!"

"Yep. The bones are shattered. You know the crumbs left at the bottom of a bag after crushing instant noodles...? Mr. Gong-Ja, your whole body is in that state right now... including your jaw and skull."

"I give up! I give up! Okay, stop bending it! I'm dying!"

"Talking about death like you were alive to begin with..."

But I am alive!

"Anyway, I'll treat you."

The Apothecary sighed.

"But my skill has a stronger backlash the more severe the injury is. I'll try to assist with potions as much as possible, but the pain will still be immense..."

"Uh, if we rate the pain just now as level 1, what level would the pain accompanying the treatment be?"

"Don't act like a baby over a slime hit."

Indeed.

Am I being told to die?

I've lived a life without shame.

"Mr. Gong-Ja, you have two choices."

"Choosing between life and death has always been a difficult question for me."

"Would you like to be treated all at once? Or would you prefer to be treated little by little, starting with the arms, legs, intestines, head, shoulders, feet, knees and then feet?"

"Please enlighten me on the difference."

"Well, it's either enduring a pain beyond death all at once, or experiencing a near-death level of pain several times..."

"So it's a choice between death and death..."

So, it was a choice between dying once to live and keep dying to live. Even Admiral Yi would find such a repetitive choice difficult. It's certainly not something to tell the troops. Even the most patriotic soldiers would flee screaming "Hell Joseon*."

***The phrase is a mixture of the words "Hell" and "Joseon", meaning that "(South) Korea is a hellish, hopeless society". Although the term began with private individuals on the internet, it was later adopted by the mass media.

"So... what will you choose?"

"I'll choose death!"

"Sorry, I don't understand which option you mean..."

"Well, it's always better to get hit with a stick all at once."

I spoke based on my years of life experience.

"Just treat me thoroughly. It'll hurt for a moment and be over."

"Alright."

The Apothecary took out a glass cylinder from her pocket.

A thick, red liquid like hangover soup swirled inside the bottle.

"Now, please lie down."

I lay down.

"Close your eyes."

I closed them.

"Then... please survive."

I survived.

"...Yes?"

There was no answer.

Feeling an ominous sense, I blinked my eyes—

---

Blink.

When I opened my eyes, I saw purple irises right in front of me.

It was the Tower Master's face.

-.....

The Tower Master, expressionless, looked down and murmured.

-...This is a bit problematic.

Tower Master Jaa Soo-Jeong?

-You shouldn't have come here yet.

What?

-Please go back.

What are you talking about?

Wait a minute.

Where is this...?

---

“—Hup!”

I suddenly sat up.

The back of my neck was damp.

"Wh-What just happened? I felt like I really experienced the afterlife..."

"Are you awake yet?"

A familiar voice reached me.

The Elder, the Grey Spider, was lying on a bed next to me, leaning against it.

She, too, seemed to have received treatment, wrapped in bandages all over her body, sipping some unidentified red juice through a straw.

"Hey, that healer you brought is amazing. A whole year of convalescence reduced to just a week. I'd like to hire her for our tower."

"Oh, well. The Apothecary is a bit overpowered... Wait a minute. A week? It's been a week?"

"You've been yelling like a headless chicken for 173 hours, 31 minutes, and 26 seconds, so roughly a week, give or take."

Unbelievable.

[Shiny congratulates the brave hero on his safe return.]

The Holy Sword on the bed hummed softly.

That's impossible. I just closed my eyes and opened them again.

But in that brief moment, a week had passed, which felt utterly unreal.

"What happened?"

"What? To my life? It's rubbish."

"Not that. I remember defeating you and capturing you as a prisoner."

I had triumphed over the Elder, the Grey Spider.

But the moment of glory was brief. Severely injured, I had to leave the battlefield. Somehow, I managed to contact our world and called the Apothecary for treatment, which I received that same day.

...Treatment?

Is that what we can call it?

It would be more appropriate to call it a newly developed, advanced assassination technique.

Anyway.

"The battle between us and the overall war, it's not over yet, right?"

Indeed.

The Magic Tower had lost their leader, the Elder and the Anti-Magic Alliance seemed to have the upper hand. Yet, despite this, the spiders refused to surrender, barricading themselves in the five spires.

Obviously, the Anti-Magic Alliance capitalized on the momentum and surrounded the spires.

A tedious and exhausting siege began.

I was asking about the outcome of that siege.

"I understand what you're expecting, but nothing has been decided yet."

The Grey Spider shrugged her shoulders.

"Sure, the kids must have been quite shaken by my capture. But surrender is a separate issue. Unless defeat becomes absolutely certain, they'll never raise the white flag."

"Even if I threaten them with your life?"

"Well, of course, some will be swayed."

The Grey Spider smirked.

"But you wouldn't do that."

"Right. That's true."

I nodded.

"You're not planning to escape and fight a second time, are you?"

"I really fucking want to... But no. As much as I despise the unfair and cowardly tactics used against me, a duel is a duel, and a test is a test. Unless you try to kill me, I'll behave as a prisoner for now."

The Grey Spider muttered about being sealed with triple-layered binding magic, making escape difficult.

Surprisingly, she seemed quite calm about her defeat.

"Ah. Maybe you're trying to impress the Sword..."

"Do you really want to die?"

"Strong denial often means the opposite..."

"Strong denial, indeed. You're dead meat."

"Aaaaack!!"

"Yaaack!?"

Describing the recent incident, the Grey Spider lifted her bandaged leg and struck my waist, causing my still-healing ribs to scream in agony. Her leg bones, not fully healed either, crumbled as well.

It was a beautiful harmony.

As a result, I gasped and clutched my waist while the Grey Spider grunted, clutching her leg.

"Oof... Ouch...."

"Damn... Bastard...."

Groans filled the ward. Neither of us had the luxury to blame each other for our foolishness. We were simply in very, very much pain.

True pain leaves you speechless.

The Guardian Spirit looked at us as if thinking, what are these fools doing?

-Are you two idiots?

"Sword Emperor says that since 15,110 years ago, he's only loved you..."

-I swear, I'll kill you!

"Oh, it's destined to be."

I shrugged off the pain.

That's life.

It's my life... Kim Gong-Ja's life.

[Shiny looks at you with worried eyes, thinking you're overdoing it today.]

My whole body hurts, that's why. Please understand.

"Anyway, the fight isn't over yet. It's not over until it's over."

"Hmm. Excuse me, but hasn't the situation already concluded? The leader was captured and surrounded. What more could happen for the situation to be deemed decisively lost?"

"Well... Hmmm."

The Grey Spider narrowed her eyes and glanced at me.

"It might have come to a conclusion by now."

There was something ominous in her eyes.

"...What do you mean?"

"Our Magic Tower extends its tentacles across dozens of worlds, kid. Although we gathered a large army this time, that wasn't our entire force. If the kids holed up in the spires are the main force, then there's another group that can be called the 'Guerrilla Force.'"

"While they delay here with a siege, the guerrilla force could have attacked your world."

What?

"Up until a week ago, we couldn't pinpoint your world because you hid underground like a wary mole. But a week ago, you summoned a healer. Our kids likely pinpointed your world's coordinates while you were unconscious!"

The Grey Spider grinned triumphantly.

"What the..."

"Ahh, King of Death. You're indeed strong. I acknowledge that. But remember this lesson from the war. Just being strong alone doesn't guarantee victory."

The Grey Spider clicked her tongue and waved her fist, probably intending to wag her fingers, but the bandages made it a futile effort.

"You captured me as a prisoner, but we've taken your entire world hostage. If you were a typical psychopath like any other 50th-floor clearing hunter, you'd just shrug it off. But you're different. You're insane but kind."

"This can't be happening..."

"Yeah, King of Death. Your kindness has become your Achilles' heel."

"How could such a foolish strategy be possible..."

".....Hmm?"

The Grey Spider tilted her head.

"Anyway, take this as a good lesson. I'm not a devil, after all. You're young with a bright future ahead. In recognition of accepting your defeat in the duel seriously, I'll consider it a draw. One win, one loss. What a splendid experience."

"Indeed. A truly splendid occasion seems to be unfolding."

"...What's with that attitude? Let's see if you can keep it up when you see your people begging for their lives, pleading for rescue."

The next day.

"Ugor."

A rumbling echoed.

"Annoying flies were clinging on, so I had to swat them a bit harder."

Dozens of unconscious spiders lay on the ground, each one a commander-level mage. Under their command, about six hundred guerrilla force members were tied up outside the building.

Leafanta Aegim stood tall, arms crossed.

"I wanted to resolve misunderstandings through conversation, but they wouldn't listen. I had to use my fists."

"How tragic."

"That's life. Have there been any troubles in Babylon?"

"None at all."

I crunched on potato chips from my bed, waving at him.

"....."

The Grey Spider, lying on the adjacent bed, was gaping in disbelief.

"I'm absolutely fine, except for feeling slightly dead. How about you, son?"

"It's the same as usual."

"What about Babylon?"

"No big issues. Just some small ones. Besides these guys, all sorts of riffraff from various worlds swarmed in."

"Is that so? And then?"

"Even though our world is new, word has spread by now. Those who can actually learn their lessons won't dare to mess with Babylon anymore."

"Hmm."

I put down the bag of chips and looked at the Grey Spider.

"That's how it is."

"Anyway, take it as a good lesson. I'm not a devil, either. You're young, and in respect of your graceful defeat in the duel, I'll go easy on you. I claim one victory. You have one defeat."

I grinned broadly.

"What a splendid experience this will be!"

The Grey Spider slowly wrapped her head in her hands.

Then muttered in a voice cursing the universe.

"Can someone beat this kid for me..."

Hang in there.

Life is beautiful, isn't it?

---

Chapter 309: Floor by Floor (2)

---

It took ten days for me to get discharged from the hospital.

Ten days was a bit of a stretch, to be honest.

"Mr. Gong-Ja, there's no such thing as complete recovery in this world."

Apothecary said while checking my bandages.

"You may look fully healed, but your body always loses something... always."

"But I feel perfectly fine now?"

"That's precisely the illusion."

Apothecary sighed.

"For instance, you contain Aura in your muscles and blood circulation. It's great because it makes your muscles incredibly efficient, but on the flip side, it means you'd be terribly weakened if you couldn't use Aura."

"Well, it probably doesn't matter much, does it?"

I shrugged.

"I'm quite skilled with Aura, after all."

"If we were in the outside world, you'd be dead by now, Mr. Gong-Ja. There's neither Aura nor mana out there."

I fell silent.

Apothecary continued wrapping the bandage expressionlessly.

" While it's true that we can't return to the outside world, we wouldn't survive if we went there now. You understand, right? Mr. Gong-Ja's body hasn't just gained benefits... it has adapted to a specific environment and is now dependent on that environment to survive."

"....."

"Alright. That's done."

Apothecary finished bandaging me tightly.

"Fighting isn't romantic, and wounds aren't medals of honor. At least not to people like me... Please resolve conflicts with words rather than your body whenever possible."

"I can't promise I won't get hurt again in the future."

However, I added.

"But I'll keep in mind your advice to resolve issues with words as much as possible."

With that, as soon as I was discharged, I went straight to the five spires, the headquarters of the Magic Tower.

To resolve things with words.

---

"Ah. Ah. Mic test, mic test."

Wheeeing-

Following the Apothecary's advice to refrain from using Aura for a while, I did not use Telepathy. Instead, I used a magic item, a voice amplifier, and brought it to my mouth. It wasn't as clear as Telepathy, but my voice still sounded quite good.

"Ah, ah. Can everyone at the Magic Tower hear me-?"

-.....

It was silent.

There were no windows in the spires.

Just walls gleaming black like obsidian.

Even if we couldn't see them, the spiders inside must have all pricked up their ears. Of course, our side, the members of the Anti-Magic Alliance, were also intently focusing on every word I said.

"You no longer have a chance of winning."

In the midst of thousands of spiders and thousands of followers at a standoff, I spoke leisurely.

"The Grey Spider has been defeated and captured by me. The guerrilla force you were relying on as your last hope has been captured while attacking our world. Frankly, your chances of winning are zero."

I turned my head and gestured with my eyes.

"Ugor."

Uburka, who had been waiting behind me, nodded. He brought a neatly prepared bundle and stacked it in front of the spire.

The spiders of the Magic Tower rolled up in blankets.

These were the prisoners who had invaded our world and were captured.

"Damn it!"

"Untie me! Untie me, you bastard! Untie me!"

"Don't scream... It's just more embarrassing....."

The spiders wriggled with only their heads poking out from the blankets. From a distance, they probably looked like caterpillars.

I comfortably sat on top of the prisoners' bodies.

"Ouch!"

"Hey, you're heavy!"

"As you can see, all the commanders of your esteemed guerrilla force have been captured. Not to mention, we've also captured hundreds of regular spiders. In a nutshell, your hopes have been thoroughly crushed."

At that moment.

-We surrender!

From one of the five spires, a voice rang out.

-Our Magic Tower's 5th Branch has always admired Mr. Gong-Ja! We have been discussing surrender internally and we want to finally speak up! We apologize! Please, show us mercy, King of Death! If you tell me to bang my head on the ground, I'll do it all the way from here to there! If you want me to roll over like a dog, I'll do it! No, we are already dogs! Woof! Long live the King of Death!

Hmm.

Impressive.

"No, no, you don't have to go that far..."

-You traitors from the 5th Branch!!

A furious voice erupted from another spire.

-How could you humans do this!

-What? Didn't you hear? We're not humans, we're dogs. Dogs. We can do anything as dogs.

-You bastards! Have you forgotten the grace of the Elder? You were even the head spokesperson!

-Well, that position was supposed to be rotated weekly from the 2nd to the 5th Branch. But you've been subtly dumping it on me for 500 years. Do you know how it feels to be dumped on for 500 years, you bastards?

-Why are you bringing that up now?

-Then when should I? When you're all dead and lying in your graves? Goodbye, trash. It was sorrowful to meet you, and living with you was hell. I'm deserting!

Hmm.

It's remarkable, isn't it?

'It's too good to just listen without doing anything.'

As I was silently admiring, another voice started broadcasting from the opposite spire.

-If even the 5th Branch surrenders, won't we lose our last chance...? Let's surrender. Just do it.

-Why are you saying that now!?

-We were in charge of communicating with the guerrilla force until the end... They say that this kid's world is no joke. There are more than two hunters at the level of Constellation Killer. There were even reports that they saw the actual Constellation Killer...

-That must be a lie! You believe that?

-That's not it. I have a good intuition... I felt the same when the 6th Branch was crushed by the Sword Emperor. My intuition tells me if we continue the siege, we won't even get the broth...

-Intuition, what intuition! Ah, I'm so frustrated!

-Huh? What? Are the 5th and 3rd Branches leaning towards surrender? Then there's no need to see more. Hello! This is the 2nd Branch! We'll surrender too! But if we raise the white flag now, will you spare our lives?

-Ah, King of Death! Please remember who surrendered first! The 5th Branch! Count to five on your fingers! Remember the 5th Branch!

Okay. Now I get it.

I know exactly what I need to do now.

"Please wait a moment."

I hurriedly ran somewhere, to the building that had served as a temporary treatment center for the past ten days.

Thud.

Pushing open the wooden door, I found the Grey Spider crouching in a corner, holding her head.

“What...?”

Seeing me enter, the Grey Spider lifted her face. Her expression was far more haggard than it had been this morning.

“Why are you here all of a sudden?”

“Ah, don't mind me. It's nothing.”

I took out a high-definition smartphone and took a picture of the Grey Spider.

“I just thought capturing this moment would be a precious memory to tease you with later on.”

“.....So, you came all the way here just to enjoy my humiliation? Right now? In the middle of negotiating surrender with my children? Just to make fun of me?”

“Uh....”

I blinked.

“Maybe that’s one way to put it?”

“This crazy ba—”

Thump.

I closed the door again and returned to the siege site. As I was leaving the building, I heard the Grey Spider shouting something from behind, but I couldn't afford to listen. I was in the midst of intense negotiations, after all. There was no time for distractions.

"Mic test. Mic test. Yes, I understand. Of course, we are willing to accept your surrender."

I spoke earnestly.

"Obviously, we will ensure your lives. If desired, we can even provide you with a place to live. However, you must relinquish the exclusive rights you enjoyed on the 50th floor and free the other worlds you've colonized."

A response came immediately.

-Your Majesty! Such reasonable terms! A new era has dawned after long years of tyranny! Long live the King of Death! Long live! This is the 5th Branch speaking!

-Shut your trap!

-We're not the ones making this decision. It's up to the Elder... But we'll cooperate...

-Yeah, as long as we live, it's fine.

Voices of various tones responded.

The responses translated into outcomes.

Over the next half-day, one surrender followed another.

“The 5th Branch of the Magic Tower, the fifth net, the Net of Authority, containing four hundred and eighty-one members. We all surrender to the King of Death!”

The gates of the spires, previously shut tight like a shark’s teeth, gradually opened one by one.

Even as the gates opened, the followers of the Anti-Magic Alliance remained vigilant. They watched the surrender procession with tense eyes.

Fortunately, no mishaps occurred.

“The 3rd Branch... The nest of the Net of Sorrow, containing one thousand three hundred and thirty-three members, we surrender...”

The spiders, lined up in rows, knelt before me and my followers standing behind me.

“The 2nd Branch of the Magic Tower, containing seven hundred and thirty-six members from the nest of the Net of Rage. We surrender peacefully, please just spare our lives!”

Thump. Ordinary spiders hidden under their robes took them off. Thump. Commanders wearing conical hats removed them and respectfully placed them in front of where they knelt. Thump. Thousands of staffs, regardless of rank, were laid on the ground.

Thump.

Thump.

"....."

Thump.

Silently, with lips firmly sealed, the spiders, too, surrendered.

The reign of the Millennium Magic Tower thus came to an end.

"....."

The followers lined up behind me watched the scene in silence.

There were those who, unable to contain their anger, wanted to lash out at the surrendered prisoners.

How could there not be?

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust leaves the decision of the prisoners' fate to the King of Death.]

Despite their feelings, a voice intervened.

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains leaves the decision of the prisoners' fate to the King of Death.]

[The Bell That Rouses the Dead leaves the decision of the prisoners' fate to the King of Death.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth leaves the decision of the prisoners' fate to the King of Death.]

[The Lonely Seeker leaves the decision of the prisoners' fate to the King of Death.]

All the Constellations participating in this war transferred their rights over the prisoners to me.

That was the 'quest reward' I had requested from the Constellations.

I had made enormous contributions in this war, indisputably the greatest. I was in a position where I could demand almost anything from the Constellations, and so, I acquired the right to decide the fate of all the prisoners.

“.....How can we simply let these people live?”

“Be quiet.”

When one Apostle, unable to suppress his rage, started to speak, another Apostle from [The Incarnation of Love and Lust] calmly interrupted.

“It’s what the constellations want.”

"....."

“And it’s what I wish too. If it were left to us, what would follow is hell. Torture, interrogation, humiliation, all sorts of vengeance. A bloody festival would commence. It’s better to leave it to an outsider like the King of Death.”

The Apostles fell silent.

I didn’t expect them to fully accept this decision. I didn’t even think about it.

That's why I planned to take the spiders to the World of the Lone Child.

To a continent once dominated by the Earth Spirit Tribe.

‘Distance makes the heart grow fonder, as they say.’

Not much will change from now on.

Just one more race, the Witch Clan, will join the council of races in the Fire River Council.

As evening approached, the blood that could have stained the ground instead dyed the sky, bringing the sunset.

“In the end, the 1st Branch didn’t surrender.”

[Assistant Writer] muttered.

“What are you going to do, King of Death?”

"....."

The last bastion of the Magic Tower refused to surrender. Even though four out of the five spires had surrendered, the last one adamantly locked its iron doors, insisting on a fight to the death.

The black wall of the tower was illuminated by the red sunset.

“Maybe a scapegoat is needed after all. Look behind you. No one is saying anything, but they’re all seething inside.”

[Assistant Writer] was right.

"....."

"....."

The Apostles, including regular followers, glared at the last unyielding spire. Unresolved grievances and anger that may never dissipate were simmering.

Even the spiders who had already surrendered sensed the atmosphere and quietly lowered their heads.

“I understand.”

All the forces on the 50th floor tacitly consented to a massacre.

“You are a hero.”

[Assistant Writer] said.

“A hero who liberated the 50th floor. But above all, a hero must first choose whose side to take. I hope you don’t make a mistake at this point.”

"....."

Something happened just as I was about to open my mouth to retort.

“Father.”

Thump.

A large hand covered my entire shoulder.

I turned my head to look up at the figure beside me.

“Don’t worry, Father. I understand the situation.”

Uburka.

“Send me to that spire.”

My son smiled wickedly, showing his fangs.

“Perhaps I can make them surrender.”

---

Chapter 310: Floor by Floor (3)

---

"....."

I gazed at my son for a while.

Silence ensued. .

Uburka, who brushed his teeth with Aura daily, had sparkling white fangs. The evening sunset lingered between his teeth.

"Uburka."

I spoke.

The silence had been around for a while now, so my voice continued uninterrupted.

"If I send you there, you'll become an emissary recommending surrender. Do you understand what that means?"

Uburka chuckled softly.

"I know. Everything that daddy knows and worries about, I know it all. Yet, I also know that daddy has no choice but to grant my request. Send me."

"I swear. There's no son as rebelliously filial as you..."

"Ugor. Can such an adjective even be attached to 'filial'?"

"Why not? Break the bounds of common sense, my son. Language is something we create."

Our father-son conversation leisurely flowed into the evening sky.

".....Wait, you two. What kind of nonsense are you spouting?"

[Assistant Writer] spoke.

It seemed she was dumbfounded by our conversation.

"Well, language is indeed something we create. Getting trapped by the specter of language and losing sight of its essence is a pitfall that a writer must absolutely avoid. So, if my words don't conform to grammar, it's not that I'm wrong, it's that grammar hasn't caught up with me."

"Thank you for agreeing, Assistant Writer. I'm glad that we're on the same wavelength."

"But let's toss that aside and feed it to the stray dogs. You're sending an emissary to the enemy's heartland? So, your..."

"My son. Ugor."

".....Right. I won't ask how you ended up with a species resembling an ogre as your son. I generally avoid meddling in complicated family matters, and it looks tangled enough to be a computer's power cable. Just tell me what you're planning... You're sending your son into the enemy camp?"

"Yes."

"That's dangerous!"

The [Assistant Writer] frowned deeply, her glasses following suit.

"Don't you see the situation? The First Branch of the Magic Tower is calling for a desperate resistance. In such a circumstance, the enemy lord's son arrives as a hostage? Will they say, 'Come here, have a cup of tea, and then be careful on the stairs when you leave'? Or will they go 'We've captured the vile King of Death's son' and start filming some sort of grim imprisonment drama?"

The reasoning followed Hamusutra's analogy, befitting his Apostle. The decision was opposed by other Apostle-level Hunters of the Anti-Magic Alliance as well.

"The Assistant Writer is right. ...Actually, I don't even know what a grim imprisonment drama is, but let's just say she's right because it's bothersome. The important thing is we've already given them a chance."

"We gave them more than enough chances! Yet they refuse to surrender! King of Death. The mercy you bestowed has been trampled under their dirty feet. Give the order to attack now. Let Mahos's warriors lead the charge and sweep the spire clean."

".....While annihilating all the spiders might be excessive, one spire as a sacrificial lamb seems appropriate, right?"

[Berserker], the Apostle of the [The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains], and the apostle of [The Incarnation of Love and Lust] each put forth different words and reasons, but their intentions were crystal clear.

They wanted a massacre.

"....."

That's the problem.

[I had no choice but to condone the massacre.]

[I had to agree since that's what they wanted.]

'I would be betraying the Five Great Guild Leaders who acknowledged me as their leader.'

I promised my friends a new era.

They are still guarding our base, working for the lives and safety of ordinary citizens.

Thus, they are not here right now, but in fact, they have as clear a presence as the Guardian Spirit, existing by my side.

"....."

Before I knew it, all the commanders around me were looking at me.

After all, the decision-making power was mine.

I glanced up at the sky.

"Is it evening now?"

The sky on the 50th floor was often cloudy. Through a slight gap, the sunset was bleeding.

Soon, it would turn dark.

A long night was coming.

"Until the dawn breaks and lights up the city."

I looked at the tower.

"That is the time allowed for them."

And then I looked at Uburka.

"Therefore, that is the time allowed for [you]."

I did not add that it was also the time allowed for [me], and therefore for [us].

I did not say that I too would bear the consequences of all the negotiations you conduct in my absence, or the fallout of a failed negotiation. There was no need to say that if I sent you, it was because I trusted you that much, or that if you failed, I would shoulder the responsibility of that failure.

It wasn't because all the Apostles of the Anti-Magic Alliance were eavesdropping on our conversation. Nor was it because the First Branch of the Magic Tower would somehow be listening in.

It was because Uburka had already said it. He knows everything I know and worry about.

Nevertheless, he knows that I have no choice but to grant his request.

Yes, that's known.

We all knew there was no need to add superfluous words.

I simply said,

"My son."

I shook my head and spoke again.

"Chief Warrior."

Uburka bowed deeply.

I tapped his solid and vast forehead with the back of my hand.

"Do what you can, must, and want to do, then come back."

"I heed the family head's command."

The Chief Warrior of the King of Death Family answered.

---

"One night."

I told the Apostles.

"Until dawn breaks. Until daybreak. Whatever you prefer."

"....."

"I know you've already waited a millennium. So, I fully understand how shameless it is to ask you to wait a bit longer."

Then I bowed deeply.

So deeply that my forehead nearly touched the ground.

"Yet despite that, everyone. Could you possibly grant my request?"

"Ah, no."

The Apostles were flustered.

"Wait, King of Death. You don't need to bow for this..."

"That's right! Without you, we wouldn't even dream of attacking the Magic Tower..."

Some voiced their objections out loud, while others hesitated, biting their lips.

Naturally, there were also those who couldn't suppress their boiling breaths.

"Hmm."

"Mm."

But even the most vehement among them did not object.

Exchanging glances and consolidating their thoughts, the Apostles began to speak one by one.

"Alright. We can wait one more night."

"We've waited a millennium for the Millennium Magic Tower, we can wait a bit more... That's fine, then."

"One night, or even a thousand nights, a thousand years more, wouldn't change the first spire bastards' fate."

Good.

"Thank you."

With their agreement, I stood up and turned to Uburka.

"What are you doing? Go on in."

"When the sky brightens, I'll personally lead the vanguard and tear through the Magic Tower's last spider web. You must hurry to persuade them."

"Understood, ugor."

Uburka deeply bowed his head.

Then, without giving anyone a chance to stop him, Uburka ran.

Yes, he ran.

If crossing hundreds of meters in a single step could be called 'running'.

Kwaang!

The entrance to the spire burst open. Bang! Boom! Layers of barriers and hundreds of magical protections on the gate were shredded to pieces. Immediately, from the top of the spire, a warning alarm sounded. In fact, screams were heard inside the spire even before the alarm went off.

-Enemy attack! Enemy attack!

-What, what!? Who is it? What's happening!?

-I am Uburka! The son of the King of Death! I've come here to talk with you!

-What the hell???

-His son? The King of Death's? Just who did he mate with to produce something so unlike!?

-You want to talk and you bash down the door like a madman!

-Hahaha! Conversation is a privilege only the powerful can enjoy. The weak requesting a conversation is something you wouldn't even listen to. I know. I know everything. So first, let me prove my strength!

-What do you know?! Hey, hey! Wait! Just, just wait! This is seriously no joke.....

-Requesting backup! Requesting backup! Our forces are being annihilated.....!

Kwoong.

With someone's scream as the last sound, the spire's iron doors closed again. It seemed they had prepared a backup door in case of a breach.

Impressive preparedness.

Who in the universe could have prepared for someone like Uburka?

"....."

"....."

The Apostles on our side were enveloped in silence.

"Uh....."

The [Assistant Writer] barely opened her mouth.

"A pretty unique emissary for a surrender proposal, huh...?"

"It's not wrong, though. If you're powerless, no one listens to you."

"Well, I'm convinced that you're his father and he's your son. You two are like two peas in a pod."

“My heart is much better-looking, though.”

“Huh?”

“What?”

Night had fallen.

The spire, already like obsidian, became even quieter as darkness and pitch black merged. It was so silent, it was almost as if it didn't exist, belying the chaos that Uburka had caused upon his arrival.

No voice or footsteps were heard.

"....."

Time passed.

I sat cross-legged on the bare ground, meditating. The Apothecary scolded me for relying too much on Aura, but now was the time to gather it through ki meditation.

No one disturbed me in my solitary meditation.

Ordinary disciples were scared off by the formidable prowess I had shown ten days ago. The Apostles left me alone out of consideration.

At the moment, I was a father who had sent his son to a death ground.

“Aren’t you worried?”

The only one who didn’t feel the need to tiptoe around me was the ‘Grey Spider.’

She approached with her staff, using it as support. Clack, clack, and then she plopped down next to me.

“Damn. The thought of living like this for a while drives me crazy.”

“Hasn’t your magic recovered a bit already?”

“It is recovering. But that healer you brought warned me that using magic again could kill me. Ha! One gesture from me, and they’d be dead. And now this little shit talks to me like that, unbelievable.”

The Grey Spider grumbled.

“Is everyone from your world so brazen? They all seem to be...”

“Why do you do it?”

“Huh? Do what?”

“You heard that using magic might kill you. Why are you preparing to use it?”

The Grey Spider sighed deeply.

Far away, three hundred torches flickered in the darkness. But her gaze wasn't on them.

Her eyes were fixed on the first spire, standing silently in the distance.

“I’ll need to use it soon.”

“You acknowledged your defeat as a duelist, didn’t you?”

“I did. But I can’t just stand by and watch those bastards die.”

The Grey Spider said it nonchalantly.

“What can I do? I have to die with them.”

“You’re loyal.”

I circulated the Aura slowly throughout my body.

“Charumu, right? The one who fled the Magic Tower with me. That kid stabbed his superior so efficiently, and from the second to the fifth branch, they showed a League of Legends-worthy change of stance. I thought there’s no loyalty among you, but...”

“What’s League of Legends?”

“An old game. Don't change the subject.”

“Everyone has someone special to them, isn’t that right?”

The Grey Spider’s voice was still nonchalant.

Then she glanced at the three hundred torches and the Apostles surrounding the first Magic Tower.

“But there are more people who are not special at all.”

“So, listen. Don’t start with that [If you know who's special to you, why did you do that to them?] nonsense. If you want to indulge in moral superiority, go ahead, but at least do it to those bastards too.”

The Grey Spider sighed, her breath heavy with venom.

“Isn’t it funny? [Condemning the Magic Tower.] [Mourning those oppressed by the Magic Tower.] [Therefore, we are innocent victims...] What a bunch of lunatics.”

Her words burned with intensity.

“They’re fake gods, all of them.”

I didn’t respond.

The Grey Spider took a deep breath and exhaled.

“Damned bastards... Talking big about justice, cause, remembrance, but from start to finish, they’re just rationalizing their feelings. It’s the basic principle of cults, right? Tailoring doctrines to fit the situation of the day?”

The night air was no longer chilly.

The anger from the Apostles' forces and the hatred from the Grey Spider had made this night muggy.

The Grey Spider concluded with malice and contempt.

“So, King of Death. The first Magic Tower, my sisters who stepped onto the 50th floor with me, they can’t surrender. Lie flat in front of the self-righteous bastards? Death would be better, wouldn’t it?”

I spoke.

“That's why you'll stand with them.”

“That’s likely how it will end, yes. They’ll probably all die, or worse.”

The Grey Spider's voice lost its heat.

She then spoke again, lightly.

“That’s the natural course of things. That bastard, if he was here, he would definitely spot some bullshit like “I’ll give you 200 ‘likes’ for it”. Right, King of Death?”

---

I gave a bitter smile.

“I’ll refrain from commenting on the Guardian Spirit's statement.”

“Yeah. Don’t say anything. Leaving that guy aside, why did you send your son as an emissary?”

“Are you curious?”

“Not so much curious as disgusted. Seeing you sit here moping makes my stomach turn.”

The Grey Spider narrowed her eyes, seemingly angry.

“Look. You're no different from that Sword Emperor. Always aiming higher and higher, leaving behind those who tried to stay by your side. Wasn’t he your son? If you were worried, you should have stopped him, not...”

“I’m not worried.”

I said.

“I don’t worry about my son.”

"....."

“Uburka said he would persuade them, and since he said so, he will. It’s not a whim. You may not know, but Uburka once brought a whole continent to its knees. He’s a hero of his era who promised to succeed. I have never doubted my son.”

Silence ensued.

The Grey Spider quietly closed her eyes and spoke.

“How can you be so sure?”

Still with closed eyes, the Grey Spider muttered softly.

“He won’t persuade them, you know? I just told you. It’s better to die or suffer a worse fate than death than to surrender. They won’t do it. They can’t because...”

“Because, we were in the same situation.”

The Grey Spider flinched.

Slowly, she opened her eyes.

“The same situation?”

“Uburka. His race.”

“What does that have to do with...?”

“His people were once slaves to another race. They even worshiped me as a god at one point.”

I explained.

“And his people chose a different path from yours. A path you can’t imagine. A path that one might question as even possible. Uburka will tell them, speak to them... that [a different world] might exist.”

"....."

"Only someone who was born in the same place but walked a different path can persuade another."

I didn't look at the Grey Spider. I gazed at the 300 forces and beyond, at the sky.

"So, my son will surely persuade your subordinates to surrender."

Gradually, dawn began to break.

---

Chapter 311: The Next World (1)

---

As dawn was just taking its first steps on the horizon, changes occurred to the spire.

The land was dark, and the surroundings were silent.

"Hmm."

Prricck.

The Grey Spider, who had stayed up with me through the night, pricked up her ears. We were in the midst of darkness, not exactly in silence, but close enough that even the sound of ears moving was clear.

"She's calling."

The Grey Spider narrowed her brows and gazed at the spire.

"Excuse me?"

"Me... No, not me. She's calling you, King of Death."

"Who's calling?"

I followed the Grey Spider's gaze towards the tower. The massive iron gate remained closed. There was no sign or sound of anyone, be it Uburka, who had gone to suggest surrender, or the spiders deciding to capitulate. Nothing was present at the door.

"I don't see anyone."

"She's already standing at the door. Alone."

"....."

"The invisible one observed me for a while."

“...Don't move your lips, use telepathy.”

Finally, she spoke.

"Not too strongly. Just enough for me to hear. We can't afford to have our conversation eavesdropped."

"It's quite difficult to send telepathy to someone invisible."

"Difficult doesn't mean impossible. Please do it."

I shrugged.

"Done. Even the Elder among your people would find it hard to eavesdrop on this conversation. Now, please speak freely."

However, the invisible witch couldn't speak freely.

After a long silence, she finally spoke.

“...Are you Uburka's father?”

"Ah, that's good."

“...What is?”

"That you asked if I'm Uburka's parent instead of asking if I'm the King of Death. It implies that Uburka has become somewhat significant to you. You could have called him 'that bastard' or 'damn pig' but instead, you respectfully used Uburka's name and referred to me as his parent."

I nodded.

"Uburka must be doing a good job persuading. Or rather, he has successfully persuaded you. However, instead of sending a formal envoy of surrender, meeting me secretly like this indicates... a minor trouble. Isn't it?"

"....."

The invisible one was silent for a while.

“...We listened to Uburka's story well, carefully, and seriously.”

“Hmm.”

"We learned what kind of being you are. We took this long because we were verifying if those stories were true or false..."

I tilted my head slightly. I could sense tension in her voice.

As if she was afraid of something close by.

"Why are you so nervous?"

“What?”

"You're trembling. You're scared. What's wrong?"

“Are you serious?”

For the first time, the invisible one laughed. It was a laugh of incredulity, not amusement.

"Why am I scared? I'm scared of you, of course"

"Huh?"

"In my dreams, I saw you with a thousand elite soldiers in black cloaks under your command. I saw the Earth Spirit warriors, thousands of Asuras, willing to follow your bidding. And... even the sight of Constellation Killer submitting to you."

"....."

"And you ask why I'm scared? You, who could easily obliterate us, the 50th floor, and establish your own millennium empire if you wished?"

The invisible one muttered, "This is insane."

"...We've imposed a gag order on the investigation team. So far, most of our kids don't know the extent of what kind of hunter you are."

"So you're the leader of the First Branch. Have you decided to surrender to us?"

"Yes, but there's a condition."

Condition.

"What is it?"

"We surrender to you and to you alone, King of Death."

Her voice through telepathy was clear and decisive. An invisible tone, void of any hesitation or doubt.

"We will never surrender to the rabble like the Anti-Magic Alliance."

"....."

"You alone treated our kind as true friends. At the very least, you tried your best to do so. You even convinced your comrades. Yes, I'll admit it. If it's you, there is [meaning] in our defeat, but not them!"

The invisible one was not seen.

Yet, I could fully sense her pointing and glaring over my shoulder, grinding her teeth.

"Is there even a single innocent person among those who stepped on this 50th floor! Oh, sometimes there were those who sinned less. Such kids willingly joined our tower. You see, King of Death? We will never kneel before those bastards!"

It was the same thing the Grey Spider had said.

"....."

I thought for a moment and then spoke.

"So, you intend to leave the people of the Anti-Magic Alliance empty-handed."

"Yes. They never deserved anything in the first place. It's only because of you they could even hold a spoon. I won't give them the illusion that [they won]."

The invisible witch's words were resolute.

"Yes, we had a hard time too. I admit it. But only Uburka, you, and the warriors of your world are allowed to insult us! We're willing to kneel before you, but not the others. Never."

"What did Uburka say?"

"He said, [It's a difficult task]. And he recommended talking to you. I'm here because of Uburka's advice."

Of course.

That would be expected.

"...Happy endings are always difficult."

"What?"

"To protect something precious. Whether it's a grudge, pride, or anything. The world is like this, not because there are many who have nothing more precious than life, but because there are many who have something more precious than life."

"What are you talking about? ...Are you trying to be philosophical? I'm not into that."

"I understand what's precious to you."

I was mentally prepared.

"So you don't have to kneel in front of the believers."

There was a brief pause.

As if she couldn't believe my words.

"...Really?"

"Yes. Open the door, cross the drawbridge, and go to the World of the Lone Child. My children will guide you well there."

"....."

"But... Please walk across this drawbridge."

I also set a condition.

"It's impossible to just teleport from inside the spire to the World of the Lone Child without showing any form. If you truly surrender only to me and can't kneel before the believers, then show at least the courtesy and spirit of walking across the drawbridge."

"Surely... there won't be anyone attacking us while crossing the bridge?"

"I am the King of Death."

I spoke calmly.

"If you understand what kind of being I am, you should also know the weight behind my name. You can trust that promise."

The invisible one was silent.

"...Okay."

But eventually, she acquiesced. She must have had no choice but to nod.

It was just, really, simply walking across the bridge. What's so hard about that? The spiders who worked at the First Branch must have crossed the glass drawbridge countless times.

It shouldn't be difficult.

"Then, in an hour."

"Yes. Come out in an hour."

I bid farewell and returned.

"....."

Upon my return, the Grey Spider was glaring at me with an expressionless face.

I, disregarding the stare, plopped down next to the Grey Spider.

"Smart aleck. You're always scheming."

"As the Elder, you should know the ropes."

"So, you lied to the head? Saying, '[Even the Elder would find it hard to eavesdrop on this conversation]' when you sent the telepathy to both of us from the start?"

Indeed.

From the beginning, I had leaked the telepathy not only to the invisible head but also to the Grey Spider. As a result, the Elder was clued in on the entire situation.

"How was the sound quality?"

"Damn good, you little shit."

"Do I seem a bit different to you now?"

The Grey Spider looked up at me.

The gaze she had shown when I casually mentioned Uburka's past, and now, after hearing the conversation with the invisible witch, seemed to have deepened a bit.

The Grey Spider lamented, "Is it all real?"

I crossed my arms and puffed out my chest.

"Yes. I am the King of Death."

"Not that, you dumbass."

"Ah, about the thousand elite troops in black cloaks obediently following me, the countless Earth Spirit Tribe warriors, the thousands of Asuras backing me up? I have two rivals; one commands a thousand elite troops in white cloaks and fighters in 256 colors, along with a noodle-haired punk, while the other, an original pick for Sword Emperor, is just a damn strong old man."

"No, not that, you damn jerk."

I puffed out my chest even more.

"Or is it about me wielding the immortal glory as a sword, subjugating the blood-red Demon King, and even having the Constellation Killer, the 'season boss' of this 50th floor, under my command?"

"Aargh, not those [trivial] things! Damn, you're such a sly one!"

Unlike the invisible witch who expressed fear of my power, the Grey Spider dismissed it as [trivial].

"Powerful bastards. Bastards who command heaps of powerful bastards... Living a thousand years, you see countless [ordinary strong] ones. Why couldn't we subjugate all the constellations under the tower? Because of those fake god bastards worshiped by the fake gods, the Mahos-led group of voyeurs watching us from the 50th floor while munching on popcorn."

The Grey Spider ground her teeth.

"A bit unexpected was you taking in the Constellation Killer, but that's because he wasn't an ordinary strong one! The Sword Emperor was different for the same reason. But you... you know what I mean."

Hmm.

"Really?"

Yes.

"Seriously?"

Indeed.

"King of Death, you..."

The invisible witch had been too focused on my power to fully realize, but the Grey Spider, even from a distance, had precisely understood.

With a groan, she asked, "Between the 30th and 40th floors... you didn't rule as a god?"

I nodded.

"That's right."

"Unbelievable!"

The Grey Spider exclaimed.

"That you're such a person, no, that such a person exists! Until now, no one..."

"Yes. You could say that."

I spoke to the witch.

"You can believe that. Think of me as a liar, consider what the first tower reported as a misunderstanding, dismiss it all, forget and move on. That's certainly an option for you."

"..."

"Or you might choose something entirely different."

The Grey Spider clenched her teeth.

She leaned towards me but stepped back simultaneously, ending up in an awkward stance, neither approaching nor distancing.

I waited.

After a while, looking alternately at the tower, the encircling forces, and the brightening dawn, the Grey Spider muttered like a cornered beast.

".....The Dream Demons, or whatever, showed your tale to them in their dreams."

"Yes."

".....Show it to me, too. Let me see it, and then... No. First, just show it to me."

I nodded.

"That I can do."

And so, I did.

---

Dawn was slowly crawling up the sky.

The sound of dawn climbing was the sound of the Anti-Magic Alliance's tent and makeshift buildings stretching, the Apostles dressing up, a child crying somewhere, livestock bellowing.

".....Yeah."

And it was the sound of a thousand-year-old magician saying, "Yeah."

"....."

The Grey Spider's eyes were blurred.

Not just because she had just woken from a long dream aided by the Dream Demons.

".....I..."

After a moment, hiding her face, the Grey Spider began to speak.

"I never wanted to protect my sisters. I just wanted to find and kill the man who impregnated my mother, burn his village, destroy his domain, topple his nation, and set his continent aflame. Suddenly, I found myself surrounded by my sisters."

Her words seemed to flow out on their own, not from her tongue but just from her slightly open lips.

"I never had a sense of responsibility. But I did have responsibilities. Not bearing responsibility where it's due, I realized, makes one like my father, our divine kin. Determined not to become like them, I became the rule of my kin. I established the Magic Tower."

The promised morning.

The iron gates of the spire creaked open.

"I had no aspirations in life. I just wanted to avoid becoming like that. To not resemble him. To kill those bastards. Looking back, I realize I've always lived with that as my sole focus."

The Anti-Magic Alliance's followers started to murmur.

The murmurs varied. 'Are they really surrendering?', 'Damn it', 'Let's see how shameless they can be!', 'It's over! It's our victory!' Each person expressed their emotions. 'Kneel!' Their lives were fundamentally wrong, not just a few parts. 'Kneel!' The followers were determined to prove it this time.

"I thought to myself."

"Kneel!"

"It's impossible. Impossible. Such a life is impossible for me, and for anyone else."

"Kneel!"

"That the Sword Emperor was just a unique exception."

"Kneel!"

"But then, it seems"

"Kneel!"

"That wasn't the case."

"Kneel!"

The spiders of the First Branch started to step onto the drawbridge. Thud. The invisible bridge did not waver under the footsteps of hundreds.

"Even if it's different from the Sword Emperor. Even if it's the exact opposite. Even if it's tough. Extremely tough."

"....."

"It was possible to live another life."

While we watched, the spiders of the first Branch crossed the bridge with dignity.

Their dignity grew closer, and the fury of the followers grew hotter. 'Kneel! Can't you kneel?!' 'Those creatures!' Some even tried to throw rotten fruit or trash they had found.

"You don't have to do this."

I said.

"Thank you. That might be possible."

The Grey Spider lowered her hands from her face.

"I spent over a hundred years thinking the Sword Emperor was a special exception. I can spend over a thousand years thinking the same about you."

"....."

"I was not wrong. I did my best. I did. I did. But..."

Saying so, she laughed through tears.

"But isn't that too embarrassing?"

And then.

The Grey Spider slowly knelt.

"....."

The spiders of the First Branch halted.

Not just them. The Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Branch' spiders watching anxiously, the frenzied Anti-Magic Alliance followers jeering around, even the regular hunters who joined the non-festive festivity, all froze.

"I'm sorry."

The Grey Spider, the greatest spider, the monarch of all witches, the godslayer who never knelt even to gods, knelt with bandages on her body, with her forehead on the ground.

Quietly.

"My millennium was wrong."

The city fell silent.

Chapter 312: The Next World (2)

---

The events following were, in a way, simple.

The enraged raged. Those who needed to apologize, apologized. And those who felt they had no right to add their two cents to this world, silenced themselves even deeper.

".....This is shitty."

The [Assistant Writer] muttered a curse.

In front of the drawbridge, the Grey Spider was still kneeling, her forehead touching the ground. Over her body, the Anti-Magic Alliance's followers threw rotten fruits and debris, their emotional vomit.

Thud.

A dark mass hit the Grey Spider's back and slid off.

"Ah."

The [Assistant Writer], who had been frowning, opened her lips. A sharp dagger sliced through the air at the end of her gaze.

"Wait, that thing."

But midway, the dagger was deflected with a clear 'ting!' as I knocked it down with an orb-like Aura.

The dagger feebly landed on the ground, four meters away from the Grey Spider.

"Tch!"

Someone in the crowd of thousands clicked their tongue.

The [Assistant Writer] seemed to have heard it too.

"Hey, you! What the hell are you doing looking so pathetic....."

"Don't stop it."

The [Mahos Army Commander] grabbed the [Assistant Writer]'s forearm to halt her.

"Stopping it will only make them angrier. I know this from experience, having dealt with aftermaths on the battlefield multiple times."

The Assistant Writer looked at the Mahos Army Commander, then at me.

I said nothing. Before the dagger fell, after it fell, I just stood there, arms crossed, silently observing.

Though no one else could know, this was also the stance adopted by the Guardian Spirit right beside me.

Seeing my lack of reaction, the Assistant Writer turned back to the Mahos Army Commander. Her glasses peaked sharply in frustration.

"Still, how can they attack someone who's surrendered? If you've been on the battlefield, you should know that's basic!"

The Mahos Army Commander didn't blink an eye.

"Did the Magic Tower ever adhere to that basic principle?"

The Assistant Writer clenched her teeth.

"In fact, you were one of those who suffered in prison with Hamusutra's followers, tortured until the King of Death rescued you."

"....."

"The world you were born and raised in is now a colony dominated by the Magic Tower. It's hard to imagine the Magic Tower governed its colonies any wiser than the 50th floor."

For a full millennium.

The grudges built by the Magic Tower were vast and deep.

"The Magic Tower was not wise. So, Assistant Writer, act wiser. Aren't you ascending the tower representing your world? If you have the luxury to sympathize with the world's enemy, perhaps you should prepare for conquering the next floor instead--"

"Thank you."

The Assistant Writer spoke in a low, cold voice.

"Anyway, you're saying this for my sake, right? So, thank you. I have something else to say though, so listen."

"Hm. I'm glad you appreciate it. So, Assistant Writer, I have a proposition. If you haven't decided on your team for the 51st floor, how about joining me....."

"Fuck off."

The Mahos Army Commander closed his mouth.

After speaking, the Assistant Writer's eyes widened. Her glasses followed suit.

After a moment, she flapped her arms.

"No... that... I didn't mean 'fuck off' to the offer to accompany you. Don't get me wrong. Why would you make such an offer now... Ah, forget it! Just be quiet! ...Damn."

The Assistant Writer coughed several times. Then, after giving the Mahos Army Commander a glance, she turned around.

She began to walk.

The Assistant Writer stood in front of the Grey Spider, more precisely, in front of the crowd surrounding the Grey Spider.

"Hey, you bastards, stop making such a pathetic scene!"

The Assistant Writer exclaimed.

---

The crowd immediately bared their teeth.

"What the!"

"Isn't that the Assistant Writer? It's the Assistant Writer, right?"

"The one always messing up grammar?"

"Why's the hamster Apostle who devours books suddenly popping up? Got too full of herself for helping out with the Magic Tower raid plan?"

"Everyone, shut up!"

With a voice that didn't lose to the murmuring crowd, the Assistant Writer shouted.

And then immediately continued.

"First off, whoever said I mess up grammar, let's see later. I can't tolerate such distorted information spreading. But more intolerable than that... you bastards, aren't you ashamed?"

The Assistant Writer raised her voice.

"If you want revenge, plan it yourself, gather your strength and take your revenge! If you want to lord over someone, do it to those you hunted yourself!"

The Assistant Writer gritted her teeth as she looked at the Grey Spider lying down and the various trash scattered around her.

"But what is this? If you had hunted the Magic Tower, the witches and the Grey Spider yourself, do whatever you want. However, you didn't. What the hell are you doing to someone else's prey?"

There was silence among the crowd.

For a brief moment. Except for that brief moment, the vast majority of the crowd blushed with anger. Among them, some were wearing masks which hid their face, blushing behind the mask.

A warrior wearing a mask, as if he had plucked the horn of a dragon, stepped forward with a great spear on his shoulder.

"Well said, Miss Assistant Writer."

The masked warrior spoke in a metallic voice.

"Really impressive. A true hero! Full of righteous, proper, and beautiful words. It'd be perfect if we all ran to hide in shame now, but what to do? I'm just getting pissed off. Heh. Is it because I'm a blockhead?"

"Yes."

"Don't just agree so bluntly... Well, anyway, it's so bold that those who can't afford to be bold become invisible, right?"

The masked warrior slammed the butt of his spear on the ground with a thud.

"For a thousand years. The Magic Tower ruled this 50th floor for a full thousand years! The oppression grew stronger, and this 50th floor, along with the towers that reached it, were drained by the roots of the Magic Tower!"

Voices of agreement erupted from all around.

"Miss Assistant Writer. Can't you see the pain and suffering?"

"Right!"

"The people who had to sneak through alleys to avoid the Magic Tower's notice! Those who lost their families or something even more precious to those witches and had no choice but to remain silent! Can't you see or feel those people?"

"Right! Right!"

"Miss Assistant Writer. You're speaking the truth, but that's because you have the power to speak such! What about those without such power! The weak! Even at this moment, should they just bite their tongues, stay silent, and act as if they don't exist?"

"Right! Right! Right!"

"How dare you try to gag the mouths of such utterly weak victims! Isn't that truly unjust and cruel!"

"Right! Right! Right! Right!"

As the masked warrior's rebukes continued, the crowd erupted like a wildfire. Even regular hunters who hadn't participated in the Anti-Magic Alliance raised their voices. "Wooo!" The square turned into a cauldron of ecstasy.

And the Assistant Writer doused that cauldron with cold water.

"I've heard enough of the shitty rant of an extra."

The masked warrior paused. The crowd momentarily fell silent.

Over that silence, the Assistant Writer slowly walked.

She stood in front of the masked warrior, directly looking into the two holes in the mask.

"Listen, you bastard."

The Assistant Writer, bending her back like a stretching cat, raised her head and whispered into the masked warrior's mask, bringing her face close.

"Even if you were ten times, or a hundred times stronger; even if you were as strong as the entire Magic Tower combined, I would have stood in front of you like this, and I would have said you were spewing bullshit."

The Assistant Writer pressed the tip of the masked warrior's nose with her finger.

"That's why I was dragged to the Magic Tower."

The masked warrior's mask heated up. "Ah, hot damn," the Assistant Writer flinched back, her fingers scalded.

The masked warrior spoke with a sound resembling magma overflowing down a mountainside.

"No, that's not it. You were dragged away because Hamusutra suddenly disappeared. Because you lost your backing, your power weakened! It's the same now. Now that you've got the King of Death or whatever as your backer, you're all high and mighty..."

"Ah. And one more thing."

Actually, it's two things, how do you even wear that mask, it's freaking hot, she murmured, then licked the tip of her scalded finger lightly.

"Even if you were a thousand times, or ten thousand times stronger; even if you were as strong as the entire Magic Tower multiplied, you would've just been a one-off extra introduced to show how strong the protagonist has become."

The masked warrior closed his mouth.

The Assistant Writer shifted her gaze away from the masked warrior. Her sharp-edged glasses turned towards the surrounding crowd.

"Stop making a fool of yourselves."

As the masked warrior raised his voice, the Assistant Writer's voice did the opposite. It gradually diminished.

"You are [Hunters], aren't you?"

It was a soft voice.

"Didn't you decide to climb the tower on your own feet because you wanted to go to a place bigger than where you were born and raised, because you wanted to see something different than the scenery you always saw?"

Her diminishing voice turned into a lament.

"I did. There might be bastards who climbed up because they had nowhere else to be, or dumbasses who climbed up representing their world at the worst timing, but I don't know about such grand things. I always only knew about myself, only thought about myself."

Maybe that's why she trusted the Constellation, even someone like the manager who resembled her, people are drawn to what's similar to them, the Assistant Writer muttered.

She said,

"I came here to write my story."

Her drooping glasses scanned the crowd.

"Aren't you the same?"

The gaze that returned from sweeping the crowd turned towards me.

In that gaze, not anger but regret, the twilight of the heart that sometimes seeps out when recalling conversations we once had, lingered.

Turning back to the still prostrate Grey Spider, the Assistant Writer said,

"Does this seem like something [Protagonists] would do?"

Once.

The Apostle of Hamusutra, who once muttered, [I'm not the protagonist of this story anyway,] now murmured with a shudder,

"No, it's not."

"....."

"Let's be protagonists now."

And.

There was an echo to those words.

"Well said."

It was the voice of the followers of the Sword Emperor Sect.

The Sword Emperor Sect must have suffered more cruelly at the hands of the Magic Tower than anyone else. However, they paid no attention to the witches of the Magic Tower's First Branch, who were awkwardly standing still on the glass bridge. Nor did they look at the prostrate Grey Spider.

The followers of the Sword Emperor Sect walked up and stood beside the Assistant Writer.

"It's true."

"It's a painful truth. Many would feel like hitting someone after hearing it, and frankly, I do too."

"But... still, a true word remains true."

The followers of the Sword Emperor Sect turned around in unison.

Standing in line beside the Assistant Writer, the followers crossed their arms and said,

"Without the King of Death, this hunt would not have been successful."

"As such, it would be lacking in moral integrity for us to complain any further here."

"The Emperor himself would have said the same."

The crowd hesitated and shrunk back.

-Hmm.

The Guardian Spirit spoke.

-Well, it took 150 years, but there's been a little growth.

That was the beginning.

"I think the same! This isn't fair!"

The jester who had managed to kill me on this 50th floor came out and stood beside the Assistant Writer and the followers of the Sword Emperor Sect, voicing her opinion.

"Damn... it's a mess."

The Berserker followed suit. Paparazzo and other high-ranking members of the Anti-Magic Alliance followed behind.

Finally, the Mahos Army Commander walked over and transformed into a corner of the human barrier between the Grey Spider and the crowd.

The Assistant Writer wore a slightly incredulous expression.

"Why did you come? You were the one telling me to act wisely."

"I'm here because the tide is in our favor. It's known that Mahos prefers a winning fight over a fair fight, but in truth, he likes a fight that is both fair and victorious the most."

"That right? You're not only a fool but also garbage."

"Yet, I'm garbage that fights well."

"Right. That's why I'll accept your proposal. Let's go to the 51st floor together."

"It would be an honor."

As the human barrier solidified, the fervor of the crowd slowly subsided. But it wasn't dispersing; it was more like settling down, like steam gathering under a pressure cooker.

The masked warrior exploded.

"Damn it! Your words are all forced! So, are you saying that victims who can't take revenge with their own strength should just keep their lips sealed for life?"

"That's not what we said. I'm one of those victims myself."

One of the followers of the Sword Emperor Sect spoke up.

He raised his head.

"You there. The spokesperson for the Magic Tower."

The spokesperson for the Magic Tower, who had been nervously watching the situation, hiccupped.

"Yes?!"

"You killed my disciple."

Anger can be hot, but it can also be cold.

The anger of the follower of the Sword Emperor Sect was not devoid of heat but was so filled with anger that it turned cold.

"He had talent and a light disposition, making life easy for him, but perhaps because of that, he didn't die easily. For nearly ten days, he died a gruesome death inside a glass tube, his body crushed."

The spokesperson for the Magic Tower looked away and mumbled.

"Ah, ah... um. That's truly, a regrettable incident... um. But why bring this up now...?"

"Prepare yourself."

"Excuse me?"

"I'll come to the Underworld when I'm ready, to challenge you to a duel. That's alright with you, King of Death, right?"

Hmm.

Yes.

And so, I finally spoke up.

"Hey. Who would stop a fair duel, and how could they?"

I humbly smiled.

"I'd stop an invasion led by an army, but a duel? I have no right to stop that. ...However, if you were to die in such a duel, I couldn't do anything for you under the same principle, could I?"

"That's only natural. Who would dare to kill another without being prepared to die themselves?"

The follower of the Sword Emperor Sect nodded and glared at the spokesperson for the Magic Tower.

"Wait for it."

".....Ah."

The spokesperson for the Magic Tower gnashed his teeth.

"This is really something. You're underestimating me, thinking you can win in a one-on-one fight? I'll make sure to teach you a lesson about your misconception. To be killed by the same person who killed your disciple, what a celebration for your sect. Yes! I'll certainly provide you with a spectacular death!"

"You might be able to do that. Then my disciple will come for you. And then another disciple will come for you, until my lineage is extinguished or you lose your life."

"Ah, damn... no, no, let's not do this. Mercy! Peace! Oppose war! Blood only begets blood, and revenge only leads to more revenge. Can't we just forget and forgive?"

"I'm sorry."

The follower of the Sword Emperor Sect smiled, baring his teeth.

"I'm not strong enough for that."

The spokesperson for the Magic Tower hiccupped.

---

And thus, it began again.

---

The witches of the Magic Tower received their respective [Notice of Reckoning] based on the years they had served.

Some received none, but most received three or more. The spokesperson, in particular, groaned under the weight of receiving as many as 107 challenges.

"Damn it. This is all because you guys dumped the spokesperson role on me. Being in the forefront drew that much aggro. Look here, other branch heads. If you have any conscience, you should share some of this burden. But do you even have a conscience? Ah, no... Damn bitches..."

Watching the spokesperson, Charumu, who had escaped with me, heaved a sigh of relief.

"Phew... It's a blessing I was buried deep just cleaning... This is the big picture..."

"Be careful, Charumu."

I comforted Charumu's shoulder and advised him.

"You can't run away from the life you've lived."

"What the hell... Why does this ominous realism emanate from your words..."

Thus, fifteen days passed.

Krrrrrrrrung!

The sound of the last remaining spire collapsing on the 50th floor.

[The Whip that Descends on the Self-Abuser has been released from its seal.]

The pillar that had been supporting the center of the spire tilted and fell. From afar, it looked like a giant nail. That nail shattered like glass upon touching the ground.

"Ugh...?"

From within the broken pillar, a woman with red hair slowly opened her sleepy eyes."

"Where is this...?"

"Sister!"

The Berserker rushed forward at supersonic speed. Bang! An unnatural sound, like that of two humans colliding, rang out, but fortunately, one of them was a Constellation.

The red-haired Constellation gently caught the Berserker.

"Oh. Oh my...?"

"Sister! My Constellation sister! Sob, I'm sorry I'm late! I told you to wait just three years, but 300 years have passed! I'm a fool, an idiot, a piece of trash! I should have died! Should have died but couldn't! Coward! Sob, I'm sorry!"

The Constellations sealed by the Magic Tower were being released.

"Ah... this damned self-abuse, yes. That's definitely my Apostle..."

The red-haired Constellation patted the Berserker's back.

The Berserker, having finally reunited with the god she served, buried her face in the constellation's hair, crying "Sob," shedding tears, "Wah!" sniffing, and finally, "Sniff!" bawling her eyes out.

"Um..."

The red-haired Constellation made an awkward face and wiped the Berserker's cheek.

"You're damn filthy, so ease up a bit..."

"Thank you, King of Death!"

With cheeks as red as the god she served, the Berserker spoke to me.

"It's all thanks to you! If it weren't for you, I wouldn't have been able to meet my sister again! Thank you, sob, I thought you were a damn shitty bastard, but turns out you're a damn good son of a bitch!"

"My word."

I sheathed the Holy Sword.

My shoulder was aching, not fully recovered yet, just from chopping down one pillar of the spire.

"Is that the only adjective you know how to use...?"

"What! Puppies are cute, aren't they!"

Hmm.

To that, I concede.

Chapter 313: The Next World (3)

---

Over the course of a fortnight, various events unfolded.

[The Whip that Descends on the Self-Abuser has reclaimed its Constellation.]

[The Fist that Grasps the Sun is recruiting new disciples for the first time in 233 years!]

[The Gatekeeper Guarding the Southeast has been released from its seal.]

[The Claws that Rend the Night Sky has been released from its seal.]

[The Soliloquy of Failure has been released from its seal.]

First and foremost, five Constellations that had been sealed by the Magic Tower were liberated.

Not all Constellations were fortunate enough to have devoted disciples like the [Berserker].

Some had been sealed for as long as 900 years, while others for a mere 200. An eternity in which some once-glorious Constellations had declined to the point where not a single disciple remained.

"The last disciple to worship me died 302 years ago."

Muttered one Constellation.

A beautiful Constellation with black hair so long it flowed across the floor like a carpet. [The Claws that Rend the Night Sky], true to its epithet, lifted its eyes into the void, which resembled the night sky.

"I was always a minor Constellation."

"What power do you govern?"

"It's hardly worth mentioning. If, in your lifetime, you've ever laid in a bed or someplace else, and reached out towards the night sky with the intention of scratching it with your nails, even just once, that would have been a gesture of faith towards me."

"....."

"How does that sound?"

The Constellation of the night sky smiled silently.

"Not too minor, right?"

"No, it's quite fascinating. I mean, it's not like you're pretending to be a god. Why would the Grey Spider nail down such a Constellation?"

"Who knows? She must have had her reasons. Perhaps she was annoyed every time someone reached out to the night sky and received a message from me. Or perhaps she coveted my power, being a Constellation herself. Maybe she was even trying to save me."

"Really?"

"Either way, I don't hold any grudges against her."

The Constellation, which until a few days ago had been pinned through the heart, having its mana siphoned for centuries, now gazed out the window with a shadowed look.

"Hatred is a potent energy. It sharpens the existence of both the sender and the receiver. Just like love, greed, or hope, it can keep someone who ought to die alive. King of Death. Our savior. Do you understand my words?"

"Yes."

I nodded, recalling the eternity of my 4000 days.

"I understand what you mean."

Our gazes met.

"I know it well."

"....."

Many things happened.

The spiders lost their spire but gained a mountainous arena and, as a bonus, the right to migrate to the world of the dead. The Mountain Calamity Tribe demonstrated their architectural prowess by constructing residential areas for the spiders.

The destinations for migration varied. Some wanted to live in the New Continent, others in the empire of Raviel, and some in Babylon.

"Most of them are mages who have lived for over a hundred years! Pure high-class talent!"

Black Dragon Witch, who had been struggling with a perennial shortage of skilled workers, was ecstatic.

"We can recruit these people as we please, right?"

"It doesn't really matter, but don't stop anyone from challenging them to a duel."

"Eh? What's that supposed to mean?"

I explained.

After hearing the whole story, Black Dragon Witch lamented.

"Why can't there be people who have both character and talent, no matter which world they're from? Not that I'm one to talk."

"I'm here, aren't I?"

"Right. You're not one to talk, indeed."

Black Dragon Witch sighed deeply and lay down.

"Alright. I keep saying this, but I'm not in a position to judge anyone... Anyway, you've had a tough time."

"Any problems here?"

"Focus on your own problems. We can handle ours. Oh, didn't Hamusutra say he wants to compile our adventures into a spin-off?"

"What is that even...?"

"I've nominated myself for the mukbang genre. How about 'Black Dragon Food Fighter' for the title? It's a story where I travel across worlds, eating delicious food. Sounds like a hit, doesn't it?"

"Seriously, what... I can see why you need some off-time. Take it easy. I'm off."

Whether or not 'Black Dragon Food Fighter' will come to fruition remains to be seen, but the competition for recruiting the Witch Clan was definitely on.

Even considering the occasional irrefutable challenges to life-and-death duels, the mages were undoubtedly valuable talents.

"I'll offer you double whatever offer you've received so far as a salary."

The ultimate victor in this competition was the Countess.

"Moreover, in our Merchants Union, we have an entire race of talented individuals known as the Fairy Tribe, well-versed in trade. It's like having a team of employees who are a joy to manage. Black Dragon, Temple of All Gods, they're all good places with noble causes. But why go there and suffer under the pretense of responsibility?"

"I swear my allegiance! Wow! My Queen!"

"Right, right. You understand me. But try to cry like a cat, if you can."

"Meow! Meow! Can you also protect my life? I really don't want to do duels...."

"That's impossible, I'm afraid."

"Dammit."

Thus, some spiders who had initially sworn allegiance to the Magic Tower, then to me, swore allegiance to the Merchants Union, all within a mere fortnight. Isn't this a lesson in life?

However, there were spiders who didn't align themselves with any faction.

"How could I do that?"

It was the former leader of the old Tower, the Grey Spider.

"Got any plans?"

"I have to take responsibility."

The Grey Spider said, sipping plain water from a paper cup.

"Have you seen the challenges that have come my way?"

"Yes."

I nodded, recalling the vast amount of paper that made the already scarce 50th-floor ecosystem a concern.

"There were a lot."

"Yes. And they'll keep coming... I have to accept them. I need to tie up loose ends. Only then can I move on. Do you understand what I mean?"

The Grey Spider's words were ambiguous.

Among those who sent the challenges, there would undoubtedly be those who couldn't sleep unless they tore the Grey Spider's flesh, whose water would scald until they saw the Grey Spider's corpse. Without settling the score with the Grey Spider in some way, they wouldn't be able to take a single step forward.

"Yes."

Again, I nodded, recalling the eternity of my 4000 days.

"I understand what you mean."

And so, the Grey Spider made the empty wasteland her new nest. Anyone who bore a grudge against her was welcome to come there and challenge her to a duel.

She would hardly be alone on any given day.

Only if that day ever came.

Even if a thousand years passed a thousand times over, it would still seem unlikely, but if there ever came a day when she woke up in the morning and went to bed at night without anyone seeking her out. If she were allowed the luxury of sipping a mouthful of water over an hour under the stretched-out midday sun.

Then, at last, the Grey Spider could move on. After a thousand years, she could rise from her place and finally head towards the next world.

I asked.

"What would you like to do when that time comes?"

The Grey Spider smiled.

In that smile, I remembered someone. Someone who knew they could die at any moment and thus, no longer put on airs or felt regret. It was a smile born from total acceptance, illuminated by pure brightness.

"Well, that would mean I'm quite fortunate."

The Grey Spider looked up.

It was nighttime, and since the place she had chosen to stay had no ceiling, the star-filled night sky stretched out endlessly above.

The Grey Spider reached out with her slender fingers towards it.

"If I'm that lucky, I might be able to climb the tower."

The Tower.

"Are you planning to challenge it again?"

"I've decided not to wait any longer."

I didn't ask any more questions.

The Grey Spider didn't say anything more either.

The three of us just looked up at the same night sky.

---

A fortnight that flowed as it should.

My work was wrapped up with arranging part-time jobs at 'Café Planetarium' for the disciples of Hamusutra. Seeing Hamusutra in a café uniform, the Assistant Writer screamed in delight.

"I've missed you, Head Librarian! Kyaa! What's this!?"

"I'm wondering the same thing..."

Hamusutra glared at me with rotten eyes. There was somewhat sufficient reason for resentment, as ten disciples simultaneously grabbed Hamusutra and vigorously rubbed their cheeks against his.

Given Hamusutra's small stature, it was fair to describe the situation as a hamster stuck between sofa cushions.

"Gong-Ja, did you not tell me that these people are essentially my stalkers, or something even more terrifying?"

The hamster protested as its cheeks were stretched.

"I'm grateful you saved my followers, but to bring them directly to me like this, I never asked for..."

"We'll never let you go, Librarian!"

"We'll be together forever."

"I'll spend the rest of my life working part-time here!"

"To think that living as a human could be so tough and bitter..."

Well, that's good. That's great.

Of course, there were those who were not so fortunate.

I'm not talking about Hamusutra.

The Mahos Army Commander asked the Assistant Writer.

"Wait a minute, Assistant Writer. Didn't you agree to ascend to the 51st floor with me?"

"Eh? Fuck off."

The Assistant Writer's mouth responded before her brain.

The Mahos Army Commander was disheartened. The Assistant Writer was flustered as he looked at him.

"Ah, that... um. There are things more important than life."

"What would that be?"

"Fandom."

Another person with rotten eyes was added to the Planetarium.

The Assistant Writer, on the other hand, was indignant.

"Ah, what! This is a line that only the real protagonist can say!"

May you find happiness in your fandom.

As humans under the sky stretch their hands to feel the edges of the world, to find a place to lean on, to stand for a moment, or to pass by, the Constellations came to me.

"I've thought long and hard about how to repay you."

[The Claws that Rend the Night Sky] spoke as a representative of the Constellations.

"It wasn't just me pondering; I discussed it with the other twelve Constellations. For a single hunter, especially one who has just reached the 50th floor, to be rewarded by several Constellations together... It's unprecedented."

"Thanks to you, I was able to reunite with my adorable little one..."

[The Whip that Descends on the Self-Abuser] added. She played with the night sky's hair spread across the floor.

"I thought about giving you a great weapon as a gift, but the holy sword at your hip seems more magnificent..."

"Honestly, you don't seem to have much desire for material things, which makes it difficult for us."

However, [The Claws that Rend the Night Sky] continued.

"But since you claim to be a successor of the Sword Emperor, fortunately, some of us knew what kind of gift a Sword Emperor might appreciate."

The night sky clasped its hands together.

"May this be the answer for you."

A soft light enveloped my body.

[The Claws that Rend the Night Sky acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 50th floor stage has been cleared!]

As my vision gradually whitened.

"May a Constellation that crafts a quest just for you appear someday... King of Death. Although we are not your dedicated Constellations, the existence of such a Constellation would be a very, very happy thing..."

The voice continued.

[The Whip that Descends on the Self-Abuser acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 51st floor has been cleared!]

And it went on.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 52nd floor has been cleared!]

The Constellations that participated in the rebellion.

[The Bell That Rouses the Dead acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 53rd floor has been cleared!]

One by one, those who had the right to judge whether a hunter was qualified to ascend to the next floor.

[The Last Sword Remaining in the Wilderness acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 54th floor has been cleared!]

They formed a single voice to address me.

[The Fist that Grasps the Sun acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 55th floor has been cleared!]

[The Gatekeeper Guarding the Southeast acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 56th floor has been cleared!]

[The Soliloquy of Failure acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 57th floor has been cleared!]

[The Lonely Seeker acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 58th floor has been cleared!]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 59th floor has been cleared!]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains acknowledges the quest completion.]

[The 60th floor has been cleared!]

Finally.

[Your existence becomes better defined.]

[The King of Death is leveling up.]

[Your skill slots have expanded.]

The next world unfolded before my eyes.

[You are now an S-rank hunter!]

[May fortune be with you.]

Chapter 314: I'm a Fan (1)

---

Even if it's just three times, that's enough.

In my life, please let me have my way.

In return, take everything I have.

I had stayed up all night, and upon reflection, only one choice remained.

---

"Are you the King of Death? What a grandiose alias. So grandiose it's almost laughable! Remember this, I am one of the Thirteen Evils. The one who crumbled the eternal cliffs. The master of all waves crashing against every shore, the ninth Sea Lord, the Pirate General, the Madman..."

Silence.

"I heard you defeated the Crazy Madman of the Blood Sea! Quite impressive. I hear you broke through a whopping 10 floors all at once! Indeed, without a doubt, you are the first divinity to appear in a long time since the Sword Emperor! But remember this. Every Constellation shining in the night sky was once called a divinity. To introduce myself, who imparts such profound enlightenment; oh what's the use of speaking! The Living Witness of Divine Miracles! The Thirteen Evils! The Pine Cone that Sings in the White Night, the Forester, even the aliases are terrifying..."

Silence.

"I won't be long-winded. The longer the tongue, the shorter the life. Be afraid. Tremble in fear. Today, I will impart to you one truth..."

Silence.

"Uh. Could you possibly spare my life? Of course, I might have tormented people a bit. No, quite a lot actually... Wait! Hold on! Stop! No, it's natural for people to become cranky when they live for 200 to 300 years! After indulging in every possible pleasure, what other joy could there be besides tormenting others! No. Wait. You shouldn't go in there... No, no! Please wait! That bloodstain isn't human! Really! ...Ah. Fuck, I forgot to clean up after killing..."

Silence.

"I have no regrets. You know? Torturing living beings is really enjoyable."

Silence.

"Do you think you're so great?"

Silence.

"Strong. The King of Death, huh. The Sword Emperor obtained the title of Emperor despite being just a hunter. What's next, a king? The Tower is indeed strange. Live a good life, cherish it and die a good death. If your life is inevitable, then fate must be imbued in your name too, and at this moment, my end is also not by chance."

Silence.

".....Damn it. Dammit! I-I didn't do anything wrong..."

Silence.

"This is infuriating."

"If only you twelve had attacked together from the start... Why did no one listen to me until it was reduced to three? Brothers, are you idiots? Thinking about it, you were idiots... To have your throats slit as a price for having your ears blocked, what a shitty exchange rate..."

"Uhahahaha! King of Death! Don't think you've won with this! Even if the Thirteen Evils are annihilated, there will be two, three, yes! As long as the will of our brothers continues, forever—"

Silence, silence, silence.

"Phew."

I wiped the sweat from my forehead with the back of my hand.

"It was truly a tough and long battle..."

[I rate it as a series of battles like a glittering epic drama!]

"Hmm. If it were filmed, it would've been planned as a 102-episode series, but it would've become a legendary chronicle continuing to part 2, 3, and finally part 4, cherished in love and attention. And it would've become an even more painful legend due to an unfortunate incident causing an abrupt halt to the broadcast..."

[I positively agree that it is indeed glittering!]

Guardian Spirit watched us self-praise with a look of disbelief.

-Are you shooting a comedy? You just slayed twelve hunters, that's all.

"Ah. Come to think of it, if it's called the Thirteen Evils, why were there only twelve? I should've asked before slaying them, but I forgot."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

-One of them was slain by me as I passed by 150 years ago.

"Indeed. Even after 150 years, they haven't replenished their numbers..."

Even the 60th floor is suffering from a manpower shortage.

While lamenting the reality that despite numerous hunters aspiring to ascend the Tower, the upper floors lacked hunters, I sheathed the holy sword.

-Hmm.

Guardian Spirit glanced over, with his arms crossed.

He wasn't looking at me.

The Guardian Spirit's gaze was directed beyond my shoulder, towards the fortress where the Thirteen Evils had lurked. The fortress was ablaze, emitting wisps of smoke. Even from a considerable distance, the pungent smell of burning wafted over.

-Zombie.

"I know."

I spoke nonchalantly.

"They're persistent. They've followed me again."

-How many days has it been? This is getting on my nerves. Hey, hey. Can't you just go and catch it? How long will you ignore it?

"It's just following me without showing any hostility, just watching. I plan to leave it alone unless it shows direct hostility towards me."

That's right.

I was being stalked. Probably.

I added "probably" because I truly had no idea who was following me, why, or for what purpose.

-What if it's an assassin?

Guardian Spirit proposed an extreme hypothesis.

-Considering you saved the spiders, there's more than one or two who bear a grudge against you now.

"If someone is so consumed by hatred that they must send an assassin to me just to get through the day, they would likely send the assassin to the spider they have a grudge against and not me, right?"

I shrugged and started walking.

"I even deliberately showed vulnerability yesterday and the day before when I was sleeping, just in case. But it never approaches after a certain distance."

-That's strange... What is it? Why is it following you?

"I guess it likes me."

-Ah. So it's someone with a rotten brain.

"At least their character isn't rotten unlike someone."

-Aaaargh?

"What? What is it?"

As usual, we deepened our friendship while walking through the forest path.

The unidentified X maintained a constant distance from me, neither getting closer nor going further.

"Ah."

While keeping the presence in the back of my mind, I suddenly thought.

"I'm thirsty. Is there a stream where just drinking the water cools down the stomach? There should be one in such a forest."

That was the moment.

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

Drip, drip, drip.

As I pushed through the forest and stepped out, a stream flowed conspicuously. Two animals resembling deer were dipping their noses in the water, lapping it up. It meant the water was safe to drink.

"Oh. Lucky."

I approached the stream without much thought. The deer on the other side glanced at me as if thinking, 'What's that ugly animal?' but I brushed them off.

A water bottle would have been convenient, but Homo Sapiens have hands.

I scooped up the water with my hands and gulped it down.

"Ah! So refreshing! Now I feel alive."

-.....

"Uh? What? Why are you looking at me like that? Got something to say?"

-No... It's just a bit strange.

"What exactly is strange?"

Guardian Spirit furrowed its brow.

-Kim Zombie, haven't you been too lucky these days?

"Excuse me?"

Too lucky?

"What are you talking about?"

-Think about it. Right when you got thirsty, a stream suddenly appeared. The same happened yesterday, the day before, and even the day before that. Actually, now that I think about it, you've been strangely lucky since ten days ago.

Really?

I wasn't so sure.

-Does it make any sense to have a water source wherever we go on this vast 60th floor?

Guardian Spirit passionately argued.

-And whenever you think it's time to get some sleep, there's always kindling nearby. It doesn't make sense. You're used to living in a world where drinking water and heating are taken for granted, but this kind of luck is really abnormal, you know?

"It's not exactly a world taken for granted..."

I furrowed my brows.

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

And I refuted Guardian Spirit's words.

"Sword Emperor, sir. That's not strange because, [knowing there was a water source in this direction], we deliberately chose this path, didn't we?"

-...What? What are you talking about?

"What are YOU talking about? We obtained information that there was a stream flowing here [in advance], and planned our route to avoid hunger and thirst. Before we even left the village."

-.....

Just as Guardian Spirit was about to speak.

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

Slowly, Guardian Spirit's expression turned ambiguous.

-...Right. That's true.

"Yeah. You told me to prepare thoroughly because the 60th floor is vastly different from the stages we've climbed so far, being extremely wide, and if we don't get geographic information in advance, we'll definitely get lost. So, after making an effort to gather geographic information in the village, why are you saying something different now?"

-Right... That's true. Hmm? It really is.

The Guardian Spirit crossed its arms.

-Why did I think your luck was strangely good...? It wasn't luck but the result of thorough preparation...?

"Exactly. Now you've got me hungry for no reason talking about weird things."

I sent out my aura and caught an animal resembling a deer. The deer, apparently not used to humans, didn't even show signs of wariness and was easily caught by me while it was drinking.

It was a simple hunt.

"Good thing there was meat nearby."

-.....

"Ah, there's dry firewood. Lucky. Let's have a barbecue today too."

-...Were the animals on the 60th floor always this tame? No. Wait a minute. Why are there normal animals here? From what I remember, this area was only swarming with demonic beasts...

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

-...But not only those. Hmm. Right. Aren't you being sneaky eating something delicious all by yourself?

"It feels fucking great."

-Bad guy.

"Good guy?"

-Weirdo.

That's when it happened.

"Owowow...!"

From the [opposite] direction of where we came, someone burst through the bushes. It was a small-statured girl. As soon as she reached the stream, she fell with a thud.

"Uh-oh."

Holding a freshly roasted deer leg, I quickly approached the girl.

"Are you alright?"

"Ugh... Meat... Meat..."

The girl sniffed around with a vacant expression, as if she was smelling with her soul rather than her body, driven by the scent of roasting deer meat.

Can't help it with the meat.

"Here you go. Eat slowly."

"Uuuu... Th-Thank you..."

The girl desperately gnawed on the leg I gave her.

"Cough! Ack, huk! W-Water...!"

"Here."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

"Drink this."

Conveniently, I had a [water bottle]. How fortunate. If I didn't have a water bottle, I would've had to scoop water with my hands for the girl, which would have been quite awkward to watch from the side.

"Hwa!"

The girl drank hurriedly, spilling water around her mouth. Gulping down, her throat vibrated, and finally, she seemed to be coming back to life.

"Thanks to you, I'm saved!"

"It's nothing. Wanderers should help each other in places like this."

"If you weren't here, I would have starved to death... You're a savior..."

The girl shyly looked up at me after casting her gaze down.

Despite wandering through the forest, her clothes and hair were relatively clean. There was a sense of hardship, but not dirtiness, perhaps?

More than anything, she was exceptionally beautiful. Really exceptionally beautiful. After meeting Raviel, I hardly thought about people's appearances, but this girl slightly distorted my ingrained habits.

I smiled gently.

"I'm glad I could help."

I was just thinking, though.

Raviel is much prettier.

"....."

The girl slightly furrowed her brows.

And then murmured under her breath.

".....Strange... Could it be... Yes, if it's like this..."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

I tilted my head.

"What did you just say?"

"Nothing."

Then the girl raised her head and smiled brightly.

"It's nothing!"

Her smile was radiantly bright.

No matter how long she had wandered in the forest, her ragged attire and numerous wounds didn't seem to match her spirit, but she tried her best to convey her gratitude to me with all her might.

A natural brightness shone on the girl's face.

"I haven't even asked for the name of my benefactor!"

"Ah."

"Benefactor, could you please tell me your name?"

I smiled.

"Of course. My alias is King of Death."

"King of Death... King of Death!?"

The girl was startled.

"If you're the King of Death, are you the one who recently cleared 10 floors all at once?"

"Um, yes. That's probably me."

"Wow! Amazing! How could such luck be...! The Constellations were all abuzz, wondering who it could be, and to run into you in a forest where I was lost!"

Thump.

The girl excitedly grabbed my hand.

"It's truly, truly an honor to meet you!"

With a smile that could dim even the sun.

"I'm a fan of you, King of Death!"

Chapter 315: I'm a Fan (2)

---

A series of curious events unfolded. The girl who introduced herself as my fan turned out to be, astonishingly, not a hunter but a Constellation.

"Can Constellations get lost or starve too?"

"Of course, King of Death."

The girl smiled broadly.

"Constellations come in all shapes and sizes!"

We happened to be going in the same direction, so we decided to accompany each other for a while. We chatted as we walked along the quiet forest path, with the rabbits and deer that peeked out from the bushes as our audience.

"I really don't have a single follower... There was one 600 years ago, but not a single one since then. Essentially, I've been living like a complete pauper."

"Really? So..."

I looked at the girl anew. Scanning her from head to toe. Dressed in rags, the girl looked just like a poor kid from the neighborhood.

"You're at least 600 years old...?"

"Maybe even ten times that. Constellations have a different sense of time from hunters! It's quite common to count ages up to a thousand, but after that, we just give up. It's meaningless, unrewarding, and no fun!"

That's terrifying.

"As a Constellation, you must have an alias. What is it?"

"Ugh. Of course, I have both an alias and a true name, but it's a bit embarrassing to tell it to such a respected person such as King of Death... But I'll muster my courage and tell you! Yes!

My name is..."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

"Wow."

I nodded.

Somehow, it felt like a good name.

It was a name that seemed truly made for this girl, smiling brightly before me, perfectly fitting her persona.

"It's a nice name. Why be embarrassed? It's a great name."

"I-Is it? Ahaha. If the King of Death says so, it must be. Um! I'm embarrassed..."

The girl laughed softly, scratching her cheek with her index finger. Her gesture seemed very innocent. I smiled warmly and looked around.

"Now, where was it in this direction?"

"Is there somewhere you want to go?"

"I was thinking of stopping by a city or town to get some supplies. Preferably a large town..."

I wanted to buy at least one set of clothes for this Constellation-like girl. As I was thinking this, the girl suddenly raised her hand.

"Ah!"

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

"There's such a place just off this road!"

Turning in the direction the girl pointed, I enhanced my vision with aura and peered into the distance. True to the girl's words, there was a city in that direction.

"Oh, really."

We headed towards it. Upon arrival, it was neither too large nor too small, exactly the kind of settlement I had hoped for in my mind.

I entered a clothing store. The wind chime on the door jingled. The middle-aged shop owner, who had been reading a book inside, looked up.

"Welcome."

"Hello. I'm here to look at some clothes."

I pointed out the window.

In the middle of the street stood a small girl in rags, staring this way.

"I'd like to buy something for that girl. Something comfortable to wear. Do you have anything good?"

"That girl?"

The shopkeeper looked puzzled as he peered out the window.

"Where's the girl you're talking about?"

"Right there. That girl in rags."

"Hmm? Sorry, but I don't see anyone. I don't know what you're..."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

"Ah, that girl."

The old man adjusted his glasses. Perhaps his vision had deteriorated with age? The old man seemed slightly embarrassed by his mistake and smiled awkwardly.

"Sorry about that. So, the tender girl needs some clothes. Did you say something comfortable? Just give me a moment, and I'll bring something out."

"Ah, thank you, sir."

"Everything is business, after all."

I paid the price and handed the clothes to the girl.

Blink.

The girl looked up at me, puzzled.

"What's this for, King of Death?"

"It's a gift."

A wide, white robe.

Although white might seem prone to stains, it was actually a magic item impervious to dirt. The robe was enchanted with both warmth and cooling magic. It could even serve as a sleeping bag when camping, and with many pockets inside, it offered ample storage space.

"I thought such a robe would come in handy, more so than fancy clothes. Want to try it on?"

"....."

Hesitantly, the girl put on the robe.

"Oh, it looks good."

The robe suited the girl's inherently innocent demeanor well. I felt a strange sense of pride as I examined her from all angles.

"But isn't it a bit big?"

Everything was fine except the robe seemed too bulky for the girl's body, almost 1.5 times too large.

"That's strange. I thought it would fit perfectly..."

"No. It's fine."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

"It's okay if it's this size, I think."

The girl pulled her hand out from the sleeve. Just a moment ago, her hand had been buried in the sleeve, but now it barely overlapped her wrist. The fit didn't seem excessively wrong.

"Good to hear. I must have been mistaken."

I smiled warmly at the girl.

"It was brief, but I enjoyed our time together."

"....."

"Be careful not to get lost in the forest next time. You can't always count on someone like me being around. I'll be on my way now."

Just as I was about to turn and leave.

"Ki-King of Death! Wait a moment!"

The girl grabbed my sleeve.

"Yes?"

"Well..."

The girl hesitated. Her lips parted, but her tongue seemed to lose its way inside her mouth. After a moment, she bit her lip and looked up at me.

I could briefly glimpse the myriad thoughts crossing through the girl's eyes.

"So..."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

What could it be?

Just as I was about to ask, I was interrupted.

“—I've found you.”

It wasn't the girl's voice nor was it mine.

"I've been looking for you for a long time."

".....!"

I swiftly turned towards the source of the voice, gripping the hilt of the holy sword. The voice had come precisely twelve steps away from me, and I had failed to notice any presence until [the other party came within twelve steps].

The implication was clear.

The opponent was an incredibly skilled master.

-Zombie.

'Yes.'

Guardian Spirit warned me in a subdued voice. Knowing well what he was warning about, I nodded.

'...Among the hunters I've met on the 60th floor, he is the strongest by far. That guy.'

He was a man dressed in dark robes.

"I thought you'd run somewhere, but hiding in a village of all places. I wonder if you were trying to hide a tree in the forest, but you weren't the only one with that idea."

The man wore a conical hat, which was so tattered that it was full of holes. It did nothing to shield from rain or snow, and it even failed to hide the man's face.

Through the holes in the conical hat, the man's eyes glaringly looked my way.

"You're hanging around with strange folks, I see."

"....."

"Come with me. You wouldn't want to see blood flow in the streets, would you?"

The grip on my sleeve tightened.

The girl, completely terrified, clung to me.

".....Hmm."

I subtly shifted to shield the girl from the man's gaze. The man with the conical hat frowned.

"What are you?"

"I don't know who you are or why you want to take this child. But the moment you ask [what are you] instead of [who are you] upon first meeting someone, it already shows what kind of person you are."

"Interesting."

The man with the conical hat sneered.

"You know how to judge a person's character but you can't assess strength. Usually, such people die first. You've done well to make it to the 60th floor."

"Perhaps it means I'm not your average person?"

"If your head really survives this and you don't die, I'll acknowledge it."

Chaaang!

What happened in the following instant was as follows.

The man drew his sword and swung it first. A black aura surged, slicing through the air between us in an instant. However, when the distance of twelve steps was reduced to six, my sword stroke intercepted the man's attack.

"....."

The man's eyes widened, seemingly surprised.

Then, whoosh! From three directions—southeast, behind, and west—throwing stars flew towards me. The man wasn't alone; he had brought accomplices and had them lie in wait, but I had already sensed the hostility of the three, and before the throwing stars could come within twenty steps, I intercepted them.

"Huh."

The man's eyes widened a bit more.

A pedestrian, just an ordinary one walking down the street who happened to be near me, suddenly drew a dagger from his bosom and charged. He, too, was one of the man's companions. I reinforced my hand with aura and firmly caught the dagger. Twisting the hand, "Kuhak?!" I shattered the arm up to the shoulder and sent the man flying backward.

That was the full account of what transpired in that brief moment.

"...Not bad."

"Hiiiiek!"

As if time, which had briefly paused, started to flow again, screams erupted from the streets. People, belatedly realizing there was a fight, hurriedly moved away.

Only I and the girl remained.

The man with the conical hat and his companions remained on the road.

"You've got the nerve for such bold words, huh."

"Let's just say I have the ability to discipline the arrogant."

"You knew who we were before you resisted, didn't you?"

"Well, I'm not sure. Hmm. I don't really know."

I stroked my chin.

"Maybe, just a bunch of scumbags trying to drag away a powerless Constellation...?"

"....."

The man with the conical hat's expression became increasingly interesting to watch. Still, it lacked entertainment value. A man's life is his face. Let's make it more interesting.

"Ah. So you're so poor you keep wearing the same conical hat because you can't afford a new one. I see your organization is broke. Should I sponsor you? I have so much money it's practically rotting. I can save up to four beggars like you. Five is tough though. You guys decide who to drop out by drawing straws."

"Decided."

The man with the conical hat gripped her long sword more tightly.

"I'll cut off your tongue and feed it to the dogs."

The blade gleamed with ominous energy.

It wasn't honed through ordinary means of cultivating aura.

"King of Death..."

Behind me, the girl's anxious voice trembled. Wondering whether she should seek help or if she was just being a burden. I gently winked at her, who was caught between two emotions.

"It's okay."

"....."

The girl bowed her head deeply.

Meanwhile, the man with the conical hat assumed a stance.

"I am the leader of the Blood Demon God Cult, the Blood Demon."

".....Huh?"

I blinked.

"The Blood Demon?"

"Yes."

"The Blood Demon God Cult? So, a cult? With 'Blood' added in front?"

"Indeed."

The man with the conical hat smirked, seemingly pleased with my reaction.

"It's too late for regrets now. Of course, if you cut off your own tongue as an apology, I might forgive you. Spend your life as a mute, repenting for your arrogance. I am generous to those who can chastise themselves..."

"What's that? A total pseudo-religious cult?"

"....."

Abruptly.

The man with the conical hat stopped talking.

I was flabbergasted.

"What's with all this pseudo-religious cult leader strutting around saying 'I am this, I am that'? Blood Demon God? Cult? If it's a cult, it's a cult, if it's a demonic cult, it's a demonic cult, but where did this 'Blood Demon' mongrel come from?"

"What..."

"Hey. Who gave you permission to use 'cult' in your group's name? Now that I look at it, you're not beggars. I misspoke. Hey, even the Beggar's Sect has more roots than you. Know this; if the Beggar's Sect complains about you, 'What kind of rootless rabble are you?' the authorities will side with them."

"....."

"And Blood Demon is a title for a demon. One of the Four Demon Lords I have is called Blood Demon. Not even close to being a leader, but a title used by someone below the leader. Tsk. Where do you get off being so arrogant? Do you want a spanking? Want to get hit?"

"You....."

"Anyway, those who come from martial worlds always seem to lack manners the most. Please act according to your level, really, according to your level. Now, let's start the negotiation. First, remove the 'demon' from your signboard. Remove 'god' too. I'll acknowledge the 'Blood Cult' part."

"I'll kill you."

The man's face twisted like a demon's.

"I'll definitely kill you!"

No.

Why is a pseudo-religious cult leader getting angry?

The pot is calling the kettle black.

Chapter 316: I'm a Fan (3)

---

The battle with the Blood Demon was truly a scene reminiscent of mountains of corpses and seas of blood.

---

I blinked.

"Huh...?"

What just happened?

It felt like an eternity had passed, yet it also seemed like only a moment had gone by.

It was as if the sense humans have to perceive time had momentarily been paralyzed. To give an example, it was similar to the sensation of being under anesthesia for medical treatment from an Apothecary.

"King of Death. King of Death! Please come to your senses, King of Death!"

Before I knew it, I was lying down. When, why, and where I had lain down were all difficult to discern.

I can't quite remember.

What's clear is the face of the person sobbing in front of me. A boy, an all-too-familiar boy, held both of my hands, looking as though he might burst into tears at any moment.

*"The girl" from the previous chapter is now "a boy". It's not a translation error or author inconsistency, the character themselves switched genders.

"Are you alright? Please come to your senses."

"Where is this..."

"You've been injured while you were fighting with the Blood Demon. It was a dishonorable fight. While it was 1-on-1, the elite members of the Blood Demon God Cult joined the fight..."

The boy wiped his tears on my sleeve. It seemed as though the floodgates to his eyes had broken, as tears streamed endlessly, causing me concern just from watching.

"Fight... injuries..."

"Ah, please don't move recklessly...!!"

The boy urgently stopped me as I tried to get up.

"You've sustained severe internal injuries, King of Death! Your body is in shambles... bones shattered and organs torn to shreds... just a moment ago, I feared you might never open your eyes again!"

That's when it happened.

"—Ugh?!"

As the boy said, a surge of pain swept through my body. I tried to circulate aura and check my condition. Snap! My ki pathways twisted. Crunch! It felt like a thorny club was ravaging the insides of my veins.

"Ugh, kuh... uh..."

"Ah, what should I do? Wh-what can I do? How can this be fixed?"

It hurts. It feels like death. My eyes are drying up. My cheeks feel cool. The sensation in my fingertips has evaporated. Only pain remains. It's as if someone is peeling off my skin layer by layer, like peeling an orange.

No human could endure such pain.

I could, just because I had died to the point of death.

"Aah."

Suddenly.

From beyond my consciousness, a delighted sigh fluttered.

"Really, what should be done...?"

The scene faded into darkness.

"....."

I opened my eyes.

Again, it felt like a long time had passed, or perhaps, I had merely taken a breath.

What had changed since I lost consciousness was that my mind was somewhat clearer and the boy was coming toward me with a tray of porridge, having donned an apron.

"Ah, please eat. Mister."

"Ah."

The Constellation spooned up some invisible porridge and fed it to me.

The boy scooped up some porridge with a wooden spoon and fed it to me.

"....."

Huh?

"How does it taste?"

The Constellation looked at me expressionlessly.

The girl smiled affectionately.

"I specially made your favorite porridge."

The Constellation murmured softly.

The boy hesitated.

"Is the taste alright?"

"....."

The scent of anchovies wafted in my mouth.

When I was young and caught a cold, the director used to grate apples for me. He would then cook white rice porridge with tiny anchovies added. The grated apple tasted different from the usual apple, just as the porridge tasted different from usual. The bloated anchovies were tasteless but became somewhat chewy if you kept chewing, and they had a subtly nutty flavor.

"Yes. It's delicious."

"Phew, that's a relief."

The Constellation smiled, lifting the corners of his mouth.

The girl let out a sigh of relief.

"It was a real crisis. I merely wished for an enemy to block your path, but out of nowhere, a formidable enemy appeared. It seems you unconsciously believe that [nothing less than this level of strength can hinder you]."

"Yes?"

"No?"

The Constellation spoke as if it were nothing.

The boy tilted his head slightly.

"Did I just say something, Mister?"

"....."

"Why were you so angry at the Blood Demon? Even when attacked, you were dignified, but suddenly hearing about the Blood Demon God Cult, you became agitated. Honestly, I was a bit surprised."

"Ah."

My mind was foggy.

"Because I'm the Vice-lord of a place called the Demonic Cult..."

"Ah."

"I place significant meaning on the two words Demonic Cult. I believe it's a name that shouldn't be used lightly. The fact that mere riffraff dared to mention a cult similar to the Demonic Cult made me enraged."

"Indeed. Indeed."

The Constellation rested his chin on his hand and stared intently at me.

The girl nodded thoughtfully.

"So, that's your sore spot...?"

Hmm.

"I'm curious about the Demonic Cult. If it holds such deep meaning for you, there must have been someone precious. Would you share your story with me?"

.....

"Ah. You had a master called So BaekHyang. It sounds lonely, yet clear, like a fragrance that tickles the nose."

.....

"You love someone named Raviel Ivansia. Heh, she's that beautiful? Ah. Indeed. So that's why no matter how hard I tried, you never fell for any beauty tricks. Troublesome indeed. Being the loved one is the easiest and most powerful way. But with such a deeply engraved presence in your heart, any manipulation would backfire. Scary. Terrifying. I must be careful."

Huh.

".....Did I just say something?"

"Yes? No."

The Constellation caressed my cheek.

The boy grinned with a soft smile.

“Are you not saying anything, Mister?”

Is that so?

It was.

“However, the presence of the Sword Emperor is a bit of a nuisance. A Guardian Spirit, no less. It must have taken a long time for my powers to take hold because of that. What to do...? If I remove it, I'd be too far from the current Mister. No choice then. Yes, it'll be a bit tiring, but I'll take care of both of you.”

Swoosh!

An arrow flew towards me.

-Hey, Zombie Kim! What are you doing!

The Guardian Spirit shouted incredulously.

-Losing focus during a fight, have you become so complacent, thinking you're some high-and-mighty expert who has devoured the heavens!?

Ah.

Right.

Currently, we were raiding the stronghold of the Blood Demon God Cult, in the midst of purging the enemy.

Because... how I ended up attacking this place was...

“Mister!”

I lifted my head towards the direction of the voice.

“Over here!”

The girl.

I had run into her by chance in the forest two weeks ago, and though she was once a Constellation, she had now lost all her power. Along with the Thirteen Evils, there were cults like the Blood Demon God Cult on this 60th floor, not just them but also the God Demon Sect, White Demon Sect, and the Mad Demon Sect, collectively known as the Four Demons.

They were all...

Aiming to kidnap this boy for their nefarious uses.

Just like the Magic Tower.

Due to being bedridden a few days ago, I couldn't do anything but watch as the girl was kidnapped.

That was something I couldn't possibly accept.

“Please save me...!”

The boy's scream snapped me back to reality. Right, what's there to hesitate about? Deep within this fortress, the girl was chained to a pillar with iron chains.

No matter if she had lived for thousands of years or was once a Constellation, the child now was fragile. A fragile being. Someone must protect her. It just so happened to be me.

“Yes. Awaken in such a manner.”

From the far reaches of my mind. No, the very bottom of my consciousness. Perhaps from the highest sky, a distant voice echoed.

“What will you do now?”

“I will save the boy.”

I answered firmly. Answered? No. In this fortress-like castle, countless arrows flew at me, and I barely managed to fend them off one by one. Because, uh, because...

“Even though you haven't fully recovered from the injuries sustained in the fight against the Blood Demon, do you still intend to save the boy?”

“Yes.”

“If so, the Blood Demon would come out and ask, [To think you'd dare confront us with a body no better than a rag, it's utterly ludicrous. Are you seeking death?] The Blood Demon seems to have been wounded in the previous bloody battle as well, but look... there are hundreds of trustworthy subordinates around him....”

"....."

“Ah. How unfortunate. An arrow has flown and struck your thigh.”

Throb.

Pain surged through my thigh. It hurt. I almost kneeled.

“What will you do? Will you swing your sword again?”

The Constellation slowly stroked my thigh.

The boy cried out, calling for me.

“...Yes.”

“Really? You might really die at this rate?”

The Constellation chuckled.

The boy started crying.

“Arrows continue to rain down from the sky, piercing you.”

“I dodge.”

“Yes, you are strong. Your aura can indeed cover the sky and block the rain of arrows. But at that moment, the internal injuries you sustained flare up in agony.”

Crunch!

It was the sound of the pain of bones being torn apart coursing through my entire body.

“Argh.”

“Does it hurt?”

“Gah. Uh, ah! Damn, it...!”

“Let me ask again. Does it hurt?”

“Damn... these, bastards. Getting all high and mighty with their bow skills.”

“One last time, I'll ask. King of Death, where does it hurt, how does it hurt, and how much does it hurt? Please answer me. It would please me to hear it.”

It was torturous.

“My body.”

As if it was burning, no.

It was actually burning.

My body, which needed rest and recuperation for a while now, was being burnt by my own aura. Normally, the aura should first protect the bones, blood vessels, muscles, and nerves before being utilized. But in the current situation, I had no capacity to protect myself.

"Ah....."

My veins burst with the pressure, scorching all my muscles like flowing lava. The aura pooled in my blood vessels, melting my bones into a mushy mess.

"Oh dear."

The Constellation reveled in my agony.

The girl cried out in despair at my pain.

"How could this be..."

My breath was toxic.

“So adeptly, [pain] can be imagined, can't it?”

“Ugh, ah. Gah....., ugh.”

“All I did was say you were hit by an arrow, Mister. I simply laid out the situation you would face if you came to rescue me, having been kidnapped. But how could you... how could you imagine it so vividly, to this extent?”

It's amazing, someone seemed to murmur.

“Incredible. It's as if, as if you've really experienced [agonizing death] before...? But that can't be. It shouldn't be. How can you imagine such pain? Have you experienced your bones melting before? Have your blood vessels ever burnt up? How do you know such pain to recreate it under my power...?”

I pressed forward despite the pain.

Arrows struck my shoulder and forearm but I ignored them. Pushing my aura to its limits, I stepped forward and slashed through the ranks of the Blood Demon God Cult who had tied the boy to the pillar.

“Without a doubt...”

The Constellation reached out and cupped my cheeks.

The boy sobbed, bound tightly to the pillar.

“You are the one I’ve been waiting for since thousands of years.”

Just a little more.

“For someone you’ve only known for a few days, you throw your life into the fray, facing pain worse than death, not just in words, not out of ignorance, but knowing what death and pain are, yet you still move forward...”

Just a little more.

“You, perhaps, can imagine any quest I set forth. If I say you’re in the middle of the ocean facing death, you’ll truly find yourself drowning in the sea. Drowning. It's a different dimension from the mediocre hunters who suck up to you—you will truly imagine every crisis, every pain, every death as they are. I have waited only for someone like you to ascend.”

Finally.

My blade struck the Blood Demon.

Blood splattered.

“You are my third disciple.”

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

“I will create quests for you. I'll continue the campaign. I'll create a world where you can feel a sense of achievement and joy. I'll become a god just for you. I only ask for one thing. Trust me, Mister.”

A bright smile emerged from the blood-stained scene.

“Will you trust me?”

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ invites you to their faith.]

[Will you accept ■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ as your Constellation?]

Darkness enveloped my vision.

Chapter 317: Me and You, on the Frontlines of Time (1)

---

[Congratulations.]

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ has become your Constellation.]

[You have become the sole disciple of ■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■
■■■.]

It felt like a dream.

A dream which wasn't mine, but someone else's.

-.....

The dream seemed both long and short, meddling with my sense of time. It was as if I was standing in the middle of a stream with the waters wrapping around both my sides at their own distinct paces.

The sensation of being devoured by time.

-Hmm.

Tick.

A day had passed.

Or at least, it felt like a day had passed.

-This is definitely fucked up.

‘What?’

-Never mind. It's useless to speak now. I'm also under the dominion of a power. Even if I spout nonsense right now, it'll just distort your memory, and surprisingly, mine as well.

‘...What are you talking about?’

-I'm simply stating a very obvious truth of life that speaking is often futile. I'm informing you, Zombie, that you've transitioned from a physical zombie to a temporal one.

What the hell?

-How do we deal with this nasty motherfucker?

The Guardian Spirit muttered emotionlessly.

-Simply distorting memories would have been manageable, but this is likely [world manipulation]. Beyond the 60th floor, it's filled with perverted lunatics. It's lamentable that a pervert has attached to you, but thinking about it, it's fitting. Kim Zombie, this bastard, has all the qualities to attract all sorts of perverts in the universe.

‘...So, what exactly are you talking about?’

-What to do.

The Guardian Spirit's eyes sank.

Ignoring my question, the Guardian Spirit was lost in his own world.

-How to kill this nasty son of a bitch?

At that moment.

“Mister?”

A very familiar voice gently tugged at my ears. Following the voice, I naturally turned my head and saw the [adorably precious] boy tilting his head in confusion.

“Do you have something troubling you...?”

“Ah.”

His anxious expression and his worried gaze.

Every expression and gesture of the boy, perhaps even his very existence, flickered like a candle flame.

I wanted to protect that fragile and pitiful being.

“It’s nothing. Just...”

- Hey, don't talk about me. Let's see what happens.

“...Just lost in thought.”

My mouth felt dry. The thought of having to lie to this pure boy, to hide something from my [only Constellation] and [unique god], brought an unimaginably deep sense of guilt.

“Hmm.”

The boy smiled with his eyes.

“Is that so? Mister, you're quite the thinker.”

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

“Thinking deeply is a sign of kindness, I believe.”

Saying that, the boy leaned his head against my forearm. A pleasant scent wafted to my nose. For some reason, it was a fragrance I really liked... a fresh scent I seemed to have smelled somewhere else, from someone else.

-Hmm.

While enjoying this blissful moment, the Guardian Spirit spoke to me after days.

-This is definitely fucked up.

‘What?’

-Never mind. It's useless to speak now. I'm also under the dominion of a power. Even if I spout nonsense right now, it'll just distort your memory, and surprisingly, mine as well.

‘...What are you talking about?’

-Is this the first time you're hearing what I just said?

What the hell?

‘I knew you weren't in your right mind, but you've never been this off before. Maybe you're missing the Grey Spider? Sword Emperor, loneliness is an incurable disease.’

-Fine. Fuck. That's just great.

The Guardian Spirit smirked.

-So, [any memory or event that interferes with their power] is automatically erased, huh? Definitely. It's a Lexical Star-class Constellation.

".....?"

-Ah, please, I beg you, act a bit. If you weren't a Hunter, you might have been an actor. Is asking for a tiny miracle of not showing everything on your face too much to expect from you? Am I expecting too much from the world?

‘...It feels quite unpleasant, but for now, I’ll grant you that miracle.’

-Thanks.

Tick.

A day had passed.

“We’ve finally defeated the remnants of the Blood Demon Sect, Mister!”

The boy rejoiced.

“Who would have thought that the Mad Demon Sect, White Demon Sect, and God Demon Sect were connected behind the Blood Demon Sect! And that a final boss named Heavenly Demon was hiding among the four factions! Unforgivable!”

“For Mister, the title of Heavenly Demon is more than just a name. You can't forgive them either, right?”

Indeed.

I am now traveling with the boy through the 61st floor.

It feels like a week has passed in the blink of an eye.

“To audaciously claim the name of the demonic cults and even dare to misuse the title of Heavenly Demon among four places. They are cruel bastards!”

During this time, we had been defeating the false demonic cults.

We defeated the Blood Demon and destroyed the cult that kidnapped the boy. While rescuing the boy, we learned many things. That he was a Constellation who had lost his power. That he was on the brink of extinction without even a single disciple to believe in him.

『I will become your disciple.』

I told him that.

The boy cried and embraced me, saying he too would become my Constellation. Though powerless, he would create quests solely for me, and urged that we both keep our spirits up until we reach the 100th floor together.

『We pledge to accompany each other for life.』

Certainly, that was the case.

『A single Hunter and a fragment of a Constellation.』

This is our story alone.

-Huh.

For some reason, the Guardian Spirit laughed merrily.

-This is ridiculous. No wonder a Lexical Star-class Constellation like Hamusutra would be in charge of the beginner's stage. They might be the same kind of perverts, but at least they don't consider the world their personal property. It's actually a given, but there's no Constellation fulfilling this obvious role. Think about it. How scarce must talents be for someone like Hamusutra to guide newbies?

This is some local broadcast-level shit.

“Alright! Mister, let's set off!”

The boy, with his arms crossed, smiled brightly.

“This time, it's a quest to beat down those White Demon Sect bastards! My one and only disciple!”

I smiled back.

“Yes, let's go right away, my god.”

-I'm just curious, but if I say the exchange between you two just now seemed extremely absurd to me, would this also be censored by the world?

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

‘Huh? What did you just say?’

-Got it. Fuck. This bastard is being childish, see.

We continued our journey.

The White Demon Sect disciples were lawless villains.

Every first day of the month, the White Demon Sect descended upon the twelve worlds they had colonized, gathering three hundred children as offerings for human sacrifices. They sacrificed the lives of these children to build their inner strength, which they referred to as demonic power (魔功).

I was enraged.

『Such evil is absolutely intolerable by the King of Death.』

Tick.

A day had passed.

『The King of Death did not hesitate in eradicating the false demonic disciples. In the eyes of the King of Death, they were clearly evil. There was no need to consider their circumstances. No need to ponder their past. No need to understand their hearts. Without a second thought, simply, the sword had to be swung.』

Tick.

Another day went by.

『A fight where one does not need to yield oneself, a fight where it's okay not to accept others, how pleasant is that? How enjoyable. How blissful. Perhaps the King of Death had long been thirsty for the joy of simply forgetting oneself and fighting.』

Tick.

Another day passed.

-If you're going to be childish, then I'll join you.

With every passing day, a ticking sound was heard from somewhere. It was a sound that quickly faded into oblivion, resembling the ticking of a clock's second hand or the sound of someone freely typing away on a typewriter.

-I don't expect much from you, Zombie.

As if playing the keys of a piano.

-But do this one thing for me.

‘Ah, what now?’

-Every dawn, I'll recite a sentence. Just don't forget those. Don't worry. They won't be sentences that threaten your adorable god. They won't shake the world, just meaningless sentences.

‘...So, you're basically talking nonsense.’

-Yeah. Nonsense.

The Guardian Spirit smiled.

His gaze wasn't on me but on someone else, beyond my shoulder, into the void.

-So, one sentence a day. Utterly useless nonsense. You can remember that much, right?

'Let's hear it then.'

-This year is bound to be a jackpot because it's a bumper crop full of bullshit, even though it was made in a hurry.

'.....'

Pure, unadulterated nonsense, right?

If you squeezed it, nonsense juice would gush out.

-Remember it.

However, the Guardian Spirit's face was deadly serious.

-Forget it, and you're dead.

‘...Is there any significance to using a part of my life's disk space for this beyond being a mere collection of fragments?’

-Remember it before I chuck your entire life into the trash bin, you bastard. It's one sentence a day. I won't say anything more today, so please just listen.

'Hmm.'

It was rare for the Guardian Spirit to beg like this.

The atmosphere was slightly overwhelming due to his intense expression.

I sighed.

‘Alright, alright. I’ll remember it, happy?’

Tick.

Another day went by.

Every dawn, or at least when I felt it was dawn, the Guardian Spirit casually dropped a line.

-The sovereign is a saintly king, right? But the one who is the general now is a famed commander.

‘.....’

-You seem to want to say something, but just burn it into your brain. Do I really need to beg you to listen to me?

‘No, you don’t have to go that far. It just seems you’re being incredibly stupid. It’s pitiful...’

-Great. Feel pity all you want. Let’s see how it goes.

Tick.

Another day passed.

I successfully suppressed the White Demon Sect disciples. It was a grueling quest. The sorcerers who had been conducting human sacrifices for hundreds of years were powerful, and the strength they had accumulated was solid, irrespective of their karma. Evil deeds. Wicked acts. Villains. They were like a trifecta of cruelty, and I had to give my all to defeat them.

-The evening brings me joy, because it's blessed by that saintess.

Tick.

Yet, the arduous battle was inexplicably enjoyable. Upon reflection, I seemed to love the act of clashing with full force.

Was that why I felt a surge of joy deep within my heart when I faced off against the Grey Spider of the Tower?

-Let's become conmen in the local mart! That's the only way to enjoy the life of a star.

Tick.

The journey with the boy became more enjoyable as days passed. The world was still overflowing with such clear-cut evils. Harm did not beget harm, and perpetrators did not pretend to be victims. They were the kind of villains one could cleanly slice through without hesitation.

-Terror be gone, death stay away.

Tick.

Still, the Guardian Spirit kept spouting meaningless nonsense.

Another day went by.

-Kim Gong-Ja, you're too fucking floaty, you fucker. I want to vomit.

'.....'

I just let it be.

Just as I remained myself, the Guardian Spirit would always be the Guardian Spirit.

After all, while people could change, the Sword Emperor couldn't just be replaced.

-Mister.

The seventh day.

-Do you trust me?

Today, too, we were dusting off false demonic disciples. After the Blood Demon Sect, God Demon Sect, and White Demon Sect, only the Mad Demon Sect remained. After smashing the enemy's outpost, we joyfully headed towards the Mad Demon Sect's lair.

“Ehehehe~.”

The boy even hummed a little tune as he walked ahead. Watching his back, I felt proud. It was as if the canvas of my heart was being painted with the color of happiness.

The Guardian Spirit was like ashes randomly sprinkled on a colorful canvas.

‘No, I don’t trust you.’

-I trust you.

What's this?

Chills ran down my spine.

‘Are you insane?’

-But it's not just you I trust. I also trust Gramps Marcus.

'.....'

-I know it's funny to say "also," because Gramps isn't your substitute. But I trust you understand what I mean.

The Guardian Spirit's voice dissolved into thin air.

-To be honest, it's okay if you fail.

'.....'

-Trust means believing that each other will do their best. And "best" is not something defined by others but by oneself. Hence, a trusting relationship means each party deciding on their best and accepting each other's decisions. That's all there is to it.

‘Do you know that I'm really scared right now?’

I was serious.

Even if he cursed and swore at me 24/7, it wouldn't be as bone-chilling as this moment.

‘What exactly are you trying to say with such a prelude?’

-Just listen to me for once.

‘I am listening.’

-No.

The Guardian Spirit looked at me intently.

-Listen carefully.

-Do you remember the nonsense I've been spouting for a week?

‘I remember.’

-Your memory is shit. Do you really remember everything?

‘After you threatened me like that, should I just ignore it?’

And my memory is fine. It's just that yours is freakishly good, that's all.'

-Good to know.

The Guardian Spirit nodded slightly.

-Then recite them.

'Out loud?'

-No. In your head.

'.....'

Fine.

I closed my eyes.

"...Huh? Mister?"

Perhaps because I suddenly stopped, the boy, who was walking ahead, also halted and turned to look back at me.

“Sorry, please wait a moment, my god.”

I asked for his patience.

I focused quietly.

‘The nonsense spoken by the Guardian Spirit.’

The image was of etching white letters onto a black canvas.

For an aura user, whose work involved manifesting products of consciousness externally, this wasn't a difficult task.

I lined up the sentences from the past 7 days like bricks, one after the other.

This year is bound to be a jackpot because it's a bumper crop full of bullshit even though it was made in a hurry.

The sovereign is a saintly king, right? But the one who is the general now is a famed commander.

The evening brings me joy, because it's blessed by that saintess.

Let's become conmen in the local mart! That's the only way to enjoy the life of a star.

Terror be gone, death stay away.

Kim Gong-Ja, you're too fucking floaty, you fucker. I want to vomit.

It wasn't a difficult task.

However, the reason the Guardian Spirit had to say [such things].

To find that out, I accelerated the time of my consciousness.

'He's not the kind to utter such embarrassing lines with mere nonsense.'

What could it be?

What kind of trick had he played?

'What did the Guardian Spirit say?'

I recalled.

Somehow, inexplicably, parts of my memory were eaten away as if by worms.

Yet, I could still recall some voices.

『This is definitely fucked up.』

I remember.

But this alone doesn't serve as a clue.

『Is this the first time you're hearing what I just said?』

This too.

『Alright.』

Then, this?

『If you're going to be childish, then I'll join you.』

I paused my accelerated consciousness for a moment on this timeline.

"....."

Childish.

The Sword Emperor is originally a childish person.

Therefore.

Taking the first letter of what the Guardian Spirit said:

‘This’ year is bound to be a jackpot because it’s a bumper crop full of bullshit even though it was made in a hurry

‘The’ sovereign is a saintly king, right? But the one who is the general now is a famed commander

‘The’ evening brings me joy, because it’s blessed by that saintess

‘Let’s’ become comen in the local mart! That’s the only way to enjoy the life of a star

‘Terror’ be gone, death stay away

‘Kim’ Gong-Ja, you’re too fucking floaty, you fucker. I want to vomit

"....."

No, that's not it.

It makes no sense.

Even if I take the last word and sound it out... hurrycommandersaintessstarawayvomit? No. Even combining them in my head doesn't form a plausible message. Wait, just a moment.

Just a moment.

This year is bound to be a jackpot because it's a bumper crop full of bullshit even though it was made in a 'hurry'.

The sovereign is a saintly king, 'right'? But the one who is the general 'now' is a famed commander.

The evening brings me joy, because it's blessed by 'that' saintess.

Let's become 'con'men in the local mart! That's the only way to enjoy the life of a 'star'.

Terror be gone, 'death' stay away.

████ ████████ ████████ to ██████████ ████████ ██████████
██████████. ██████████ ██████████ it.

.....

Hurry.

Right now.

That.

Con-Star.

Death.

To it.

.....

『Hurry and die to that Constellation, right now.』

"....."

“Mister?”

『Do you trust me?』

“Are you alright? You’ve been silent for a while. And your expression is very absent.”

『I trust you.』

“Ah. It’s perhaps due to the internal injuries from fighting the mages...? It was indeed a long and exhausting battle. The quest was rushed a bit, wasn’t it? Shall we rest a bit before continuing?”

『Listen.』

"....."

I am.

“Mister?”

I am.

Handing a dagger to the boy's hand.

“Ah?”

I pulled the dagger towards my throat.

".....!"

A slicing sound erupted.

“Why... Mister... what the...?!”

Everything happened in an instant.

Before he could resist, before he could use any power or skill, I immobilized his body with my aura, and placed my neck upon the immobilized blade.

My neck was diagonally severed.

[You have died.]

Beyond the blade, the boy wore a look of horror.

"-----!!"

A scream.

“Why! Damn it! Fucking—”

A shout.

[A skill has been activated.]

And then, the world around me shattered into pieces.

Chapter 318: Me and You, on the Frontlines of Time (2)

---

I have no place that I can call my hometown.

If there was one, it would be the pillowcases spread out in the sunlight, wafting with a fresh scent. The bunk beds at the orphanage and that very place where, when I was young, the director would clean my ears with a cotton swab.

A hometown now unreachable.

[You have died.]

Blink. Blink.

Like a broken lamp gasping for breath, a warning sounded in my mind.

[You are currently an S-class hunter.]

[Due to the enhanced penalty, you will choose the order in which skills are activated.]

If Kim Gong-Ja's hometown was the faded, checkered bunk bed on the second floor of the orphanage, then this place, too, could be considered his hometown.

The hometown of the King of Death.

It was a dark origin.

[1. Will you first acquire the skill of the enemy who killed you?]

[2. Will you first materialize the trauma of the enemy who killed you?]

If one were to add a bit of humor, perhaps this was the essence of the King of Death.

Heh.

A man with roots. The King of Death, Kim Gong-Ja...

-Yeah, I've heard your escapism.

The Guardian Spirit said.

-Hey, there's a lot I want to say, but choose option 1 for now. Starting with trauma will be a disaster.

"Damn it..."

-Yeah, I get that you're dying of embarrassment right now, but can you just choose 1 for now? Even when you were B-class, your trauma was messed up. Now you're S-class. Screwed, right? Now, choose. Option 1.

"Arghhh...!"

-Choose!

I chose.

[You have selected option 1.]

[The condition for your skill has been fulfilled by your death.]

[Randomly copying a skill from the Constellation ■■■■■■
■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■.]

Swoosh.

Golden fireflies fluttered around.

[Creating skill cards.]

[Please select a skill card.]

And that was all.

I clutched my head, waiting for the cards to form. 3 seconds. 6 seconds. But no matter how long I waited, I could only see one bright light moving around in the dark void looking like a firefly.

Which meant that...

".....Just one?"

There was just one skill.

The Constellation that mocked me possessed only one skill.

"There's no point in choosing. I have to pick that one anyway. Wait, now that I think about it, didn't my appearance change a bit too? Not just the choices, but me."

I opened and closed my hand in the darkness. There was a sensation. It wasn't like moving an imaginary hand in consciousness or swimming in a dream. It was the real sensation of my body moving.

-Right?

The Guardian Spirit also stroked his chin.

-Back in the day, I could only hear your voice or see you faintly like a ghost, but now you have a full body. It's still pitch dark around, though.

"Is this also because my Hunter rank has gone up?"

-Who knows. Even if I'm a genius, how would I know your skills better than you do?

Muttering "let's see," the Guardian Spirit turned to the back of the golden card.

And read the skill description written there.

+

[The Universe's Wild Expanse] (1/3)

Universe's Wild Expanse] is effective only when you and your companion try to fulfill an imagination together. Choose your companion wisely.

*However, this skill can only be used three times.

This skill is not permanent. The number of uses decreases with each casting. When [The Universe's Wild Expanse] is used for the third time and completely ends, the skill will be destroyed.

*A penalty is imposed each time the skill is used.

Currently, '1 use' of [The Universe's Wild Expanse] remains.

+

My mouth fell open.

At first, I was speechless at the skill's immense power. But then...

"So many restrictions!?"

I was shocked at the unprecedented number of limitations.

"One, two, three... four restrictions? Four? My God. Even [Returner's Winding Clock], which is also EX-ranked, only has one restriction. I've never seen a skill with more than two restrictions before, and now this..."

-Hmm.

The Guardian Spirit murmured. Unlike me, he seemed to find it reasonable.

-Even if it was a top-tier Constellation, I wondered how it could be so terrifying. Indeed. Originally, it maximized the effect by slapping penalties on its own power. My intuition is never wrong. A pervert playing with perverts. The Master of Perverts.

"Master of Perverts..."

-Do you remember?

The Guardian Spirit suddenly asked.

"Yes?"

-The name of the Constellation. You were half-brainwashed into worshiping it as a god, but it was your dedicated Constellation for a while. Every time it used its power, its name appeared in the messages. Do you remember the name of the Constellation?

"....."

I furrowed my brows deep in thought.

".....No, I don't remember. Is this also the effect of [The Universe's Wild Expanse]? A wish, an imagination, not wanting its name to be revealed, erasing our memory of it."

-It's possible, but there's another interpretation.

The Guardian Spirit flicked his finger.

The golden card bobbed up and down.

-The name was stolen.

"Stolen?"

-The penalty.

Penalty.

-This space isn't under the Constellation's influence. It's free. However, the skill card's description doesn't even mention the alias, just ■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■. There must be a reason for it.

".....So the name was completely erased?"

-Ninety-nine percent.

The Guardian Spirit crossed his arms and slowly tilted his head.

-According to this, [The Universe's Wild Expanse] can only be used 3 times. And it's already been used twice. Kim Zombie, you're probably the last target chosen for [The Universe's Wild Expanse], the 3rd and final companion.

"....."

Upon hearing those words, a voice came to mind.

The Constellation had informed me when asking me to become its believer.

『You are the one I've been waiting for since thousands of years.』

『You are my third disciple.』

『Will you trust me?』

The third disciple.

The Constellation had clearly said so.

-Therefore.

As I gathered clues from past memories, the Guardian Spirit speculated on his own. With a snap, the Guardian Spirit flicked his finger.

-This mysterious Constellation has already used [The Universe's Wild Expanse] twice and received two penalties. One of them was probably 'losing its name forever.'

"Losing its name... Is that such a severe penalty?"

"Why do you think Constellation Killer was so strong? Why did you make such a fuss about getting back the name of Constellation Killer?"

I pondered, resting my chin on my hand.

The Guardian Spirit scratched his cheek.

-Names are important. Losing it is a massive penalty.

"Um."

-It's significant for people, but for a Constellation, it's an enormous penalty.

The Guardian Spirit explained.

-A name is like a coordinate. Without a name, there's no target, without a target, there's no direction, and it's nearly impossible for faith to gather to a Constellation whose whereabouts are unknown. Losing a name is akin to 'giving up on faith.' It becomes impossible to become a major Constellation like Mahos or Babbit.

That was one penalty.

"What about the other penalty then?"

-Something similar to a name. Something that occupies a part of one's existence.

The Guardian Spirit's gaze deepened.

-I believe it's probably the appearance.

Appearance. Looks. Outward form.

The physical totality that exposes oneself to the outside.

-Any guesses?

"....."

There is.

An idea came to mind.

『I'd like to buy something for that girl.』

『Something comfortable to wear. Do you have anything good?』

There was a time when I tried to buy a set of clothes for the Constellation in a village which was probably constructed by [The Universe's Wild Expanse].

The shopkeeper said.

『That girl? Where's the girl you're talking about?』

『Right there. That girl in rags.』

『Hmm? Sorry, but I don't see anyone. I don't know what you're...』

That's right.

Initially, the shopkeeper didn't recognize the Constellation. Rather, even if he did, he couldn't precisely identify it.

It was the same for me.

『But, isn't it a bit big?』

『That's sttrange. I thought it would fit perfectly...』

I ended up buying clothes that were too big for the Constellation.

Even though I recognized the Constellation as a 'girl', somehow, unconsciously, I gifted her clothes much larger than 'her'.

".....That's right."

Not just the physique. The voice, gender, tone of speech, everything I remember is dubious.

Literally in the dark.

All things forming the appearance of the Constellation were shrouded in fog.

"The Constellation lost its name. It lost its appearance too. That's the penalty the Constellation bears. And choosing me as the third believer, the last partner for [The Universe's Wild Expanse], means..."

-There's one more penalty far worse than losing a name or appearance left.

"Yes."

Perhaps.

".....Its entire existence might be erased."

All traces of the Constellation's life.

Including its own memories and those of others who remembered it, everything might disappear as the third penalty.

So called 'erasure of existence'.

I couldn't think of a more severe penalty than losing a name or appearance.

-Indeed.

The Guardian Spirit nodded at my conjecture.

-Despite such penalties, the Constellation wanted to use [The Universe's Wild Expanse] on you, not caring if it disappeared.

"....."

-Why, you might ask? But I guess we'll find out soon enough.

"Yeah."

I reached out.

"Anyway, I'll have to see the trauma."

I caught the only golden light twinkling in this void.

[Selection complete.]

[Copying skill.]

As I gripped it with my fingers, the card dissolved into nothingness. It transformed into golden fireflies and flowed towards my heart. For a while, my heart was dyed in gold.

And then.

[You are penalized by the skill.]

[You are currently an S-class Hunter]

[Warning.]

[Warning.]

Tick.

Somewhere, a clock hand started to move.

[The level of penalty is supreme.]

[Welcome to the Human Realm.]

At a furious speed beyond cognition, the hour, minute and second hands jumbled up, leaving only afterimages as they spun crazily.

[Re-enacting the trauma of your killer.]

Suddenly, my heart chilled.

When I was B-class and faced the Constellation Killer's trauma, the Guardian Spirit couldn't enter with me. No. He did enter, but couldn't maintain his existence. He was overlaid on mine and Kim Yul's memory, and he transformed into someone else.

There was also a time when I died as an A-class.

It was to the young clown, the Jester. While preparing for war with the Magic Tower, after drinking poison repeatedly, I inadvertently ended up dying multiple times.

'That person's trauma wasn't much.'

She lived her life enjoying it. She wasn't on the level of Kim Yul or Ester.

Not every human living in the world can be that unhappy.

Ultimately, the density of trauma was determined not only by my level but also by the killer's life.

'.....What will it be this time?'

Tick.

'The trauma of a Constellation.'

Tick.

'If it's severe, I might even disappear myself...'

Somewhere, a clock hand stopped.

'But.'

I bit my lip.

'I'll overcome it.'

The moment I made up my mind.

[Warning.]

[Unable to find the alias of the skill target.]

[Unable to find the true name of the s kill target.]

In the darkening consciousness, the tower's voice rang.

[Warning.]

[Unable to find the appearance of the skill target.]

[Re-enactment failed.]

[Substituting necessary data for manifestation.]

With an ominous sound, I thought, and then.

[Manifesting the trauma of the enemy who killed you.]

Pop.

My consciousness was cut off.

Chapter 319: On the Path of Endless Strife (1)

---

It's tedious.

"....."

I blinked my eyes.

As my eyelids fluttered, I attempted to move the tips of my fingers. They moved.

Without any issue, I lifted my head, raised my torso, and moved my lips.

"Kim..... Gong-Ja....."

It worked.

I could speak. My name. The coordinate of my trace.

I hadn't lost it.

"Uh.....!?"

Suddenly, a severe pain wracked my head.

"Ugh.....! Uh...!"

The blood vessels on the side of my head throbbed as if they were going to burst. The headache spread quickly from the side to the front of my head. My lips parted, and my salivary glands uncontrollably sputtered. I barely managed to wipe the drool leaking from my mouth with the back of my hand.

"Huhk....."

"Miss! Are you alright?"

Someone burst in. The sound of the door and footsteps intertwined.

Even the urgency in those noises was as grating as scratching a lump of metal in my head.

“Keep it... quiet.....”

I could only groan.

“Keep the... noise down.....”

“Oh my. Look at the fever on your head.”

Fortunately, it seemed the other party understood my words.

“I thought you were a bit better over the weekend, but oh dear, what to do. I’ll call a doctor.”

“Hmm.....”

“Just wait a bit, Miss. The others will be here soon, too.”

I found it hard to grasp the situation.

Being addressed as "Miss," I must have become a woman.

Then, was the original gender of ■■■■■■ a female?

‘Strange.’

There was no record of the original gender for ■■■■■■■■■■. It was obliterated. Since the tower stripped that name and appearance, even if my skill glimpsed the trauma, it wouldn't be known.

My skill is also executed by the tower, isn't it?

‘Why then?’

I squinted through the pain.

‘What kind of person has the trauma been replaced with.....’

And the moment I looked up at the mirror in the room, I forgot to even moan and gaped.

"....."

Hair as sorrowful as moonlight, silver.

Eyes that circulate blood, making the onlooker shudder.

Yet, the curve from the forehead to the jawline is so agonizingly delicate, one cannot help but watch the precarious balancing act, feeling an unknown fear while having no choice but to gaze upon her, denying any other option.

That was.

“Lady Raviel? Are you alright?”

“Seems you've got a fever as soon as you woke up again today...”

“Being as prone to illness as you are, it's alright. It's probably nothing serious.”

“What should we do? Should we inform the madam?”

“Wouldn't that just add worry on top of worry? Let me examine her first and then...”

She was the person I loved.

It's tedious.

"....."

I lay by the fountain in the garden, gazing blankly at the sky.

It seems that I've become the goddess I love, Raviel Ivansia.

And a very young Raviel at that.

"About twelve years old, I guess...."

Even this voice that reverberates inside my mouth carried an unchanged beautiful resonance despite being my own.

"Uh."

Just muttering to myself made me somehow feel embarrassed. As if Raviel whispered a secret into my ear.

What to do.

If someone else sees this, they'll think I'm a lunatic who's smitten with his own voice, just a mad person.

My embarrassment aside, I wouldn't want Raviel to be regarded as a madwoman.

"Is that so?"

I realized.

I must become mute.

What a brilliant solution.

Might as well live with my eyes closed too. I can avoid mirrors, but that'd be trouble when maids are dressing me. It's best to just bind my face with bandages and live like that.

"Miss! You can't just lie down in the fountain!"

A maid hurried over from afar.

"Come quickly."

I was lying on the rim of the circular fountain. Even though the sunlight was scorching, it was cool here because of the fountain's chill seeping in.

Raviel liked cool sensations. I knew that since I started living with her. Even as a child, she was the same, instinctively seeking cool places.

“No, I misspoke. Come slowly. You're out of breath.”

“Heck, hek... Oh my, I'm dying...”

“You're already out of breath. My advice was too late. It's a master's negligence to not notice a servant's panting.”

“Ah, Miss.... In such a place, recklessly, lying down! As the empire's premier lady, your dignity is in question...!”

The maid covered my waist with a thin blanket. Even the blanket was of the highest quality touch. The Ivansia family, proving to all that they need not be frugal, indulged in unnecessary luxury even for a blanket.

“Is that so?”

“Yes!”

“Think about it. As you said, I am the empire's premier lady. But being the premier lady is not only a status given at birth but also a credential that must be proven time and again in the future.”

“Huh?”

“If I am not worthy of being the premier lady as you said, lying leisurely by the fountain may look vulgar. My caliber is just that limited. However, what if it's not vulgar?”

“Huh?”

“If I still appear noble despite lying by the fountain, that proves my ladylike quality, doesn't it? Eating, sleeping, wearing and simply living should emanate nobility. Naturally, even lying by the fountain should turn into a painting, shouldn't it?”

“Uh... Uhm...?”

“So the blanket is unnecessary.”

I flicked it, sending the blanket into the fountain.

"Ah! But it's expensive...!"

“The fountain might occasionally want a blanket too. Rather than that, look at me.”

The maid hesitantly obeyed my command.

Her eyes captured my image.

Lying on the rim of the fountain, with one arm stretched down, I looked at the maid at an angle.

"....."

“How is it?”

“...Noble.”

“Does it become a painting?”

“Yes. You are a painting, Miss...”

“I ask your aesthetic sense. Would adding a brown blanket to this portrait bring cultural gain or loss? If this painting were to hang in the palace corridor, should it include a blanket or not?”

“...Oh? Would it look more beautiful with the blanket...?”

“Exactly.”

I nodded in satisfaction.

“So, it's proven that I have no issue being the empire's premier lady. I'm striving to create a picture worthy of hanging on the palace walls. Your worry has also been proven unnecessary.”

“Huh? ...Uh?”

“Now go. I wish to enjoy the garden's freshness and the fountain's murmurs a bit longer.”

“Ah, yes... Uh? Huh...?”

The maid walked away, still puzzled. The puzzlement didn't cease as she retreated. Watching her, a slightly amusing sensation fluttered through my cold heart.

For a brief moment.

The murmurs of the fountain beside me flowed.

"....."

It's tedious.

"....."

It's tedious.

"....."

It's tedious.

"Hmm....."

What is it?

This bottomless sinking boredom. No. The boredom itself is at the bottom, but what exactly is it?

"Indeed."

This was Raviel's childhood.

"I wonder, is it the world that's dull?"

The emotion that dominated her entire youth.

"Whether I read books, chatter in social circles, learn the sword, nothing feels fulfilling."

The sky was blue. It was so clear that there were few clouds. But even such a sky would have more expressions than my current face, which was also Raviel's face.

Absolute expressionlessness.

Let's assume there are several paths I could tread upon from this point forward.

'Become the emperor's consort. Become the empress, turn the emperor into a puppet, and play with the empire. Or gather the nobles' factions under the banner of Ivansia and rebel. Rule over the newly established empire and enjoy a reign of twenty years.'

Perhaps that's the extent of the paths laid out for Raviel from birth.

"Anything's possible."

I intuitively sensed that whichever path I chose, I would succeed, barring some unforeseen misfortune.

'The current emperor is a saintly ruler. There's no need to plot a rebellion. The diligent subjects under His Majesty's knees and the wise people swinging their hoes in Ivansia's lands every season are quite satisfactory.'

I thought that the scenery was beautiful.

Like looking at a famous painting I barely knew, I found it beautiful but not fun.

Only the emotion [wanting to preserve what is beautiful just as it is] existed in this heart.

Then, am I to live a life for the empire... A life for all the people of the empire?

It would be meaningful.

But

"It's boring."

So tedious that I can't stand it.

Wake up every morning, dust off the painting, work to preserve the colors, catch the ruffian trying to ruin the painting, kill the thief trying to steal it.

That's all.

A life where every moment from morning till night is predetermined.

"Hey."

Plop.

Waves rippled on the surface of the fountain.

Turning my head lazily, I saw a blond boy in the center of the garden, holding a pebble and grinning.

"My lady."

"....."

I opened my lips expressionlessly.

"I'm not a lady yet, Your Highness."

"Then, lady-to-be."

"If I were to call you the crown prince-to-be, would it not be disrespectful?"

"I believe tolerating each other's disrespect is a virtue of a couple. If not, well, I might take concubines. Is that the future you desire?"

"Honestly, it doesn't concern me."

"My lady-to-be is indeed a woman with a cold heart."

The blond boy lamented quite convincingly.

The sole heir of the empire. The empire's successor, the crown prince.

Also, the man who has been designated as my fiancé since 20 years ago.

Before I was even born, that is.

'Is this also a predetermined path?'

The blond boy spoke.

"You refuse to stand and show respect even after seeing me. You're the first, apart from the empress mother, to stay lying down in my presence."

"Since you said tolerating each other's disrespect is a couple's virtue."

"Oh. Then I might as well become even more disrespectful."

The crown prince grabbed my wrist. The wrist was perfectly cooled, and when the crown prince held it, his body heat transferred to it. It would probably leave a red mark on my wrist.

"Let's go."

"Where to, if I may ask?"

"Anywhere. Well, to be frank, imperial father suggested that I sweet-talk you a bit. It won't hurt to be in good graces with the Ivansia family. I agree. However, If I have to sweet-talk anyway, it's best to do it with the empire's most beautiful lady, right?"

"You speak well. It will become a calamity in the future."

"Huh?"

The boy tilted his head in confusion.

"What do you mean?"

"Words are impromptu, but the actions born from impromptu words leave a trace. Considering even this trace is called responsibility. Words last only as long as the mouth opens and closes, so to bear responsibility, actions must follow. You speak well, Your Highness, so the traces will be long, but can you bear them?"

".....?"

Indeed.

He didn't understand.

Despite trying his best to mimic an adult, the crown prince couldn't grasp advice that touched the essence of life.

Because only adults or geniuses can understand that.

Unfortunately, the crown prince is neither.

"It's like you're speaking like a prime minister. Well, whatever. I didn't come here for a private lesson from my lady-to-be."

"What then?"

"I heard a new shop opened in the market! A pastry shop, they say. Filled with exotic pastries, and the seasonal strawberries are delicious!"

".....Pastries can be prepared immediately at home. Shall I order some?"

"Ah, you don't know at all. This to-be, you really don't know!"

From lady to lady-to-be, and now just to-be.

"Pastries from the kitchen are just evidence of service! I'm not looking for service. A proper exchange between free citizens... That's right. I desire free trade!"

"The citizens will rather envy Your Highness and me for our freedom."

"We envy each other then. An ideal relationship between the sovereign and the subjects!"

He doesn't listen.

Moreover, this man doesn't even know what he's saying, merely scattering plausible sentences he picked up.

"Come on, come on! I've even arranged a carriage. Not a royal carriage or one from your family, but just one rented from a merchant. No one will recognize us!"

That's impossible.

Her silver hair is the noble symbol of Ivansia. The moment they enter the pastry shop, the employees will panic, kneel, and the shop owner will rush out bowing, all easily imagined in Raviel's mind.

Is that so?

"Let's proceed as Your Highness wishes."

"Oh! Even the lady-to-be can be reasonable!"

Is escaping the predetermined path this simple?

"After the shop, let's go to the market! Phew. Not to brag, but I've already visited all the six-day markets, three-day markets, and even the permanent markets in the capital. In this regard, I'm far more of an expert than you."

"Yes."

I just became a bit more foolish.

"I'm looking forward to it."

"Look forward to it!"

Being with this man makes life feel shaky.

Everything familiar to me, my daily routine, what I'll eat and drink, where I'll sleep, all the paths are shaken and twisted.

It might not be 'fun', but,

It was certainly something 'fresh' enough to be noted.

"Come! Lady-to-be! This way, this way!"

Even if it's just for a moment, I can forget myself.

If that's the case, isn't it worth giving your heart to him?

"Amazing. So strawberries in season taste this good? Here, lady-to-be, try some. Hmm. Suddenly, I want to see the sea. The sea. What do you think? Let's go to the sea."

Since escaping from oneself is always the hardest task.

"It's too dark to see the sea..."

"Your Highness."

Yes.

"Hmm?"

I've decided to be content with this life.

It's tedious. Incredibly so.

"I will try to love Your Highness."

"Oh! Finally..."

"However, I have a condition."

Sometimes, life must be satisfied not with the sun, but only with the moonlight reflected on the water's surface.

"The sea must be calm enough to reflect the moonlight."

I simply requested the world to quiet down.

"Do not take concubines. Do not even give them a glance. If Your Highness is capable of love, grant that precious love only to me, and if love is impossible, then pour that effort only into me."

"....."

"Then, perhaps I can stay by Your Highness's side. To support Your Highness, to protect the empire, and to serve the people. Your Highness, can you promise to love only me?"

The boy remai ned silent.

After a short while, with the usual convincing manner, the boy spoke brightly.

"Of course!"

"....."

"I will love only my lady!"

Yes.

It's good to have expectations for the world.

At least the sound of the waves echoing in that unseen sea is a bit cooler than the murmurs of the water flowing through the fountain.

[Currently re-enacting the trauma of your killer.]

I quietly closed my eyes.

Chapter 320: On the Path of Endless Strife (2)

---

Tick.

The needle grazed the white flesh of the clock, marking a scar that was destined to be there.

"....."

"How many times must I explain it for you to understand? I have nothing to do with Lady Goldencup! It's a misunderstanding! A misunderstanding!"

I blinked my eyes.

As I blinked, the blond crown prince in front of me raged. Since we were alone in the audience room, he must be venting his anger at me.

"Lady, you've completely misunderstood me as a person!"

"....."

It felt like a long time had passed.

Yet, it seemed like only a brief moment had elapsed.

Was my sense of time damaged? It was as if every strand of my hair had dissolved in lukewarm water. Am I swimming in Raviel's dream, or is Raviel swimming through my time?

'Either way.'

I fanned myself with a fan.

'It doesn't really matter.'

There was no need to distinguish between us.

Meanwhile, the prince's voice grew louder and louder.

"It's utterly displeasing! Your tone, it's as if- as if you think I'm being unfaithful to you. Me, the foundation of the empire!"

I looked beyond the crown prince's golden hair.

Tick.

Tick.

A lavishly decorated golden wall clock consumed its own flesh to pass the time.

".....Wait. Lady, when someone is talking to you, where are you looking?"

"I apologize. I was looking at the clock."

"The clock? You mean to say even conversing with me is a waste of time?"

"Not at all. It's just that a clock continuously passes the same place as if it never knew it had been there before. Perhaps, the condition of eternity is oblivion."

"What? .....What are you talking about?"

"Yesterday, you yelled. You forget what you yelled yesterday. Yesterday, you nagged. You forget what you nagged yesterday. The day before yesterday, the day before that, a week ago, a month ago or a year ago. You forget and forget again, discard and discard again."

"....."

"The scenery that you passed just yesterday. The places where my touch lingered just yesterday. Yet, they seem entirely new, as if foreign. And thus, people live eternally. A thousand years ago, and a thousand years from now."

"I really don't understand what you're saying."

The crown prince furrowed his brow.

"Are you admitting that you misunderstood the relationship between Lady Goldencup and me?"

"Your Highness."

I closed my fan.

"In the course of history, you are not the first nor the last to make excuses after betraying love."

"....."

"Those who evaded a day by claiming it was a misunderstanding or a mistake were also not the first. They all met their ends and lie dead in their graves. Please be wiser. Would the impending disaster change just by getting through today?"

"I don't understand what you're saying!"

"Lady Goldencup cannot love you."

The crown prince paused.

"What?"

"She fundamentally loves herself. Don't you see?"

"....."

"The crown prince may harbor affection for her, but what truly excites Goldencup is [the image of herself secretly sharing love with the crown prince]."

I spoke calmly.

"I'm not saying you shouldn't share love. To share love with such a person, you must become a follower, Your Highness. Earnestly beg for Lady Goldencup's love, as if receiving mercy, and accept her favor. Only such a relationship will make both you and her eternally happy."

"....."

"However, Your Highness is the nation's foundation. You must stand the highest. Would you bow to a mere baroness? If Your Highness bows, your subjects will bow, and the people will follow suit, making the baroness the true ruler of this land, not Your Highness."

I gazed intently at my fiancé.

"Are you truly prepared to hand over the country to the baroness's family?"

Splash!

"....."

Drip. Drop.

Water dripped down my temple.

In front of me, the blond man was seething, holding an empty glass.

"You're the worst kind of person."

It was a meaningless curse.

Yet, even if it was the most trivial insult from the most insignificant person, the wound I received was still a wound, and the surface of my heart stung slightly.

"Why can't you understand me even once? I'm struggling too. It's hard! The prime minister nags endlessly, I have to attend unfamiliar places and keep a solemn face! Of course, being born into the great Ivansia lineage, you wouldn't understand! But..."

"But."

I looked at the prince expressionlessly.

And I thought.

"But, what are you saying?"

Should I replace him?

"....."

The current emperor is a saintly ruler.

But there are countless cases where a tyrant ascends to the throne immediately after a saintly ruler's death, leading the country to ruin. If the empire's fate is to last only one more generation, it wouldn't be bad to start preparations from now.

As a last resort.

For this certain end, I could spread spies across the country, assassinate obstacles in advance, and prepare to incite rebellion at the right moment.

"Your Highness."

He was hesitant.

The crown prince involuntarily stepped back.

"I understand Your Highness the deepest. Since childhood,

I've strived to love you. This love may seem insignificant. But this is my utmost. In my heart, I cannot fuel a greater flame."

"....."

"Dismiss Lady Goldencup. That is the way for Your Highness, for the country..."

"Monster."

The crown prince reached for the doorknob.

"Such a monster."

And he fled.

"....."

Tick.

Time flowed.

"....."

Tick.

Water droplets wetting my hair fell with the ticking of the second hand.

"....."

Suddenly, I realized.

I had been betrayed.

"Ah."

It's tedious.

[Unable to find the alias of the skill target.]

In that tedium, a bit of anger coagulated.

[Unable to find the true name of the skill target.]

Tick.

But.

It's tedious, and it's a tedious life.

[Unable to find the appearance of the skill target.]

Tick.

Certainly.

[Re-enactment failed.]

My lord,

I, to you,

[Substituting necessary data for implementation.]

Tick.

It's tedious.

"....."

I blinked my eyes.

As I blinked, I realized that I was sitting cross-legged.

Had I fallen asleep in this posture, or had I briefly reached a state of emptiness with no worries, and failed to grasp enlightenment, slipping out entirely?

"Lord Heavenly Demon."

The sounds of the world reached me.

"....."

I slowly turned my head.

Flinch.

The eyes of a woman in black robes trembled as they met mine.

I knew her name.

"You are the Hell Ghost Demon."

"My apologies."

The Hell Ghost Demon prostrated herself.

"How dare such beings disturb the sovereign's practice... I have committed a crime worthy of death!"

"Such fuss. Enlightenment is said to be a peace so quiet that nothing can disturb it. If it were to be disturbed and broken, then it wasn't enlightenment to begin with."

I smiled.

"It's as if I awoke from a light sleep. Rather than ruining my enlightenment, I'd prefer to receive an apology for interrupting a pleasant nap."

"Uh... um... sorry...?"

Tsk.

"You're such a joyless subordinate. Just stay there with your head bowed."

"Ah! Yes!"

The Hell Ghost Demon seemed to find that much easier and immediately responded.

"Then, I will report!"

"I'm listening."

"Firstly, we've circulated a proclamation throughout the land to evacuate the people."

The Hell Ghost Demon continued speaking while upside down, her head supporting her entire body without any shaking, showing that she was truly a well-trained elite of our sect.

"Many people did not believe the words that a plague was descending from the heavens, but when we showed them those already affected by the contagion, tightly bound and paraded around, even the most skeptical had no choice but to believe!"

"....."

I see.

For months now, a mysterious illness had been spreading throughout the martial realm.

This place is still before I, no, before my master faced the white curtain of death.

"Well done."

"It is an honor!"

"But what use is fleeing from a moving plague? One cannot build a hut under the sea or pitch a tent above the clouds. The edge of the sea under the sky will be the last refuge for the people."

"....."

"However, it's merely fulfilling the duty towards humanity. I am proud of you all for choosing to comfort the people, even for a day, rather than seeking refuge on an island where you could have lived another day."

The Hell Ghost Demon straightened up and prostrated herself again.

"Loyalty!"

Beyond her, hundreds of elites prostrated themselves.

"For the Demonic Way of the Heavens!"

Further on, tens of thousands of disciples kneeled.

"For the Survival of the Common People!"

A lofty echo resounded through the headquarters of the Demonic Path.

I sat on a stone platform and bowed my head.

The peak of the Demonic Cult, having reached its zenith at this time, spread before me.

"....."

It's tedious.

Despite the world facing destruction, what exactly is this eerily calm tedium?

It's not triviality. It's not boredom. I haven't lived in a world small enough to be considered trivial, nor have I led a leisurely life to be considered boring. I have always lived on the edge, fighting for survival through all seasons.

'Did I give it my all?'

Yes.

'Did I take responsibility for what needed to be accounted for?'

Yes.

'Did I shoulder what I didn't need to?'

Undoubtedly.

'Was it good to wield the sword?'

Perhaps.

'Was I happy?'

I don't know.

"....."

I slowly nodded.

'I can answer "thus" to a thousand questions.'

All disciples of the Demonic Cult bowed their heads. Only the sky could see and know my nodding gesture. Thus, I was nodding to myself, using the white sky as a mirror.

'Only two questions which I answered with "perhaps" and "I don't know," are making me feel tedious now.'

I want to know.

"NamGung Woon."

I spoke.

The Hell Ghost Demon slightly raised her head.

"Yes?"

"Send a letter to the Head of the Martial Alliance, NamGung Woon."

"....."

The Hell Ghost Demon didn't ask further. She simply brought the writing brush and paper.

I flicked my fingers.

Paper.

The paper floated in mid-air, stiffening.

After mastering sword techniques, I became less reliant on tools. As the Hell Ghost Demon swallowed a small exclamation, I flicked my fingers again.

Brush.

My finger became the brush handle. The ki at the tip of my fingernail became the brush tip. Drawing a circle with the ink at one point, there was nothing rough about writing, even with a space between the paper and me.

Ink.

Thus, the black letters imbued with my ki were written.

"Burn it."

I laid my hand down.

"How dare I..."

"A plague may ravage the world, but the world remains, and life persists after awakening. This is my will. If it's a will, it will remain even if burned."

"....."

The Hell Ghost Demon, trembling, set fire to my paper.

The flames, transferred from a candle, quickly consumed the edges of the paper. The fire devoured, turning the path it passed black, and spread wildly.

"Ah."

But the letters were not consumed by the flames.

Instead, they blazed.

The ki contained in the ink held the letters firmly. The letters became embers, fixed in place, burning brightly mid-air, even as the fire consumed their base.

The world may be incurable, but can't humans console each other's ailments?

Living a hundred years, does death depend on a second?

Come forth, Martial Realm.

My hundred years await here.

The Hell Ghost Demon trembled and prostrated herself.

I glanced at the conviction I had inscribed in the air.

"Write one more, and send it to that scoundrel of the Martial Alliance. Take it yourself and, in front of NamGung Woon, in front of the riffraff of the Martial Alliance, burn it with your own hands. It's a pity I can't see their faces."

"Yes, Lord Heavenly Demon."

The Hell Ghost Demon's voice faltered.

I muttered indifferently.

"When the embers burn out to ashes, you'll know you need not respond to the call for the Great Orthodox-Demonic War."

The disciples marveled at the words I inscribed in the air. They considered it a miracle. Just like rain falling from the sky and flowers blooming from the earth, the embers suspended between heaven and earth were evidence to them, a permission that they were still allowed to exist in this world.

They shouted.

"For the Demonic Way of the Heavens!"

Thud.

Something landed on the tip of my nose, causing me to look up.

"For the Survival of the Common People!"

Snow was falling from the sky.

It was the first snow.

"For the Demonic Way of the Heavens!"

Yes, NamGung Woon.

You wouldn't betray me, would you?

But.

"For the Survival of the Common People!"

Can I make you happy?

That was the only issue, and it remains an issue.

[Currently re-enacting the trauma of your killer.]

I quietly closed my eyes.

Chapter 321: On the Path of Endless Strife (3)

---

The Heavenly Demon So BaekHyang harbored an untold secret.

It was that she had shown mercy to NamGung Woon, the Head of the Martial Alliance. She showed mercy to the unparalleled Orthodox Path leader of the NamGung clan, hailed as a once-in-a-generation genius who had gained fame for his righteous deeds and eccentricities since his youth. To that very man.

'This much, huh.'

The master had shown mercy.

".....! .....!"

Snow was falling.

Fighting through the swirling snowflakes, NamGung Woon advanced. Even as the snowstorm raged, the area around NamGung Woon alone melted away. Fierce ki was burning within NamGung Woon's muscles.

'So this is it.'

Snow was falling.

In master's slightly lowered eyes, the scene of snow falling on the world, a single snowflake sticking to the Head of the Martial Alliance's forehead before melting away, the sight of thousands and thousands from the orthodox and demonic paths clashing swords, was all reflected.

The Great Orthodox-Demonic War.

On this battlefield, where everyone sensed the end of the world and poured out their last strength, only one person—only master—only I was not out of breath.

'To strive so hard to defeat this body.'

Kraaang!

While fending off NamGung Woon's axe, I felt pity.

'So pure-hearted. So upright. He's purely using martial arts to defeat me. His axe is filled with earnest feelings towards me.'

I knew.

If the Heavenly Demon So BaekHyang had never been born, NamGung Woon would have stood tall as the supreme martial artist. He might even have been praised as the greatest martial artist of all time. The Head of the Martial Alliance, NamGung Woon, was truly the greatest opponent I could face.

To wish for more would be greedy.

'Ah.'

I didn't want it to end.

'How is it that one can effortlessly cleave the heavens with talent yet possess the skill to be unmatched by anyone through effort alone?'

I didn't want it to end.

'Is there no such person?'

An opponent whom I could desire with all my heart.

'NamGung Woon. The Great Axe Sage. Can't you be that person?'

If only you had been a bit stronger.

I would have gladly given my life to you.

'I don't have the courage to lie to you and rig the match.'

Snow was falling.

'I don't have the intention to lie to myself just to be satisfied with life.'

Tick.

'Not even once have I told a lie, so who could match me?'

It's tedious.

'No.'

Is it?

'It's lonely.'

Tick.

That day, the Heavenly Demon So BaekHyang did not cut down the Head of the Martial Alliance, NamGung Woon. She couldn't. Master could not take the life of someone who had come all this way to participate in the Great Orthodox-Demonic War. Indeed, to someone who could not walk the path called 'herself,' master could not offer her own life either.

A life with no way out.

When the first day of the Great Orthodox-Demonic War was postponed, master might have sensed that this winter would feel eternal.

[Unable to find the alias of the skill target.]

But.

[Unable to find the true name of the skill target.]

Lonely and lonely as life may be.

[Unable to find the appearance of the skill target.]

Certainly.

Gong-Ja.

You will come for me.

My master, the master with a blossoming smile.

[Re-enactment failed.]

[Substituting necessary data for implementation.]

Tick.

"Oh."

I blinked.

"Have you arrived?"

As I blinked, before me was the Guardian Spirit.

With slightly longer hair and a bit thinner than the Sword Emperor I knew, he was leaning on his chin with his legs crossed.

".....Sword Emperor, sir?"

I was slightly taken aback.

"Yes."

"Huh. So I appear in the trauma, too? I mean, I used to, but ever since you reached B-class, I hardly ever... Oh? I have a body?"

I felt around my body.

It wasn't Raviel's body. It wasn't master's body. It wasn't anyone else's body either, so I groped around this body, which should have been familiar to me, as if I was touching it for the first time in decades.

"Tsk tsk."

The Guardian Spirit watched me with amusement.

"You're making a fuss for nothing."

"Ah, why? I seriously feel like I've lived for more than 20 years. Just maintaining my self-awareness is an incredible feat. Where are we, by the way?"

"Who knows."

The Guardian Spirit chuckled softly.

"Probably still in the midst of your skill activating. You must be continuously seeing the trauma."

".....? So, does this mean I'm seeing your trauma?"

"I don't have anything like trauma."

I looked around.

Just as the Guardian Spirit said, there was nothing here.

Absolutely nothing.

Like a waiting room where you pause before entering a stage, a vast expanse of nothingness. A space like an endlessly spread white canvas, and in a place that couldn't even be called the center, the Guardian Spirit sat quietly holding only a sword.

"....."

"Why? What are you looking at?"

"No... It's just. Your, your legs."

I pointed at the Guardian Spirit's legs.

Usually slightly blurred, his legs were now distinctly formed.

"Not just the legs, but the whole body... It's so vivid. Even your voice."

"Hmm."

"Could it be?"

"It's simple."

The Guardian Spirit twirled the sword hilt.

"Probably in your trauma, my living form is being played back. But, as I said, I don't have any [trauma to speak of]. So, it's probably being reproduced weirdly like this."

"Huh."

"Specifically, I remember up to the part where you're brainwashed by some perverted kid, running around calling them 'My god! My god!' but my memory of about a day's worth is vague. How about you? Does [the year is bound to be a jackpot because it's a bumper crop full of bullshit] ring a bell?"

".....That did happen."

Reality returned at last.

Yes.

Since the trauma began, I had gone through half a lifetime of Raviel and another half of master. It felt as if I had been dreaming for far too long.

"This time, I thought I was seeing your trauma...."

"Oh. Were you looking forward to it? Sorry, sorry. I've enjoyed life, you see. I did get caught stealing dumplings when I was four and got beaten to a pulp by a tavern waiter, but even then, I was munching on dumplings while being hit. After all, the dumplings that entered my stomach couldn't be put back on display, right? So, technically, I won. I've known nothing but victory since I was four."

"You... No. Never mind. Let's not talk."

"So? I remember whispering '[Terror be gone, death stay away]' to you. What happened then? Dude, talk to me. I can't give you advice unless you do."

I recounted the events I had experienced.

"Hmm."

The Guardian Spirit listened to my story with a smile in his eyes, still in his slanted posture with his elbows on his knees.

"Zombie."

As soon as I finished talking, the Guardian Spirit remarked.

"How do you use the Demonic Heavenly God Art?"

"Excuse me?"

"The Demonic Heavenly God Art. The demonic technique of your cult. How do you use that?"

Cult, he says.

"I just use it? I'm not sure what you mean."

"Really? That's interesting. Hunger varies from person to person. Take, for instance, the Sword of Starving Death. Some starve for lack of millet, others for a hamburger. Are they the same? The hunger of a farmer? The hunger of an adult and a child? How do you, just like that, use the Sword of Starving Death encompassing all types of hunger?"

"They are the same."

I answered immediately.

Had this been when I was just about to grasp the Demonic Heavenly God Art, maybe I would have been puzzled.

But now, I wasn't newbie enough to be played by such a question.

"Being the same doesn't mean it's identical from start to finish. It just needs to share the same context. 'Suffering because one couldn't eat something.' Here, 'something' could be millet or arugula pizza; it doesn't matter. So..."

"Right."

The Guardian Spirit's eyes narrowed slightly.

"That's why people can understand each other, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"The trauma you're experiencing now is the same."

"....."

Tick.

I blinked.

"Come again?"

"The act of understanding between people is experiencing the same thing. It doesn't mean the same person in the same situation at the same time and same place experiencing the same event. It's when different people in different situations at different times and in different places go through the same event. That's what understanding is."

The Guardian Spirit hummed.

"You can't peek into ■■■■■■'s past. Why? Because there's no name. No coordinates. Even the appearance was lost. How would you peek into the lifetime of someone who can't be called by anyone, can't be seen by anyone?"

“ ”

"But we know that ■■■■■■ failed. Their life must be marked by failure. You can tell by the [The Universe's Wild Expanse] skill. Once. Twice. They used it on someone other than you, but now there's no one by their side."

The Guardian Spirit whispered.

"They were betrayed."

Despite the distance, the Sword Emperor's voice felt as if it was whispered right into my ear.

"Gong-Ja. Do you really need to know who ■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ was betrayed by, in what situation, when, and where to finally understand their trauma?"

"Betrayal is betrayal. Disappointment is disappointment. So, your betrayal can be my betrayal, and even though you are you and I am me, we can still call that understanding."

Right.

That's the essence of the Demonic Heavenly God Art.

"Your master said the same, didn't she?"

The doctrine of the shadow.

".....Right."

I finally nodded.

Why I couldn't peek into ■■■■■■■■■■'s past, why I had to witness the half-lives of Raviel and the master, it all made sense.

"The most similar cases to the trauma of the Constellation were reproduced."

Undoubtedly.

"■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ must have trusted someone at first. Although not satisfied, they must have thought that person could create fun quests and happy stories under the [The Universe's Wild Expanse], or at least, imagine a fresh world."

But they were betrayed.

Just as Raviel was betrayed by the Crown Prince with noodle hair.

"Tedious."

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ and Raviel are different people in different situations, different times, and in different places, but the depth and angle of the wound inflicted by the first betrayal were exactly the same.

Therefore.

"Tedious."

■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■'s past was substituted with Raviel's past.

"They trusted someone again."

The second disciple.

"After the first betrayal, the Constellation had grown a bit. They didn't choose a disciple just because 'this person seems fresh' this time. Undoubtedly the best of the era. Overflowing with talent... With exceptional imagination. They chose, thinking that with this person, truly enjoyable quests might continue."

But it wasn't enough.

Just as NamGung Woon was a hand's breadth short for the master.

"Lonely."

The second disciple was certainly excellent. Under the effect of [The Universe's Wild Expanse], the disciple would have expanded their imagination just as I did, imagining a village where there was none and making enemies appear when needed.

Yet.

"Lonely."

■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ could not be completely satisfied with the imagination unfolded by them.

".....No one. Or rather, most haven't experienced death."

I somehow felt I knew why the Constellation remained unfulfilled.

"The sea can be imagined. Whether detailed or vague. But can one imagine themselves drowning in the sea, struggling... gasping for air as seawater rushes into their throat? That sensation, that pain?"

The answer is simple.

If you haven't experienced it, you don't know.

"Perhaps the other disciples... couldn't 'properly' imagine their crises. Their death, the moment of life and death, when they might really die."

Because.

"The world is just that way. How can one so accurately..."

"So accurately imagine the pain, especially one of this extent?"

"Have you ever felt your bones melting? Have you ever felt your blood vessels burning up?"

"How on earth can you imagine such pain so vividly, under my power, and reproduce it?"

Because they had said so.

"....."

The Guardian Spirit nodded.

"Yeah. Your thinking is probably right."

The first disciple's betrayal.

The second disciple's disappointment.

And so, ■ ■■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ finally chose the third disciple, the last subject of [The Universe's Wild Expanse], the ultimate disciple willing to accompany them even to the point of erasing their own existence, who was none other than me.

"So, only one mystery remains."

"What's that?"

"You."

I shifted my gaze.

"Sword Emperor, sir."

"....."

My eyes looked straight ahead, at the Guardian Spirit.

The living form of the Sword Emperor was in front of me.

"Why are you here? Why are you here as the substitute for the 'third' trauma, all alone in this place where there's nothing?"

"Who are you?"

The corners of the Sword Emperor's mouth lifted.

"Nothing here, you say. From my perspective, there's plenty."

In the eyes of the Sword Emperor was reflected a youth with black hair.

"There you are, Kim Gong-Ja."

"....."

"Perhaps you are the third trauma."

Tick.

"I'm like a ghost clinging to you, added as a bonus. Or perhaps, since we devised a plan together to screw ■■■■■■■■■■ over, I was included considering that too. Anyway, you're here."

Tick.

"Just as your love waited for you, and your master waited for you, Kim Gong-Ja, the third wound drawn by this Constellation is waiting for you. Perhaps that alone is the wound. Everything else is secondary."

Tick.

"Now, a day will have passed by without me or the Constellation knowing, and only you are left with a wound."

"Go."

[Trauma re-enactment complete.]

"That's the best I can do for you, partner."

[The target's ego has remained intact.]

"Think about how you're going to live."

[Penalty Finalized.]

And then.

The world around me shattered into pieces.

Chapter 322: ■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ for You, and Only You (1)

---

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

Tick.

Somewhere, a second hand seemed to move, or so I thought.

"....."

“So, Mister, where shall we head this time? We have quite a few paths to choose from. We could directly invade the headquarters of the Mad Demon Cult or take a brief respite by returning to the city!”

I looked around.

Slowly.

Savoring this world as if tasting it.

-Terror be gone, death stay away.

There was one existence that needed no savoring.

With an unimpressed expression, the Guardian Spirit recited the world's most nonsensical mantra, clearly annoyed and bored.

Our eyes met.

-.....

As soon as our gazes intercultural, the Guardian Spirit sealed his lips, his eyebrows slightly raised instead.

And thoughts, if possible.

Without harboring any hostility towards ■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■, I simply continued to observe my surroundings.

The Constellation was all smiles.

“If we head to the city, hmm, that’s right! Mister, you have vanquished numerous demonic heads so far. The citizens tormented by the heretical demon cults would surely welcome you warmly, wouldn’t they?”

Beyond the Constellation’s shoulder.

“They might be weak and cowardly, but they will not forget your grace, Mister!”

Tick.

A wall clock was ticking away.

"....."

Only then did the true essence of this world reveal itself to me.

This place had no dense forests.

No Thirteen Evils.

No Blood Demon, God Demon, White Demon, or Mad Demon ruling the shadows and lights of the world, and nor did they have heretical followers. No grand sanctuaries harboring vast secrets, no cities, villages or streets. Not even a small clothing store existed in this place.

Tick.

Only a wall clock remained.

“If we do go to the city, um, let’s see! So far, Mister, you have eliminated numerous demonic beings. The city’s residents, who have been harassed by the pseudo-demon cults until now, would probably welcome you quite warmly!”

In the meager attic.

A space barely four square meters.

Wooden floor tiles were filled with dust in every crevice. It was shabby. The floor seemed coated not with bleach but with dust, shining palely. There was a window, but nothing outside. Only eternal incandescence illuminated the room.

The faint light scattered dust particles.

Too small and too blurry to replace petals, these dust specks, taking up most of this attic along with the bookshelves, fell and disappeared.

A wall clock, wooden floors, a window, bookshelves, and dust.

"....."

That was the 60th stage.

The entirety of this world.

“Ah. While Mister ponders over which choice to make, a man from the recently destroyed stronghold of the White Demon Cult approaches. He seems to recognize you, Mister. No, he specifically seems to have followed you!”

The last thing left was the Constellation's face.

Not that he had a head.

Simply put, the place where the face should have been looked like distorted blackness, as if a child had mischievously smeared black crayon.

■.

Or ■.

It was either a window without anything outside or bars trapping the outside.

“[Ah, Mister, the King of Death? I am not a suspicious person. I am merely a hunter who was captured by the White Demon Cult and forced into labor until now.]”

Tick.

Black smudges where the Constellation's face should have been, disappeared only at the corners of the mouth.

Thin lips moved slightly, now firmly shut and firmly shut, earnestly mimicking an old man's tone.

“[Please come visit us!]”

Even without eyes or a nose.

He seemed happy.

The Constellation appeared content.

“So, Mister. What will you do now? The old man has finished speaking. He probably hasn't shared the entire situation. Mister! How will you proceed...."

Whoosh!

As the Constellation began to raise his voice, a burst of light spread next to the chair I was seated on. Emerging from the light was a hunter, whose identity was unknown.

The hunter looked around in slight confusion.

"Huh? Where is this....."

"....."

The Constellation frowned.

It was like a child being interrupted while building a sandcastle in a playground.

"Alright, congratulations. You've cleared the 60th floor."

“...What?”

“What do you mean 'what'? It means there's nothing left for you to do here.”

The Sovereign waved his hand dismissively.

“Just get lost.”

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

Once again, the hunter was enveloped in light.

Without a chance to respond, the hunter was whisked away by the light.

“Really. It’s so annoying when people interrupt the flow like this.”

The Constellation sighed.

“Ah, Mister, don’t worry. You’ll forget everything that just happened! Hehe. Anything that interferes with our story gets automatically deleted!”

"....."

Is that so?

‘That was... someone who cleared the 59th floor and came up here.’

I realized what had happened.

After the Magic Tower had collapsed at our hands, the number of challengers aiming for higher floors significantly increased.

Some of them should have reached the 60th floor by now, and the others are still on their way.

The hunter who briefly appeared in [this world] a moment ago was one such case.

‘And ■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ is forcibly passing them through. As soon as the hunters reach, the stage is declared cleared, and they are sent away.’

That hunter must have had his memories altered.

He probably believes he had a proper adventure on the 60th floor, received a decent quest, and successfully completed it.

‘Even the Guardian Spirit had incorrect memories about the 60th floor.’

Let alone what the other hunters would think.

It’s certain.

This attic is now a sanctuary reserved solely for the two of us.

“What! Shall we refresh our spirits anew!”

The Constellation said brightly.

“As the silence stretched on without a response, an anxious air enveloped the old man's face. Nevertheless, being a hunter who had stayed on the 60th floor for quite some time, it seems the leisure to manage his expression had long vanished. The old man—”

Stroke.

"....."

The Constellation paused.

It was only after the Constellation halted that I realized I had extended my hand to stroke the Constellation's head.

“It works.”

I murmured.

“Even if you've lost your appearance, you can still be touched.”

"....."

"That's a relief."

The Constellation's lips parted slightly.

".....Huh? Eh? .....Uhm?"

It stammered like a broken music box.

The Constellation seemed utterly baffled by the current situation, tilting its head left and right in confusion.

"Huh.....?"

A buzzing noise filled my head.

I knew then, that it was the tower signaling the manifestation of the Constellation's power. For a constellation that had lost its name, coordinates, and was beyond identification, the tower attempted to make its presence known through the buzzing noise.

Had it been before the regression, I too would have forgotten the recent memory.

However, now, for some reason, I hadn't lost anything.

I vividly remember spending half a lifetime as Raviel and master, the conversation with the Guardian Spirit in the white space, and even the unnamed hunter who arrived only to be unceremoniously expelled. I remember all of it.

“Huh? What?”

The Constellation was flustered.

“Why? .....How? This shouldn't be happening, um. Um!”

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

It was futile.

“Huh?”

And meaningless.

"....."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

No matter how much the Constellation exercised its power, or how much it begged the skill for oblivion, my gaze remained fixed on the Constellation's face. The face smeared with ■ and ■, was reflected in my eyes.

"....."

The shabby 5-square-meter attic remained a 5-square-meter world, and the wall clock was still a wall clock. The [The Universe's Wild Expanse] skill had not erased or interfered with my memories.

My hand, resting on the Constellation's head, where the face had vanished, did not retreat.

“Why, why.....”

“Because I feel no hostility towards you right now.”

I said.

“There’s no chance I’ll harm you. I have no intention of ruining you or disrupting your enjoyment. I’m harmless.”

"....."

“You must have used [The Universe's Wild Expanse] to beg. To exclude any being or event that interferes with our play. Thanks to that, even the slightest voice or thought that obstructs our time together could be eliminated.”

Stroke.

My hand brushed over the head that had lost its face.

Something that had been deprived and disappeared... Only a trace remained at the boundary.

Everyone has their own creases, but even the creases seemed invisible on the Constellation.

I hoped that at the very least, my touch could prove that something had been there.

“But your wish doesn’t reach me. Or rather, it does reach me, which makes it even more impossible to damage my memory. Maintaining my memory is deemed [for your sake] by the skill.”

"What....."

“I want you to be happy.”

"....."

The Constellation froze.

“Have I become your hope?”

I continued.

“For thousands of years, has no one ever satisfied you? Throughout your life, you abandoned your original name and even your face, yet, was there never a voice that truly reached you? Is that how you lived?”

“I didn’t come here to be a meaning to you. Yes. I can’t lie. I’ve forgotten most of what you said to me. To me, you are still nameless, and you will continue to be nothing more than noise that I can’t even locate.”

But.

“If you wish to make me your meaning today.”

If that’s the case.

“I will dedicate today to you.”

"....."

“You’re not perfect.”

[The skill is activating.]

“You must have known you’d be betrayed the moment you gave trust to the first contractor. You surely had flaws too.”

[You have been designated as a target of The Universe's Wild Expanse.]

“So you are somewhat rash.”

[The skill is activating.]

“Perhaps you regret things soon after starting them, get disheartened, but still can’t give up your own pleasure and keep challenging humans.”

Tick.

A small crack appeared in the black smudge on the Constellation’s face.

A fissure formed.

“Perhaps your eyes are slightly sharp?”

[The King of Death is exerting his skill.]

As I imagined, the corners of the eyebrows, the sharpness of the eyes, peeked through the opening fissure.

[The Universe’s Wild Expanse] made my imagination come true exactly as envisioned.

"....."

“Your hair will be green.”

Tick.

I touched his eyebrows.

“Because you seem to harbor a lot of jealousy.”

"....."

Tick.

The black smudge cracked a bit more.

Beneath the broken shell was the luster of emerald.

".....It's pointless."

Tick.

"I've already lost everything. Name and face both. No matter how much you, the King of Death, search, how can you find what's not there?"

"Then I'll imagine until we find it."

Tick.

“I’ll give you silver hair. I’ll imagine black hair. Look in the mirror at the form I’ve imagined for you, and confirm it, then tell me. [Yes]. Or, [No].”

"....."

“Not just the hair, but the eyes, ears, nose, everything.”

[The skill is activating.]

“I’ll summon countless co lors and shapes, piece by piece, until someday, your appearance gets restored. Your name, too. A, B, C, D, every letter spoken will surely echo with the sound that was your name.”

[The skill is activating.]

“Let’s find it.”

Tick.

“I’ll find it for you.”

Another layer of black husk crumbled.

Eyes.

The Constellation's eyes were grey.

Chapter 323: ■ ■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ for You, and Only You (2)

---

I have heard your wish.

Every wish requires a price.

First, I will take your name.

Second, I will take your face.

Third, let's take your fear.

If that's alright with you.

And still, you're fine with it.

May fortune be with you.

"....."

Silence flowed between us.

However, the direction of the silence was different.

I closed my mouth to wait for an answer, and the Constellation bit its lip, unsure of how to respond. The ■■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■, now with emerald hair and ash-grey eyes, slowly exhaled.

"...But."

But,

"I don't know either."

The breath was toxic.

“I can’t remember what I looked like. Even if you, the King of Death, say you will find me, it’s simply impossible. What tone I used, what clothes I wore, if I could even wear them. I can’t recall.”

How can you find something that doesn’t exist?

The breath murmured so.

Exhaling a poison that had long been festering in the lungs.

“I can’t find myself because I abandoned it. You, the King of Death, can’t find me either.”

“That’s right.”

I nodded.

“It might indeed be difficult to find the original you. Even if we think we found it, there’s no guarantee it’s the right one.

It's like planting a red flag claiming you've found the South Pole in the middle of a snowfield without any equipment."

"Yes, so..."

"But you don't need the original you."

I caressed the Constellation's cheek.

Tick.

[The skill has been activated.]

A white outline appeared.

The smudge was peeled away, and ■ crumbled.

Another bar of the cage that covered the constellation broke.

"Finding the original you, I don't think that would make you happy.”

“...Why do you think so?”

"You abandoned it, didn't you? There must have been a reason."

I smiled faintly.

“I don't know where you were born. What you experienced in the distant past, your childhood, the wounds you received or the embarrassing things you did. I don't know those trivial details.”

We couldn't see them even as traumas.

No skill could easily reveal them.

“But I know what you like, how much you like it.”

You like adventures.

You love a life of smashing through enemies with someone you chose, experiencing thrilling dangers, enduring true pain to leap over death, and keep moving forward.

To the extent that you'd abandon your original name and face to achieve it.

“You like me.”

"....."

To the extent that you'd be okay with losing your existence by using your last third wish on me.

“Then, please choose [the face you want to show me].”

"....."

“I will see you as you wish to be seen by me. I will see what you show me. What else matters?”

"....."

“You like me. You like adventures. You chased what you like, threw away the unnecessary burden, and came all this way. That’s you.”

Tick.

“You haven’t lost yourself.”

Tick.

“You came all the way here to find the self you want.”

『Everyone travels.』

『In a 5-square-meter attic, an infinite desert lies.』

"....."

Startled.

The Constellation shuddered once and looked at me.

[The skill 'The Universe's Wild Expanse ' has been activated.]

That's right.

I was now using the power of The Universe's Wild Expanse to create a world.

Just as the Constellation had brainwashed me to show the world.

This time, I became this child's Constellation, showing it the world.

『A young fox.』

『A fox born in the desert knows there's no water and no toys. As the wind blows overnight, hills flow away, valleys are filled and with every passing day it loses its home.』

『Every child born in the desert can't love itself from the moment of birth. 』

『 But the night sky. 』

"....."

The Constellation looked up.

[The skill has been activated.]

With the help of my imagination and The Universe's Wild Expanse, a vast night sky spread above our heads.

Even in an empty desert, if you look up, stars are scattered.

“It’s okay.”

I whispered.

『 Children without landmarks in their birthplace have no choice but to walk using the night sky as their map.」

“I won’t deceive you.”

"....."

The world is imagined.

A young fox's journey begins.

『The only sounds you hear in the desert is the sand rustling, crackling and drying out.』

『Just the parched wind.』

『The fox walks, accumulating sand in its heart, layer by layer.』

“It’s okay.”

『The fox walks because it has nothing.』

『The food is never satisfying.』

『Everything grown in the desert always contains sand, so when you bite, sand sticks to your lips. No matter how much you eat, the thirst doesn't quench. Though something accumulates in the once empty heart, it's not the starlight of the night sky but the dried sandy soil.』

『Have I become the desert?』

"....."

『Am I also becoming the desert?』

"....."

『The countless grains of sand that cover the world are infinite and boundless, evidence of all that have died on this land make up the sands of the Ganges, and what will die from now on will count the Nayutas*, but am I just a grain of sand being added to the already infinite sand?』

*Originally taken from the Sanskrit word meaning "a very large number," one nayuta is generally acknowledged as 10 to the power of 60, though some people argue that it's to the power of 72.

『The desert remains a desert.』

『There's nothing but traces of death wherever you look.』

『Everyone is dying.』

"....."

『The fox chooses a cactus due to lack of food.』

『Because it's thirsty.』

『Sometimes, as you cross the desert, cacti stand like telephone poles. The child knows there's water inside. Water. The only comfort that washes away the deadly thirst.』

『The thorns are well-developed.』

.....To protect even a handful of water..... in this sandy hell..... you've developed so many thorns.....

『The fox whimpers as it plucks the cactus. It is barefoot. Thorns stick into its soles. Blades graze the toes and blood flows. The skin is pierced, but if it doesn't drink, it feels like dying, so the fox cuts the flesh of the cactus.』

.....I'm sorry.....

『It sucks up every drop of water.』

.....I'm sorry.....

『Thorny water.』

『The fox is quenched. For a while, it can walk a bit more. But its throat hurts. A sharp thorn is stuck inside.』

『The young fox paid the price.』

『The cactus didn't forget to take revenge on the beast that stole and drank from it. 』

"....."

『After drinking the water for the first time, and then the second, the fox realized. 』

『Maybe. 』

『Maybe I'm the one making the desert? 』

『The fox, its nose buried in the flesh of a cactus, suddenly looks up at the sky. The sun is painful. It had always wondered why the world was a desert, curious where the desert came from, and thought perhaps it was because the sun was so hot. 』

『Perhaps, after the sun, I am the next sinner in this desert? 』

"Ah....."

『I've killed so many cacti.』

"Ah,"

『I have even cursed the cacti for not being an oasis.』

"Ah... uh..., ah."

『To those who bristled with thorns to protect even a handful of water, I questioned why they wounded the soles of my feet, breaking their black thorns. Those thorns were merely blackened with dried blood.』

『When I walk on a sandy path, corpses of thorns lie scattered.』

"....."

『The desert becomes even more of a desert.』

".....No. ....No, King of Death. I am....."

『Prick.』

『The fox's throat hurts.』

"No! I-I did nothing wrong."

『I ate too much sand.』

『I swallowed too many thorns.』

".....Why....."

『But.』

『That was all there was.』

"....."

『Please save me.』

『Someone, please, save me.』

『There's nothing here.』

『Not even I exist.』

".....Yes....."

『All I became adept at was breaking thorns with my feet.』

『Now, even boasting that my feet don't get hurt when stepping on cacti, would that be a boast?』

『I'm not bleeding.』

『Is a sign of being an adult.』

『At some point, I find myself adept at surviving in this desert.』

".....I hate it."

『I've also become accustomed to drinking water.』

『The trick is not to cut the cacti entirely.』

『You don't need to remove all the thorns.』

『Just one or two.』

『At most three.』

『Then, just peel the skin where the thorns were removed a little and drink the juice. Just a bit. A tiny bit of indulgence.』

『It doesn't hurt.』

『The cactus doesn't die.』

『There's no sinner, no corpse.』

"I hate it!"

『 Just a dry throat. 』

『 An unquenchable thirst that grows little by little on the inside, until it becomes as big as a heart. 』

『 One night, I vomited. 』

『 What came out of the heart wasn't blood, but sand. 』

"I loathe it....."

『 Even the things I thought were stars in the night sky. 』

『 Looking back, they were sand grains that had already died. 』

『 Sand sparkling in the sunlight. 』

『Both this desert and the night sky were nothing but graves.』

"....."

『The fox, having walked the desert for thousands of years looked up at some starlight and slowly let out a breath,』

"I..."

I.

"I hate this world."

The breath was poisonous.

"It's boring. Tedious. No, meaningless. Why? Why is there no meaning? How can you laugh? What's so funny? There's nothing. It's lacking. In fact, everything is lacking. Why are you here? Why do you keep being there? How? In this utterly empty world,"

Why is there nothing for me?

".....Mister."

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■ ■■■
■■■■■.]

Tch.

[■ ■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■ activates its skill.]

"Mister, you will make me happy, won't you?"

Before long.

At the fox's feet, an oasis unfolds.

"Isn't that so?"

The mirror of the desert.

The unscarred white sand gets wet, turning white.

With each ripple, the grains of sand tick and softly rustle.

"....."

I did not answer the fox right away.

Walking from the middle of the oasis, parting the shallow water.

Crossing the water that barely covered my ankles.

I went behind the fox.

"Yes."

I held the fox's shoulder.

"It's okay for you to drink me."

I put a little strength into my hand.

The fox, whose shoulder was grabbed from behind, naturally dropped its head.

The water's surface.

"If you take a sip when you wake up today, I will bring back the same amount of water while you sleep. Today, tomorrow and the day after. Until the day I dry up."

In the mirror of water so clear that it could break upon touch, the fox was reflected.

The fox's face was reflected.

Its fur was shining like gold.

And its eyes turned to ash.

Even the ■.

"So."

I held the fox's back, supported its shoulder, and whispered in its ear.

"Please tell me your name."

"....."

"Let me see you. Your face. Tell me the face you want to show me and the name you want to be pronounced by me. Decide. Then..."

As long as you wish.

"It's okay for you to live by drinking me."

Drip.

A ■ fell from the fox's face.

It was black rust that flowed.

".....I deceived you....."

The part where the rust fell turned black.

The oasis became slightly muddier because of it.

But the water was still clear enough to swallow the rust shed by the fox and reflect its face transparently.

Yeah.

It's fortunate.

"I brainwashed you. I fragmented your memories. I tore apart the voices that reached you and cut off every touch that reached you. Yet, you..."

"I told you, it's okay."

I stroked the head of the young fox.

"My daughter is a Demon King who has killed me hundreds of times."

I could stroke it without a hint of falsehood.

"And my son is a warrior who challenges me to a duel whenever he's bored."

It was also fortunate that I could do so.

"My lover has stabbed my heart with a knife and killed me."

"....."

"Brainwashing? Memory manipulation? Sorry, but that's nothing to me."

I smiled.

"I don't hate someone just because they harmed me."

"....."

Silence flowed between us.

Eventually, the fox opened its mouth.

"But a person named Yoo Soo-Ha..."

"Can we talk about that later? It'd be even better if we didn't at all. Anyway, it would be nice if you could tell me your name."

Silence flowed once more.

But the direction of the silence was different.

".....My name is....."

I closed my mouth to wait for the answer, and the fox bit its lip, unsure of how to respond. The young fox, now with golden fur and ash-colored eyes, slowly let out a breath.

"■ ■■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■■ ■■■....."

The fox's lips reflected on the water surface moved slightly.

"Only for you."

Perhaps.

The fox pondered over the six words it could choose.

The young fox thought about the nineteen blanks the world had allowed it.

And suddenly looked down at its ash-tainted eyes.

"....."

The fox nodded.

"Yes."

Click.

Finally, all the rust peeled off from the fox's beautiful face.

With a face cleansed of ink, a voice free of thorns, and a heart devoid of sand.

"Just for you,"

The child of the desert said.

"I am A Music Box Just for You."

And so, it became.

[A Music Box Just for You activates its skill.]

The desert crumbled away.

Like an hourglass turned upside down.

The sand that formed an infinite horizon fell endlessly before disappearing.

"I will sing for you, King of Death."

[The skill has been activated.]

"As long as it's for me, I am just an instrument that sings as engraved by you, Mister. An in strument that no one but you can play, remembering only one piece of music, that is me."

Swoosh.

The golden fur settled down.

"So."

"Yes."

I held the fox's paw.

"From now on, the only constellation I serve is you."

To the child who will become my god.

[Congratulations.]

['A Music Box Just for You' has become your Constellation.]

[You are the sole believer of 'A Music Box Just for You'.]

In the oasis of a desert spanning about 5 square meters.

I made a contract with a grey fox.

Chapter 324: A Music Box Just for You, and Only You (3)

---

"I love you, Mister. Please go out with me."

"Ah, that's not possible."

"Damn it!!"

The first thing I did upon hosting the Constellation was reject the Constellation's confession.

[A Music Box Just for You becomes angry.]

Thump. Thump! The young fox stamped its feet on the floor in frustration.

Those who haven't seen it wouldn't know, but a fox playing whack-a-mole is incredibly cute. That means, my Constellation is cute.

"So, I'm not cute to you?"

"No. You are cute."

"I'm not lovely to you?"

"You are lovely."

"You like this form I've taken on, and moreover, Mister, you want to make me happy, impervious to any brainwashing or manipulation, right?"

"Your words just now are correct."

"Then that's love!"

The fox leaped up and grabbed my collar. Swing swing. Those who haven't been grabbed wouldn't know, but a fox hanging from a person's collar and squirming is incredibly cute. You get what I mean?

"Hurry up and love me! Love me right now! Bestow upon me immense happiness, human! Make me happy!"

Hmm.

I hope you understand what I mean.

[A Music Box Just for You activates its skill.]

['The Universe's Wild Expanse' attempts to change your emotions.]

[Failed!]

[Skill conditions not met.]

"That won't work, you know... God...."

The Universe's Wild Expanse fulfills each other's imaginations. If what I imagine is the happiness of the Constellation, and I wish for that happiness to be realized not as a delusion but in reality, no distortion occurs.

In short, I wished for the fox god to be happy in reality even without [The Universe's Wild Expanse].

Until the end of our reality, until complete death arrives. Therefore, [The Universe's Wild Expanse] will continue without adding any distortion to reality.

"Ugh....."

The fox wrapped its head with both hands.

".....It's strange. The weird one is Mister, but it's as if I'm being treated like a childish and weird Constellation. Isn't it strange? If this isn't love, then what is love? What is it?"

"When you can ask that question, that's youth."

"Am I already in my thousands of years of youth? Damn. Spring is too long. I might die of pollen allergy before summer comes."

"God, your speech has become a bit rough. You're cute enough to smack around the cute things of the universe a few times, but isn't there an error in your speech? Shouldn't your speech sound more like a fox?"

"Disciple, then, do you know how a fox cries?"

"Ming ding ding ding ridi ding?"

"That's outdated. And you got the rhythm wrong too."

The young fox said coldly.

Foxes can also make expressions.

Today, I, Kim Gong-Ja, a Socrates among us gained another new insight while climbing the tower.

-Indeed....

Guardian Spirit suddenly sighed.

-The concentration of bullshit around Kim Zombie has thickened even more....

"What does that mean?"

[Shiny tries to butt into the conversation, asking what that means.]

[A Music Box Just for You deeply contemplates the sound of a fox's cry.]

-Really, where did you gather all these 36-flavor crazies from? Is this even legal? Zombie, is your existence legal? To my eyes, it seems like it needs to be illegal.

The tiny 5-square-meter room was bustling.

Inside it were 1 person, 1 sword, 1 desert fox, and 1 ghost.

It was the most perfectly racially equitable 4-member party in history.

"There's no need to stay here any longer."

First off, it's cramped.

"Peep. Peep."

And the fox god answered. It seemed the young desert fox had finally decided how it should cry. From my perspective, it was evolutionarily and probably physically the wrong vocalization. But the fox god seemed quite pleased.

"Peep, peep."

"What are you saying?"

"Peek."

I immediately understood what the fox god was saying.

[A Music Box Just for You governs the 61st floor as a Constellation.]

[A Music Box Just for You assigns you a quest.]

Before me, the grains of sand moved with a swish.

The granules came together to form letters.

+

[Spoon-fed Quest]

Constellation: A Music Box Just for You

Difficulty: F

Objective: Stroke the head of the Constellation you serve.

*However, you must stroke with all your sincerity.

+

"....."

"Peep."

The fox god lifted its chin confidently and triumphantly.

"Yes. Understood."

I smiled and stroked the fox god's head.

As my hand brushed over it, platinum fur rippled softly.

With all sincerity.

[Quest Completed.]

[Stage Cleared.]

Perhaps, there has never been a hunter who completed a quest this quickly.

If this were a speedrun, then it's a speedrun.

Not counting the half-lives of Raviel and my master that I had to spend.

[Congratulations.]

[You have cleared the 61st floor!]

And I was enveloped in a sight different from before.

Swish.

A sandstorm blew. It wasn't irritating to breathe in, nor did it sting the eyes as it brushed by. It merely carried the sweet scent of desert roses. The delicate fragrance of flowers that bloomed by feeding only on dew under the sun, lingered at the tip of my nose.

'It's not a dazzling light.'

Until now, whenever I headed to the next stage, I was enveloped in white light.

'Perhaps because I truly have a Constellation now.'

I smiled.

Now a Constellation that cannot use any powers and has nothing to do but stay by my side, but perhaps that's what constellations in the night sky are meant to be.

The wish I have for my Constellation is already enough.

If I could smell the scent of roses with every floor I climb.

'That's fine.'

I drowned in the sandstorm.

[You are being transferred to the next stage!]

Tick.

The last thing I heard was the moving sound of the wall clock left in the tiny room.

---

[You have entered the 62nd floor.]

A new floor.

Although it had only been about a week in reality since I stayed on the 61st floor, my arrival was announced with a clamor.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth re-detects your presence!]

The Constellations must have been tracking me continuously.

After causing such a spectacle on the 50th floor, I even managed to simultaneously contract with up to ten Constellations, albeit temporarily.

Whether it was Constellations I had contracted with or not, it was difficult for them not to be interested in my tumultuous actions.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth notifies other Constellations of your arrival!]

And then, my presence on the 61st floor disappeared.

Thanks to [The Universe's Wild Expanse ] activated by the fox god, we were completely isolated, locked in a world just for the two of us.

Even other Constellations didn't know about the fox god's existence, nor its powers. Maybe the Constellations were just stomping their feet, not knowing what on earth had happened?

And now, as if nothing had happened, I've returned, hence their hasty messages.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth proposes that you become their official disciple.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains offers you a disciple's position.]

[The Lonely Seeker offers you a disciple's position.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust proposes the position of Apostle to you!]

It's been a while.

Quite a few familiar names appeared one after another in the messages.

I gave a broad smile to the invisible Constellations.

"Have you all been well?"

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth questions where you had been hiding all this time.]

"I wasn't exactly hiding. The details are private, so let's keep it a secret..."

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust is proposing the position of Apostle to you!]

"Ah. Right. About that."

Boing.

The fox god leaped onto my waist and climbed up to my back.

"I've already become a servant to a Constellation."

The fox god coiled itself around my shoulder. And then, it wrapped its fox tail gently around my neck. From afar, it might look like I was wearing a golden scarf.

"Peep."

The fox god nuzzled its head against my cheek.

[The King of Death is a disciple of A Music Box Just for You.]

[A Music Box Just for You politely requests other Constellations not to mess with you.]

A deep silence enveloped the heavens.

[The Lonely Seeker falls silent.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains falls silent.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust falls silent.]

Only the sound of the fox god's tail swishing and its eye-smile quietly flowed.

After a while, one Constellation sent a message.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth politely asks what kind of trouble you've been rolling in.]

Hmm.

I couldn't ask for a better first impression.

"Now, everyone. Calm down a bit..."

[A Music Box Just for You nonsensically responds that it really likes snake liquor.]

".....Snake liquor? Why bring up snake liquor all of a sudden?"

Guardian Spirit answered my question.

-The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth, that is, Hisimet Cretsu, is a serpent god, Zombie. In short, your Constellation lord has just insulted a serpent with racial slurs.

"Ah. So that's why..."

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth swears to kill you!]

".....They react so violently. Hmm."

Indeed.

It seems our fox god intends to make enemies of other Constellations right from the start, to ensure they don't mess with me.

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust says they have never heard of such a Constellation like yours.]

[A Music Box Just for You responds that's because your rabbit ears are rotten. A Music Box Just for You expresses sympathy for you, who lacks someone to regularly clean your ears.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust swears to tear you apart.]

Remarkable.

".....Perhaps Babbit is."

-A rabbit god. From what I know, they take pride in believing their ears are the most adorable in the universe. They laugh off insults to their parents and character, but for some reason, they go berserk if their ears are insulted.

"I see. Can you explain it in simpler terms?"

-Um...

Guardian Spirit pondered seriously.

-As if someone insulted Raviel to you?

What?

That's catastrophic.

Are you planning to destroy the world, fox god?

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains says everyone is too excited and suggests restraint.]

[A Music Box Just for You worries that seeing your long face makes it feel like its own face is getting elongated.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains prepares for war.]

This is serious.

The forces hostile to us are increasing at an alarming rate.

I had no other choice but to give a taste of hell to those who insulted Raviel, except to talk it out first by giving them hellish pain.

The Constellations would probably do the same.

How can we correct this misunderstanding and delusion?

-No. With a Constellation that manipulates the world for its own pleasure as your god, what misunderstandings or delusions are there to correct...? Did you really think it would respect other beings? It probably regards all life in this universe as mere ants...

Let's ignore Guardian Spirit's words.

They're not good for my mental health.

"Let's, let's focus on conquering the stage for now, God."

"Peep."

"Wow, the 62nd floor. What kind of place might it be? Is a force like the Magic Tower reigning here? I'm curious. So curious I could go crazy. Really, I'm going crazy with curiosity! I'm just going insane!"

I desperately tried to divert the fox god's attention.

"There must be a Constellation governing this stage, right? Who could it be? It would be nice if it were a somewhat normal and friendly one this time. Really curious who it could be..."

"No need to be curious."

A voice was heard.

"And you won't need to know."

At that moment, the ground shook.

The reason the ground shook was that something had plunged from the sky. Exactly in front of me. More precisely, where my head would have been if I hadn't used my movement technique to dodge.

Kooooom!

I immediately put distance between us. The spot where I had just evaded was smashed again. Bang! Bang! As I swiftly flew away, lightning-like strikes followed me as if a flyswatter was being swung three, four, several times to catch a fly.

"Looks like you're worthy to be called a king."

After a total of eighteen attacks, taking 2 seconds in time, the one who attacked me finally spoke.

"King of Death. You're the one who killed my Apostle."

It wasn't a human.

It resembled a human, but with giant tooth-like horns on both sides of its forehead.

Golden eyes devoid of emotion were directed at me.

"Pay for your arrogance with your death."

Creak.

The Constellation was carrying a massive hammer, overly large, on its shoulder.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow attacks you.]

Ruin-Harvesting Cow.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow swears to annihilate you.]

In the past, Silvia Evanair...

It was the Constellation that Lady Goldencup had worshipped as a god.

Volume 14 – Chapters 325-349

Chapter 325: The God and the King (1)

---

"Ruin-Harvesting Cow is 'Mutia'."

Or so the blond-haired priest boy had said.

The Heretic Inquisitor stroked his chin.

"Mainly governing the areas of [Destruction] and [Recreation]."

"Simple but powerful."

At that time, the Heretic Inquisitor was wearing a flowing dress.

It was the period when he was impersonating Lady Goldencup, the Baroness.

Therefore, the Heretic Inquisitor not only stroked his chin but also flicked open a fan, though such a description is probably irrelevant.

“Domains reinterpret the world and brainwash people. The Great Library we were just in does the same! The Head Librarian interprets the world as a [collection of stories], and there, we are [characters in a story].”

"Defeating those who possess their own laws with laws we can use."

The Heretic Inquisitor smiled broadly.

"I define this as a Holy War and a Constellation War!"

---

Kooooom!

A storm that lightly swept everything around it crashed down. It was a single strike. Rocks turned to rubble, pebbles to sandstorms, one strike incinerated the surrounding area.

"You dodge disgustingly like an eel."

The ground cracked in a grid pattern. The lines of the grid creaked and shifted out of place. Bang! Boom! Each time [Ruin-Harvesting Cow] swung the hammer, the misalignment intensified, and finally, the terrain was damaged beyond its original form.

"Try escaping forever, King of Death."

Creak-creak-

"If you're wondering what happened to the one who tried to flee from me, it would be wise to ask directly to your head. I once exchanged blows with one for 31 moon rises and falls. If you intend to ask about his whereabouts, you will meet him the moment your skull is shattered."

The ground flipped over.

"At the same time, you will face your ancestors the moment your skull is shattered."

The terrain thrashed and the landscape was in chaos. Creak! The ground tore apart. Sediments that had accumulated over a long time were exposed.

Mutia wasn't just showing off her strength.

"Peep!"

The moment the fox god loudly warned, the ground collapsed.

Rumble rumble rumble!

The entire floor of the land surrounding where Mutia and I were standing caved in. I tried to evade, but Boom! Mutia swung the hammer to block me. I had to choose whether to avoid the collapsing ground or the hammer aimed at my head.

It wasn't a difficult choice.

Rumble rumble...! Boom! Crash, roll roll.....!

As a result, I chose to endure the collapsing ground. The altitude at which the two of us fought became lower and lower, and with every hammer blow to the ground by the Constellation, the speed of the collapse accelerated.

"Indeed."

Before long, our battleground transformed into a colosseum.

The difference from the Colosseum built in Rome might be that it didn't consider the audience at all.

Where the spectator seats should be, there were only steep sedimentary rocks standing.

"Not only did you swing the hammer at me... you changed the terrain to make it hard to escape."

The Colosseum was an artificial hell created for still-living humans to watch and enjoy the bloodshed and slaughter. A gladiatorial arena without spectator seats would simply be a pure hell.

"That's right, young lad."

The one who created a pit of hell in just a few minutes readjusted her grip on the hammer.

"Live as long as I have, and you'll grow tired of achieving just one thing at a time. Achieving at least two goals simultaneously is not so much a virtue for us as it is a habit."

"If it's at least two, it could actually be three or four."

"You're a quick-witted lad."

Ruin-Harvesting Cow.

Mutia, with her golden hair flowing, looked up at the sky with her golden eyes.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow issues a quest to its followers.]

[You have been targeted by the quest!]

[The quest has been revealed.]

+

[Annihilate Your Nemesis]

Difficulty: SS

Objective: You have killed my believer. You have killed an Apostle. You have severed the voice of a child I took in and cut off their lifeline. Is there any reason I should not wring your neck now?

Die.

Compensate with your death.

I have heard you are eyed by many Constellations. Some Constellations will even steal this proclamation to read it by any means necessary. To those, I declare: If you are not prepared to fight with me, Mutia, for all eternity, do not meddle in this vendetta.

It is simple and clear, I wish for your death.

*However, you cannot participate in this quest.

*You are the [Target] of this quest.

+

The moment the letters were engraved in the air.

"Strike."

Behind those letters, dark shadows loomed. As many people as the letters, or perhaps even more—on the other side of the colosseum. From atop the high sedimentary rocks, they all leaped towards me in unison.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's Apostles manifest.]

Each one of them.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's Apostles manifest.]

Was like Lady Goldencup.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's Apostles manifest.]

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's Apostles manifest.]

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's Apostles manifest.]

Apostles.

"Is this the third stratagem?"

"That's right. These are the children who wish to avenge their sister's enemy."

"Nice. Because she's Lady Goldencup, so Goldencup, and truly a master's lackey, so Goldencup."

"Didn't I tell you? At this age, it's natural to aim for multiple gains. It's nothing to be amazed about."

I tightly gripped my sword handle.

About two hundred people.

All of the Ruin-Harvesting Cow, Mutia's Apostles, were wielding huge hammers. Should I say even their hair was similar? They were similar. Whether short or long, from translucent platinum to dusky gold, all had golden hair waving.

"Scattering gold dust across the galaxy."

I admired the scene unfolding above me. A golden meteor shower was pouring down. The word Constellation War, once mentioned by the Heretic Inquisitor, fleetingly crossed my mind.

"Ha."

Another voice also crossed my mind.

"You seem quite at ease."

It was Mutia's telepathy.

"To compose a poem facing death. If I have two hundred Apostles following me, they are sharper than ten thousand soldiers under Mahos. King of Death, are you also so relaxed because you have laid out several schemes like me?"

"Well."

The two hundred Apostles who jumped were now right in front of me.

I gathered my ki.

"Why bother with schemes when I can already count two, three, four or five directions with a single swing of my sword?"

A collision happened.

"Impudent!"

Screeeeech!

The first to strike with a hammer and clash with me was a short warrior. She too was a user of ki manifestation, an Aura user. Dressed in traditional clothes adorned with plum blossoms, her short hair was neatly arranged, but that elegance and tidiness couldn't hide the warrior's rage.

"How dare you be insolent in front of Lord Mutia!"

"I could also speak without moving my tongue using telepathy. Shall I?"

"I'll smash your skull!"

"That would be problematic."

Whooooosh!

Another Apostle aimed for my side and swung their hammer down. It was a joint attack. Thud! I stepped on the ground and rotated in the air like a crescent moon. Then, I kicked the short-haired warrior's fingers with a kick.

"Damn!"

"Crap!"

The hammer barely grazed my back. The short-haired warrior was pushed back half a step by my kick. The two Apostles clicked their tongues and cursed.

Their first joint attack had failed.

"Shiny."

[Shiny responds with a 'Yes, hero.']

The two who took the lead in the vanguard were probably the most skilled in martial arts.

I estimated the average skill level of the Apostles.

"Let's open the real names for a change."

[The Goddess of Protection manifests the powers of the five swords.]

Swoosh.

Besides the sword I was holding, four more swords rose from the shadows. Shadow Swords. Like sticky blueberry jam thickened, the swords, coated in pitch-black shadows, began to circle around me.

[The Salvation Sword accepts the command of the King of Death.]

[The Sacrifice Sword accepts the command of the King of Death.]

[The Prayer Sword accepts the command of the King of Death.]

[The Pity Sword accepts your command.]

Alright.

These were the Constellation Swords that transformed Kim Yul, an ordinary student, into the founder of the Aegim Empire. Let's see if they can withstand this.

Without any hesitation, I swung all five swords simultaneously.

"Be careful!"

The short-haired Apostle shouted.

"That guy is immune to the [Blessing of Indestructible Body]! We feel pain if we get cut too! Be careful not to get-"

"Ah. If it were that easy, your sister wouldn't have lost."

Screams echoed.

"Right?"

Five streams of swordplay spectacularly unfolded in the air. "Ugh", "Ack! "Aaaah! Aaah!", the Apostles who were charging at me, those who were still leaping from above, and those trying to press me from the front, each of them clutched their throats or hearts and screamed.

"Ugh, ugh...!"

The short-haired Apostle glared at me fiercely. Even such a warrior was holding her throat.

[Pain without Wounds].

The second power of the Holy Swords, namely the Pity Sword, had stabbed the Apostle's throat.

"Cough! Urgh..."

She must be experiencing the pain of having her throat pierced by now. It was remarkable she could still look up at me without losing consciousness.

Koom. Koom.

Around me, Apostles who were cut by my sword and fainted from the excessive agony were collapsing. The hammers they dropped from their hands fell to the ground with a heavy thud.

"The second most foolish thing in this world is to gang up on me, and slightly more foolish than that is to do so with something like a hammer. How many can you swing at once with those coffin-sized hammers? Three, maybe?"

"I'll kill you...!!"

"Scary."

I sliced the short-haired Apostle's head with the Pity Sword. An invisible wound, or rather, pain, pierced right through the center of the Apostle's throat.

The Apostle collapsed as if her strings were cut.

"I won't inflict more pain than necessary on those who don't come at me further. Not piercing your eyeballs or ripping your internal organs is my consideration for you. However, I don't know how long my patience will last."

"....."

The Apostles hesitated and looked back at their god.

Mutia looked at me expressionlessly, holding the hammer aloft.

"You're capable enough to threaten the Magic Tower."

"Lady Goldencup is still alive."

I attempted to negotiate.

"It's true that I slashed Silvia. But now, Silvia has joined my family and is working as the head of the King of Death's servants. Her life now is probably happier than when she was under you. At least, it's more comfortable. Declaring vengeance on me is wrong..."

"Indeed, there are Constellations who think that way."

Mutia nodded.

"Have you ever considered the position of becoming a god?"

I blinked.

"Pardon?"

"You humans always make wishes. Make me rich, make me healthy. I grant wishes in return for your faith."

Swoosh.

As Mutia spoke, the Apostles retreated one by one. Then, they reorganized their formation around me.

'The god buys time while the believers form up.'

The maneuver was obvious, but I didn't stop it.

This was also part of the negotiation.

In exchange for my allowing this, Mutia, the Constellation, a god, willingly engaged in conversation with me.

"What if I twisted your wishes while fulfilling them?"

"Twisted how?"

"I grant your wishes. But, for those who wished to be rich, I give [the satisfaction of feeling rich without earning more money]."

"....."

"For those who wished for health, I endow them with a personality that is content with their current body. I give them a different personality, a different nature, to be happy and content with what they have now. I ask you, lad who claims to be a king."

The golden Constellation spoke.

"Is that also fulfilling their wishes?"

"....."

"There are many Constellations who think so. But I am different. If they only needed a lesson to be content with the present, why would they pray to a god? I only cherish the children who make wishes to me in that moment."

Indeed.

"I freed Silvia from the shackles of hatred and vengeance."

"Neither a wish made to you nor to me."

"I guided Silvia, who dedicated her life to killing, to another way of life."

"That life was not what she wished for."

"She would wish for her current life now."

"You must have brainwashed her."

"Is Silvia's own will not important?"

"The wish made at the moment of praying to me is more important."

"I saved Silvia."

"To me, that is the death of that child."

"How is change equivalent to death?"

"Correct. But that's the logic of your human world, not an excuse that a god should use."

Mutia raised her hammer.

Just then, the Apostles had finished reorganizing their ranks.

"A single exception leads to ten exceptions, ten exceptions lead to a hundred habits, and a hundred habits cement into a single life. King of Death. There are no exceptions in the life of a god."

"....."

"The child made a wish to me, and I accepted it. That's all. I will reclaim the soul of that child you took in. I ask you, is there room for negotiation here?"

So it is.

"No. There's no choice but to fight."

At that moment.

"Peep."

The fox god reacted to my will.

[You are a believer of A Music Box Just for You.]

[A Music Box Just for You assigns you a quest.]

Proof that I, who belonged nowhere, now stand under the constellation of the fox god.

It wasn't a public quest issued by the Tower or a quest issued by the Constellation governing the stage, but my own Constellation embroidered the letters just for me.

+

[The Golden God]

Constellation: A Music Box Just for You

Difficulty: S

Objective: Defeat Mutia, the ruler of the 62nd floor. The Ruin-Harvesting Cow, Mutia is targeting a member of your family.

*However, if the identity of Silvia Evanair is transferred to Mutia or your identity is transferred, you will be defeated.

+

The objective was simple and clear.

Thus, I swung my sword without hesitation.

Mutia, without a moment's hesitation, swung down her hammer.

Kooooom!

The divine will of a Constellation and my faith collided.

Chapter 326: The God and the King (2)

---

My sword shadow and Mutia's hammer wind merged.

The Apostles did not just watch as we dueled though.

"Where do you think you're going!"

"How dare..."

"Do you think we'll just let you be! You damn heretic!"

Having reorganized their formation, the Apostles charged one by one. The fervor in their eyes was not mere madness or blind faith.

It was their devotion to the deity they believed in.

The righteousness to repay the blessings bestowed by their deity was blazing hotly in the eyes of the Apostles.

"Impressive."

I exclaimed in admiration.

"But I've already warned you."

I swung my sword with admiration. The five swords bit into their targets like a viper's fangs.

"-----!!"

Left eye. Right eye. Vocal cords. Back of the neck. The internal organs.

Wherever my sword passed, terrible screams followed in succession.

The [Pain without Wounds] had gouged out spots that brought unbearable pain which humans could not endure.

"Aaaah!"

And that was not all.

".....! .....!"

I remembered the spots where I had inflicted pain on the Apostles. And every time the Apostles, gritting their teeth and holding back groans, charged at me, I precisely hit the same spots again. I pierced through the pierced spots and slashed the slashed spots again.

"Hiuk, ugh! Ah, ah----"

Screams. More screams. And even more screams.

As Mutia and I exchanged blows, the area around us was filled with screams.

"You fight quite efficiently. To the extent that it's almost terrifying."

Mutia commented. It was a critique filled with sarcasm. I decided to return the favor with sarcasm as well.

"It's not as efficient as being ganged up on."

"Many humans insist on not killing, but your way of fighting, although it doesn't kill, inflicts pain worse than death. Perhaps, the very path you take to ascend the Tower is such."

"It's touching to see you consider humans. If only that compassion had extended to the guests at the wedding attacked by Lady Goldencup, I would have been more moved."

"Those were not my believers."

"Is that the end?"

"What do you mean?"

"I've seen your first, second, and third strategies."

Chaang!

I parried Mutia's strike.

"Is that all?"

I charged.

"Even if you are among the brightest Constellations in the Milky Way, that brilliance is not due to martial prowess."

Mutia attacked, and I dodged it.

"The prowess boasted by your Apostles is thanks to the [Indestructible Body]. They are nothing more than those who rush in, trusting their unharmed bodies. Therefore, they are no match for me, who can inflict pain on anyone."

I unleashed all five swords at once.

Sword wind.

The swords became a black storm, devastating the area. "Ugh!", "Ah", "Lord Mutia!" The Apostles screamed briefly before being flung far away. Bang! Dozens of them were thrown against the walls of the colosseum, the sedimentary rock.

"I am the lord of a battle organization that has been dedicated to wielding the sword for thousands of years just to embody the Demonic Heavenly God Art."

There were Apostles who were not blown away by the sword pressure. They gritted their teeth and endured. "Eeeek...!" Some even slammed their hammers into the ground, using that force to hold their ground.

Impressive.

To them, I especially swung four swords, stabbing each one swiftly.

"My master sliced through the peak of a snowy mountain with a single sword stroke. My son, who is also my disciple, conquered a continent with his bare body. My daughter, my adviser, split the earth with one strike, and my family can bring down a spire of the Magic Tower with a single cut."

Then, there were no more Apostles standing.

[The Constellations watching the fight hold their breath.]

[The Lonely Seeker falls silent.]

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains falls silent.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust falls silent.]

In the artificially created hell at its very center.

I stood tall, looking down at the Constellation that lay on the ground.

"Lastly, I am a descendant of the Sword Emperor."

"And so, I have a question for you."

Grinning.

"Is that all?"

I smiled.

"If there's nothing more, please write a letter of surrender.
I'll even give you my pen as a souvenir."

"How insolent!"

Mutia bared her teeth.

"I'll bring about your downfall!"

The golden eyes of the Constellation blazed with fury.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow requests a covenant from the Tower.]

[Sanctification.]

The golden eyes turned blood red.

[Approved.]

[From this moment on, this place belongs to The Ruin-Harvesting Cow.]

The sky turned red.

[She is the one who destroys and recreates; worship her.]

"She is the one who destroys and recreates; worship her!"

The Apostles who were thrown against the cliff, those who were kneeling in agony, all chorused in unison, even as if they were spitting out their last breath.

"She is the one who destroys and recreates; worship her!"

Again.

"She is the one who destroys and recreates; worship her!"

At the moment when the Apostles praised their deity for the third time.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow manifests its power.]

Creak.

My bones felt as if they were being crushed.

".....!"

It was a familiar sensation. The pain of muscles and blood vessels unable to withstand the Aura and breaking apart. I immediately tried to reduce the amount of Aura flowing through my body to adapt to this pain.

But there was no need.

‘The Aura disappeared?’

The Aura that had been frolicking in my blood vessels had evaporated in an instant.

-Kim Zombie!

I felt strength draining from my body.

-You've aged now!

I could ask 'What'. I could reply with 'What do you mean'. Instead of spending time on questions and rebuttals, I accepted the Guardian Spirit's words as the plain truth.

I looked at my face reflected on the blade.

"....."

I opened my lips.

"Indeed."

The voice that came out was unmistakably mine, but somehow it sounded a bit worn out.

A sword as clear as a mirror.

"There it is."

An old man of advanced age was reflected there.

The memory that flickered through my mind.

Like a broken tape recorder looping the same segment.

"Ruin-Harvesting Cow is 'Mutia'."

Or so the blond-haired priest boy had said.

The Heretic Inquisitor stroked his chin.

"Mainly governing the areas of [Destruction] and [Recreation]."

"Simple but powerful."

This statement has lingered long in my memory.

Not because it was a memorable recollection, but rather because it remained as an unresolved riddle.

-It's simple but powerful!

Why 'destruction' and 'recreation'?

Destruction was straightforward. Understandable. The image of Lady Goldencup swinging her hammer and smashing everything in sight was the very embodiment of a destroyer.

But recreation?

-It's simple but,

What part of Lady Goldencup's actions corresponded to 'recreation'?

-powerful,

And then I realized.

-isn't it!

The thing in this world that is both destruction and recreation.

-Primarily, it governs 'destruction' and 'recreation'!

Regression.

Or time itself.

-Lady Goldencup didn't need to show a glimpse of 'recreation'.

Yes, Lady Goldencup didn't need to display a fragment of 'recreation'. Her actions of escaping from a future where Raviel became the empress, returning to the past, and stealing the Crown Prince's heart under the guise of a mere baroness, were already a life that had been 'recreated'.

"—Time continuously destroys itself and also recreates."

After a brief recollection and quick deduction, I spoke with a voice seasoned with time.

"Handling time. Is that your power, Mutia?"

"Indeed. Your reputation precedes you."

The golden Constellation murmured. Unlike the previous sarcasm, this time there was genuine admiration in the voice.

"Though it is said that your sword is fierce, it's not as sharp as your mind."

"There was a reason your followers and Apostles are so loyal."

That's right.

Everything made sense.

I lowered the tip of my sword and looked around.

"These are the ones who wished upon you. Not for wealth or health, but for a single desire. To be taken back to the past. [Make me return to the past], fulfilling such wishes of humans."

"....."

"Everyone gathered here are regressors."

Mutia laughed.

"Indeed, it is so!"

The Constellation gripped the hammer tighter.

In this universe the most golden, valuable thing, time, was governed by a god with golden hair, befitting of their power.

"I am the Harvester of Ruins! To those who have nothing left but ruins, I promise the season of harvest again! A god who brings fruition! King of Heresy!"

The earth and heavens trembled.

"I am the ruler of reincarnation and the keeper of aeons, Mutia!"

The sedimentary layers danced like serpentine tails.

"Kneel before me, lowly creature!"

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow manifests its power.]

[Wheel of Aeons[1].]

[Your timeline will be altered.]

[Your possibilities will be fixed.]

"Return to your ruined place!"

The world, shifting into another scene.

『If you had never met the Sword Saint.』

The history I walked through was shaken.

『If you had never met the Sword Emperor.』

Rumble.

Beside me, the Guardian Spirit, the image of the Sword Emperor, suddenly vanished.

The luck that had been granted to me, one by one, disappeared.

And was replaced by the possibility of some unfortunate timeline.

『If you had never met the Heretic Inquisitor.』

『If you had never met Viper.』

『If you had never met the Countess.』

『If you had never met the Paladin.』

『If you had never met the Black Dragon Witch.』

Like layers of sediment being peeled away, my timeline was erased line by line.

『If you had never met the Goddess of Protection.』

Rumble.

The holy sword in my hand disappeared.

And so did the shadows that had been guarding me.

『If you had never met the Peony that blooms in winter.』

The Aura pulsing in my veins faded away into nothingness.

『If you had never met the Flame Emperor.』

Even the strength swirling in my muscles vanished without a trace.

『If you had just aged and withered away.』

『If.』

Before long, the surrounding scene had become desolate.

『If you were merely not the King of Death.』

They were ruins.

Looking closely, this was Babylon's back-streets.

Hadn't there been a fire that burned it down?

There were no proper buildings.

As an old man, I made this ownerless place my home, setting up a tent among the toothless pillars, surrounded by a toothbrush stained with soot, a yellowed paper cup, a crumpled cigarette pack that couldn't even be considered an antique, and other junk.

"Let me say it once more."

But no matter how desolate the surroundings, it wasn't as desolate as myself.

Hands that never held a sword.

Feet that never climbed the Tower.

A heart that never reveled in victory.

"Kneel before me."

Cough.

Weakly coughing, I was faced with the towering golden Constellation.

"Make a contract with me. Thus, return to the past before you dared kill my child."

"....."

"King of Heresy, renounce your throne. Cast aside your pride. Acknowledge the greatness of the power of time. Then, I shall forgive you."

"...It's a pity."

I coughed and curled the corners of my lips.

"What is it that you regret? Your insolence?"

"No...."

Squeak.

A cry was heard from somewhere.

"Your power."

Mutia turned around.

"Because, for the first time in my life, after winning..."

At the foot of the Constellation.

There was a small golden-furred fox.

"For the first time, I faced death against time."

At the moment Mutia's eyes widened.

『If you had never met your Constellation...』

"Sorry, but..."

The fox spoke.

"There's no such 'if'."

Tick.

"I chose to dream of your reality, Mister."

The clock turned.

[A Music Box Just for You manifests its power.]

Tick.

[The Universe's Vast Expanse.]

[The universe may be vast, but not so vast that music cannot play within it.]

[And I am not so small that I cannot play your song.]

[My universe plays for you, and only you.]

A sandstorm blew.

The ruins, the pillars of the ruins, the antiques, every trace of this life, until there were no traces left, were swept away into the sandy soil and desert of time.

Mutia looked around in confusion.

"What....."

"My power may be insignificant. It may have been reduced to nothingness by you. But at least, I can protect the reality that you walk in."

The fox smiled with its eyes.

"Begone, ox-head."

"This man's time belongs to me."

Squeak.

I stroked the fox wrapped around my neck like a scarf.

Beside me, the Guardian Spirit still stood with arms crossed, and the holy sword was still in my hand, and my feet had indeed stepped on the sixty-second floor.

"It has finally come to this."

My heart still beat for victory.

"Well..."

Grinning.

I still smiled as myself.

"Shall we conclude this, Mutia?"

[1] Aeon or Aion is a Hellenistic deity associated with time, the orb or circle encompassing the universe, and the zodiac. The "time" which Aion represents is perpetual, unbounded, ritual, and cyclic: The future is a returning version of the past, later called aevum. This kind of time contrasts with empirical, linear, progressive, and historical time that Chronos represented, which divides into past, present, and future.

Chapter 327: The God and the King (3)

---

The hellish time had stopped.

".....This can't be."

In an artificially constructed colosseum, surrounded by layers of sedimentary rock, [Ruin-Harvesting Cow] Mutia shouted, her golden wheat-like hair disheveled.

"There's no way this can be happening!"

Mutia took a step forward. The hammer swung, igniting fury.

It exploded.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow manifests its power.]

[A Music Box Just for You manifests its power.]

That explosion was blocked by the fox.

"But, upon closer thought, it wasn't like this couldn't happen."

"This can't be happening!"

"Ideed, upon closer thought, it was not like this couldn't have happened."

The fox narrated in a theatrical tone.

Mutia gritted her teeth.

"I am the Ruin-Harvesting Cow! That is my alias, and my epithet is 'The Eye of the Storm that Rages in the Sea of Governance'! Even if countless times pass by in all creation, I alone am like the eye of the storm, an absolute temporal coordinate that does not waver in any flow!"

"Absolute temporal coordinate, what is that? In Mister's world, there's someone called Einstein, wouldn't it be better to argue with him? Instead of doing this here....."

"King of Death! I know how insignificant you are!"

Mutia glared at me with fierce eyes.

As the power dissipated, the vigor in her eyes also faded, and Mutia's eyes regained their golden hue.

"I know your past!"

From those pupils wafted the scent of a blazing sun.

"You little child! You were nothing more than a seedling. A shabby one-room apartment! A cramped bed! Portraits of idols hung on the wall like laundry! Was it not because you had nothing that you adorned the emptiness with those idols, making it seem as if [something was there]?"

"....."

"You were in the ruins! You were truly in the ruins because you had never achieved anything. Before receiving the name of King of Death, you were certainly not lacking to become my follower! You were indeed the most suitable human to wish for the wish of regression!"

Is that so.

Mutia, the Constellation of time and regression, knows all about what kind of human I was before I entered the 4000 days of nirvana—all of my history.

'Of course, that's only natural.'

I accepted her omniscience.

'If she didn't know my past, the [what if] world that unfolded just now wouldn't have existed.'

Mutia cornered me by manifesting her power.

She brought me, who had aged without gaining anything.

In that process, various hypotheses were made possible by her power.

『If you had not met the Sword Saint.』

『If you had not met the Sword Emperor.』

『If you had not met the Flame Emperor.』

It could be the Sword Saint. Just knowing me, hypothesizing [if you had not met the Sword Saint] is possible.

But the Sword Emperor.

And especially, the Flame Emperor.

'Unless she knew my entire past, it wouldn't even be possible as a hypothesis.'

Then, how did this become possible?

How does [The Ruin-Harvesting Cow] know about my regressed history?

'Hamusutra was a Constellation that dealt with stories. It read the [story] of a human named me and found out about my regression. But how about Mutia? Because she herself is a god dealing with time and regression?'

As my mind rapidly touched upon guesses and moved through deductions, Mutia, with her face still full of rage, shouted.

"But what if your life, too, was ruined by another regressor from the beginning!"

It was a statement that inevitably shattered my train of thought.

"Excuse me?"

"Don't play dumb. You must have thought about it."

Mutia spread her arms.

"Why is my luck so bad?"

The words I had uttered.

"If only I had one good skill..."

Many people had uttered these words.

"Why can't I encounter even a single fortunate opportunity or a genuine chance?"

I took a breath.

And exhaled.

"If I said I had never thought that way, it would be a lie. Yes, I thought about it a lot. I didn't just think that, but also had a lot of resentment, and when the day was filled with resentment, the night was soaked in alcohol."

"You have arrived here just by acquiring one skill."

Mutia said.

"With amazing willpower, unyielding spirit, ceaseless passion, pouring your heart and soul into everything you encounter, and finally you have arrived at the feet of me, Mutia. Haven't you ever found it strange? That you, who seemingly had no particular talent, have paved your way here — doesn't it seem like a miracle, have you never doubted?"

"That is....."

"You would say it was [thanks to meeting good people]."

Mutia smiled.

That smile was as brilliant as molten gold, and it lingered.

"But no!"

At that moment.

I realized this was the [final scheme] she had prepared.

After breaking the ground and creating a colosseum where escape was impossible, attacking with two hundred apostles, pouring her power to age me, and still, if I hadn't fallen then.

As if to say, withstand this too, she had prepared this final blow.

-...It feels like you shouldn't listen to this.

Guardian Spirit murmured.

-I'm not sure what secret she intends to reveal, but I have a bad feeling. Whenever a Constellation harbors poison, it always leads to some pointless disaster.

'No, it's okay.'

I looked straight at Mutia.

'I will listen.'

I have delved into the secrets of countless people so far.

It was after I had prepared myself to take responsibility, and even though I had indeed shouldered it, how could that not have been a form of violence?

'If it's a secret related to me, I want to hear it even more.'

My secret alone cannot be sacred.

Therefore, as a hunter who possesses [Returner's Winding Clock], I boldly asked.

"What do you mean it's not?"

"You could have originally succeeded!"

What does that mean?

Not understanding, I asked again.

"I don't understand, Mutia. What do you mean I could have originally succeeded?"

"Foolish child! The reason you didn't encounter fortunes on the 1st floor and didn't grasp opportunities on the 2nd floor isn't because there were no fortunes or opportunities there."

Mutia's laughter grew louder.

Like the laughter of some ancient king cursed to turn everything he touched into gold, the laughter that the Golden Constellation unleashed was bizarre and, furthermore, desolate.

"You know of the tower! The tower up to the 10th floor is a refuge for those who have fled the world, a comfortable island, a land of opportunities. How could there have been not a single fortune for you to encounter!"

"....."

"Was the tower you looked up to such a heartless entity?!"

Thump.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow manifests its power.]

From beneath the ground of the colosseum, where there was only sedimentary rock, the pillars of a temple rose with a boom, a thud!

They weren't intact pillars.

They were remnants of an abandoned temple.

Eroded by wind and rain, like the teeth of an old man whose gums have partly receded, white pillars were implanted all over hell.

『If you had not met the Flame Emperor.』

Between the pillars of the temple, a scene like a screen faintly shimmered.

The first power to manifest was a hypothesis I had already heard.

『If the Flame Emperor had not met 'The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages'.』

That was a completely new hypothesis.

Above all, the subject was not me but the Flame Emperor.

『If the Flame Emperor had not obtained 'Returner's Winding Clock'.』

And then.

『If the Flame Emperor had not regressed through 'Returner's Winding Clock'.』

A world unfolded before my eyes.

『The Flame Emperor, having obtained the 'Returner's Winding Clock', regresses and buys a Sang-Ryun lottery ticket.』

Through the gaps between the pillars, a scene where I and the Flame Emperor brushed past each other was visible.

『As a result, you arrive at the Sang-Ryun lottery ticket vendor one step later than in the 'original world', and the ticket that was supposed to win 4th place turns into a dud.』

A minor misfortune.

The me beyond the pillars sighed lightly and headed to the hunting grounds.

『Challenging with poor equipment, you sustain injuries that last a day longer than in the original world.』

It didn't stop there.

『By the time you had healed your injuries, the chest there was already empty.』

It wasn't taken by the Flame Emperor.

Because to the Flame Emperor, who had the ability to regress at will, that chest was too trivial to care about.

But to me, who was poor and weak, that equipment would have been a significant help.

『You fail to acquire a skill card.』

Like a grain of sand thrown into well-functioning gears, my life gradually changed due to the regressor known as the Flame Emperor.

『Your efforts repeatedly end in failure.』

It could be described as a downfall.

『Your life arrives at its destination.』

Until eventually reaching that attic.

『But, if the Flame Emperor had not regressed through the 'Returner's Winding Clock'.』

What unfolded next was a world without that slight dissonance.

A completely different world.

『Your efforts are properly rewarded.』

A world with fruition.

『You acquire quite a good skill and reap the fruits of your efforts.』

There, I seemed to have gained 'the ability to converse with all monsters'.

『You are recognized by people.』

Thanks to the skill, the people of the tower finally realize that among the monsters roaming from the 2nd to the 9th floors, there are intelligent beings capable of conversation, and that they have built a grand civilization city underground to avoid humans.

『You pioneer a path.』

A fact completely unknown to us even now.

On the 5th floor underground, the sub-races were secretly building a city and living.

『You prevent several tragedies.』

As the only one who could converse with the sub-races, as a representative of humanity. As a messenger of death. As a mediator.

『You gain friends,』

After much trouble preventing incidents, the Black Dragon Witch playfully taps me on the shoulder. The Black Dragon Witch, with a sly grin, asks me if I'm up for a drink at a nice place she knows.

『And allies.』

Although my combat skills are far inferior to those of my current self.

Undoubtedly, a fulfilling life surrounded by people who recognize me, living together with those I cherish, was laid out in the crevices of the ruins' temple pillars.

"Young child."

Mutia said.

"This is your original destiny."

"....."

"The path you were originally supposed to walk, the destiny that was originally given to you."

My heart pounded.

"All of it, the Flame Emperor bastard took it all! He monopolized it! He hogged it!"

"....."

"The fortunes that were meant to be yours merely brushed past in vain, and the opportunities that were supposed to be yours slipped through his fingers!"

.....

"In that world—in the 'original' world. In the original. In the mainstream path, you had no reason to endure 4000 times of agony. You could have just lived a satisfying life, honing your inherently diligent nature."

Is that so?

"Do you understand, young child? It wasn't that you were unlucky."

Had I too been living a life distorted by Yoo Soo-Ha?

"You had your luck stolen by someone else!"

A resounding roar echoed through the hell's cavern.

"I'll send you back."

Mutia.

"To the real life you were supposed to live."

Certainly, this was a sharp blow.

But...

"The life you're living now is fake. An illusion. To play word games like [fake life] or [real life], you should have come to me before meeting Raviel, before meeting my master, before seeing the Black Dragon Witch's smile."

I glared at the blazing gold and said.

"The Tower Master said I wasn't living the best life. You say I haven't lived a truthful life."

I spoke towards the gold beyond.

"Whether a life is fake or real isn't determined by the order of time. Ruin-Harvesting Cow, there are people influenced by me, people I've been influenced by. That becomes love, friendship, a connection. People who walk with me, that is my true life."

I held the sword expressionlessly.

"I am 'us'. There are people who made me 'us'. And 'we' exist only in this world."

"....."

"Our true world is only here."

The Ruin-Harvesting Cow.

"And only here."

Mutia.

Power, regression.

"I've heard all the music your Constellation brings forth."

Scheme 1.

Shatter the ground and trap.

Destruction.

Scheme 2.

Drive into an artificial colosseum where escape is impossible.

Destruction.

Scheme 3.

Mobilize a hundred apostles for a combined attack.

Destruction.

Scheme 4.

Use the power of the Constellation to age the King of Death.

Destruction.

Scheme 5.

Show the original time to lure, to make him join her believers.

Destruction.

Aiming for at least two objectives at once, and thus, to defeat me, the successor of the Sword Emperor, with five schemes prepared, the Constellation that now stood before me had nothing left but the hammer to block my way.

"First."

"....."

"I'll take your pride."

A single flash was visible.

Certainly, Mutia must have gripped her hammer and swung it, perha ps trying to counter my attack, but the outcome revealed to this world after a moment was tragic.

Thud.

A long horn.

Among the things attached to both sides of Mutia's forehead, the right horn rolled helplessly, caught up in a sandstorm.

"Ah....."

And then.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's existence becomes faint.]

The brilliant golden light dimmed slightly.

Chapter 328:

Starlight (1)

---

-A masterpiece indeed.

Ancient times.

An era so distant that counting time lost its meaning, when even the epochs grew weary and time itself had tired out, everything came to a standstill. There was a temple where everything had halted, and in it lived a beautiful dragon.

---Who might you be?

It might not have been accurate to say it lived.

The golden scales that once dazzled no longer shimmered. The golden eyes that used to take one's breath away had long lost their focus. And the voice, how long had it been since it last spoke?

The dragon felt estranged by its own vocal cords. The resonance traveling from its lungs through its throat felt unfamiliar. The flesh enveloping its lungs was strange, the bones piercing through the flesh felt foreign. When it listened closely, the beating heart sounded alien.

The conclusion was clear.

-I asked who you are.

The dragon felt burdened by its own existence.

-Even if I answer, you won't understand. A name is merely an address used by those living in the same coordinates to inquire about each other's well-being. I come from a different place than you.

-A different place?

-It's called the Mainland World.

The human brushed back their golden hair with the back of their hand.

‘This is no ordinary human.’

The dragon's golden eyes narrowed.

From the slightest gesture to the thinnest glint in the eye. This human had no muscle they did not control, no posture without meaning, no voice without intent.

‘A monstrous being, indeed.’

And the dragon realized. Despite its rusted scales and worn-out heart, its instinct to assess others was still alive and breathing.

Confirming this fact, for the first time in a long while, truly a long while, the dragon felt pleased.

-What do you call a masterpiece?

-This place. The temple you reside in. You are the Dragon Emperor who grants the wish of regression. All humans who served you regressed without exception, and those who regressed naturally trod the path of success.

The good mood did not last long.

-Soon, those who did not serve you were treated as fools. You, I, those who cannot be called 'you' in the far distance, and people on the opposite side of the world who cannot call me, all came to worship you. This is the result.

The human looked around.

-A world where all humans have become regressors.

-.....

-No, perhaps a world where all humans wish for regression. No one possesses the advantage of time. Because everyone sought it, no one had it.

This world stood still.

Like statues stuck in Medusa's temple, humans did not move an inch, and the world, having no more aging or wearing to do, held its breath in a paused moment.

Except for a single dragon.

-How regrettable.

Only the dragon remained alone in a world where everything else had ceased, becoming the sole, unique deity, an immovable prime mover, lingering as a speck of gold.

-You merely granted the wishes of humans. When the god overseeing regression dominates the world, the end is an inevitable halt. A joke perhaps only social butterflies would appreciate.

-So? Have you come to mock me, human?

The dragon growled.

-If it's a challenge you seek, then say so. I shall not refuse.

-Imagine the landlord fighting with a tenant, it only leads to gossip.

-Landlord? .....Tenant?

-I am building a Tower.

The human clasped their hands together.

-It would be wonderful if you could join us there. Of course, you would have to bear several restrictions, Mutia.

-.....

-If a god must live.

Somewhere.

-Don't you think a god should at least receive two chances?

The sound of a clock ticking echoed.

The Ruin-Harvesting Cow thought so.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow's existence becomes faint.]

Mutia's horn was severed.

"O deity!"

"Lady Mutia!"

"Ah! Ahhh!"

"We'll kill you!"

The apostles of the Constellation screamed. They were shocked. Their rage was no less intense. Forgetting the pain they had suffered at my hands, which was certainly unforgettable, they gripped their hammers once more and charged in.

Bravely.

But flames care little for the courage of moths that fly into them.

"You have no right to talk to me about original roots, Mutia."

I swung my sword without taking my eyes off Mutia.

"Aaaaahhh!"

An apostle, whose shoulder was diagonally sliced just like theirs, screamed and was flung away due to the pain that mirrored their own. Many more apostles rushed in. Thus, the screams were incessant.

"Probably the [Returner's Winding Clock] I possess was also a skill created by you. Although it has strict conditions, it contains the power of regression, nonetheless."

"Hyik! Aaaaah! Ah, ugh! Ump,"

"In other words, you are the root cause of the Flame Emperor. If the Flame Emperor succeeded thanks to the [Returner's Winding Clock], and I lived an unlucky life overshadowed by that success, then you are ultimately the last cause. It's absurd for the one who ruined lives to strut around offering to fix them. It doesn't fit the principle."

"Aaaaaah!"

"Of course, I won't beg you to return my life. I have no intention of going back. But, how many people have had their lives twisted by your power?"

Thud.

I walked through hell, eliciting screams.

Breaking through the defenses created by the apostles, crossing the wall of bodies and the river of people, I approached Mutia.

"I have the right to punish you."

"....."

"Are you prepared to live on as a human? Golden Constellation."

"I..."

A voice leaked through Mutia's teeth.

"I did nothing wrong."

It was a precarious sound, like the wind blowing through an ancient canyon.

"Just... There was a child who knelt before my palace. A clear child. A transparent human. His... his mother was killed by a carriage, and he found it so unjust."

Screams resounded.

"He had no thoughts of blaming the noble in the carriage, no thoughts of revenge, just. Just to tell his mother leaving home, to be careful on the road, that it's easy to slip on the wet road, to walk carefully. To come back safely. Just that one sentence,"

Screams resounded.

"To let him say that. That heart was so delicate."

Screams echoed.

"What wrong have I possibly committed!"

All the masters of the ruins cried out.

"I merely knew how to do a bit more than you all! From birth, it was so, and as I grew, it became even more apparent! That's all there was to it! I did what I could. Was my birth a mistake? Was my life misguided? You... you dare... what right do you have to judge me!"

"You could have spoken first."

I did not stop my steps.

Despite the apostles' screams, numerous obstructions, attacks, and even facing the blazing eyes of the Constellation, I continued to walk.

"What?"

"I have no complaints about you granting Goldencup's wish. Silvia wished for it, and you responded. That's all there is to it."

Thud.

"Even if it ruined Raviel's life, I still have no complaints. Thanks to that, I met Raviel. All these events were carried out by me as the representative of [The Pond Where Memories Gather], the Great Librarian of All Knowledge, and the agent of Hamusutra."

Thud.

"You appointed Lady Goldencup as your agent. I became Hamusutra's agent and defeated Goldencup. That's the truth of the matter. Gods clashed, fought a fair duel, and a conclusion was reached."

Thud.

"Why do you object to that?"

"....."

"Specifically, why do you bear a grudge against me? If there had been any unfairness during the duel, you should have spoken to Hamusutra then. Why, just why did you silently accept defeat. However, now you request a rematch, not to Hamusutra but to me, who was merely an agent? No, it's not even a duel. You ambushed me on your own."

That's right.

It wouldn't be 'normal' for a Constellation to attack a hunter.

If a hunter had challenged a Constellation, it might be understandable, but for a Constellation of Mutia's caliber to personally pick a fight with a hunter is extremely rare.

Not because the Constellations are noble beings.

'The Tower Master must have set restrictions.'

Consideration for hunters.

Prohibition of massacres.

Actions permitted only when they fit with the stage gimmick, etc.

Even Mutia herself had exclaimed not long ago.

『Was the tower you looked up to such a heartless entity!』

There must be restrictions on the Constellations unknown to me.

This tower, setting the 1st to 10th floors as tutorial areas and the 11th to 49th floors as beginner areas, meticulously manages difficulty levels.

In some ways, it seems even more disadvantageous for the Constellations than for the hunters.

"I will ask."

"....."

"Mutia."

The reason Mutia could attack me in this tower.

Using the already concluded past event of the [Goldencup Incident], which was settled as a proxy war between Hamusutra and Mutia, to insist on a duel with me, even going to such lengths.

I quietly articulated my conjecture.

"Have I become a Constellation?"

"....."

Silence pervaded.

It was because the two hundred apostles had finally fallen under my sword, with nobody left to scream. It was an artificially created silence. It was not because my conjecture struck a nerve, silencing everyone in the coliseum hell.

Yet, the timing coincided so perfectly that it seemed as if my question silenced the entire 62nd floor stage.

"If I'm no longer just an ordinary hunter but have risen to the rank of a Constellation, then your actions all make sense."

No one answered, so I spoke.

"Though it's forbidden for a Constellation to arbitrarily attack a mere hunter, duels between Constellations would be subject to much looser rules. They are equals, after all. Peers. The tower wouldn't be so strict about that."

When did it start?

Exactly at what moment was I recognized as having a status comparable to a Constellation?

"Perhaps right after clearing the 61st floor?"

When I entered this stage, one 'strange thing' happened.

I didn't pay much attention to it at the time, but looking back now, it was suspicious.

All the Constellations simultaneously declared war on me, precisely on my forces.

『The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth swears to kill you!』

『The Incarnation of Love and Lust swears to tear you apart.』

『The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains prepares for war.』

『The Ruin-Harvesting Cow swears to annihilate you.』

Of course, the fox provoked the Constellations.

But just because they were provoked, would the Constellations, who had been eyeing me as a potential pawn, who had clearly watched in real-time the madness I unleashed on the 50th floor, suddenly turn their backs on me?

'It would be normal to think they were just playing around with the messages.'

However,

After the exchange with Mutia, my doubts deepened.

For some [certain reason], the Constellations no longer felt burdened by attacking me.

Perhaps Kim Gong-Ja, no longer a beginner—perhaps not even just an ordinary hunter anymore.

Perhaps even the Guardian Spirit, who had no intention or will to become a Constellation, somehow possessed the title of [Sword Constellation].

Perhaps becoming a Constellation is something that happens naturally, regardless of one's own will.

"Sword Emperor, sir."

-Yeah.

"How do the Constellations send those messages?"

Guardian Spirit chuckled.

-I've never done it, so I don't know. But I suppose just thinking about sending out a message would make it happen on its own? Your sword isn't in human form, but it uses messages freely. I doubt there's a complicated system involved.

"Indeed."

I nodded.

"Shall we give it a try?"

I closed my eyes.

In my mind, I envisioned someone I could recall without a hint of vagueness until the moment of my death.

'How are you doing?'

Suddenly, an image formed in my mind.

I had about a cup's worth of something inside me. Perhaps it wasn't water but a spoonful of white detergent po wder. Just one spoonful of whatever was in that cup diminished.

Then.

[The Heaven that Gathers Wails sends his greetings to the Silver Lily Duchess.]

I opened my eyes.

"Yep. As expected."

"....."

Mutia was glaring at me, with her teeth clenched.

I smiled back.

"It works."

Chapter 329:

Starlight (2)

---

In the quiet depths of the Colosseum, I hummed leisurely.

"Repeatedly calling me and emphasizing 'young child, human,' turned out to be poison for you. You are a Constellation and I am merely a human. It seems you tried to plant such a perception subconsciously... but I'm a man too seasoned to be swayed by mere words."

"You bastard."

A terrifying sound emanated from Mutia's teeth.

"What difference does it make if a mere thing like you becomes a Constellation!? You, who don't even possess any power, dare to..."

"There is a big difference."

It wasn't my voice.

"Sorry, but I have to keep the contract."

It wasn't the voice of any of the two hundred Apostles lying in the Colosseum. It wasn't the voice of the Guardian Spirit or Holy Sword, nor the fox, and certainly not Mutia's.

I furrowed my brows.

'...I've heard it somewhere.'

I couldn't immediately recall.

On the other hand, Mutia seemed to immediately know who the owner of the voice was.

"The trickster..."

Looking up at the sky, the golden Constellation gnashed its teeth.

"It's not over yet! The preemptive strike I requested, it's still valid!"

"The validity wasn't set by [time]. You know, I know, and all the high-ups of the tower know. If you start messing with time, there's no end to it."

Above.

Looking up from below, the sky appeared as if a hole was perfectly cut out.

In the middle of that, a person dressed in loose-fitting clothes floated, looking down at us.

"Your surprise attack is recognized only as long as [the King of Death doesn't realize his own ascension]. Now that he's aware he's become a Constellation, there's no more advantage for you guys to enjoy."

The owner of the voice held a thin, abnormally long staff. With the middle, ring, and little fingers, he lightly twirled it.

A mage, perhaps?

The staff seemed fragile enough to break with just a bit of force, but the mage skillfully stirred it.

[The sixth pillar, The Staff of Time Immemorial manifests.]

Ah.

Only after hearing the message did I clearly realize where I had heard that voice.

An existence similar to [The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages]. Those who manage this tower and convene meetings to discuss issues when problems arise. One of the six subordinates of the Tower Master, a pillar.

"Hmm."

The mage glanced over and met my eyes.

"It's been a while, trickster."

"...Trickster? Are you talking about me?"

"Since you were young enough for your head to not to be dry yet, you've summoned us with your tricky schemes. It's trickster because you're tricky. I feel good swearing at you indirectly, and don't you feel good being cursed in a surprisingly cute pronunciation? It's a win-win, mutually beneficial communication."

"Eh? Uh? No..."

I don't think I have such a preference.

"There's quite a bit I have to discuss with you."

The [Staff] murmured.

With a voice as loose as a pencil without lead.

Without any hostility or malice, just like time or still water, the [Staff] spoke in such a tone.

"Before that, let's do what I must first."

The [Staff]'s staff lightly touched the void.

Crack crack crack—

That's when the sky shattered like a pane of glass.

"No!"

Mutia shouted.

"I cannot accept this! I appeal against the contract! Call a meeting! Discuss it! I, [The Ruin-Harvesting Cow], request that an agenda be set immediately to discuss the treatment of this matter—"

"Rejected."

Crack crack crack!

"I've allowed too much disadvantage to the newly ascended child because of your requests, Mutia and Hisimet Cretsu. Because of you guys..."

The sky, once dyed red, noisily shattered. The void broke into billions of fragments, scattering. As the wind blew, carrying the red pieces, it seemed as though the sky was bleeding.

[The power of The Ruin-Harvesting Cow has been suspended.]

[The Chains of Time that forcibly fixed your growth have been released!]

Once more, the sky shed its skin.

[The power of The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth has been suspended.]

[The Information Distortion that blocked some messages from reaching you has been released!]

The peeled sky was a black infinity.

Without the sun, crescent moon, or Milky Way, only a pitch-black darkness yawned in that place.

In the black-colored sky, a serpent covered in blue scales was hiding.

"Damn it!"

Sssss.

Like waves in the night sea, the dark blue scales rippled.

The snake was huge enough to occupy a corner of the sky, and alone it created a sea in a sky devoid of the Milky Way.

"I knew this would happen!"

The serpent's eyes were triangular.

Unlike humans with white sclera and pupils, the giant snake shone with blue pupils on black sclera.

"I was told attacking before he's fully aware of being a Constellation would give us a chance! It's my fault for being deceived by that cow-headed brat!"

-This is getting interesting, Hisimet Cretsu.

The Guardian Spirit twisted his lips and crossed his arms.

-Your alias is [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth]. You oversee information distortion, manipulation, exposure, riddles, contradictions, labyrinths, and secrets. You acted like you were interested in that zombie, but it was an act, huh?

"Ah...."

Only then did I realize the truth of this battle.

"Two Constellations plotted to attack me before I grew stronger than I am currently? Aiming for the gap before I awoke to the powers and such of a Constellation, trying to break me in one go."

Regretting the lack of moonlight in the pitch-black night, I drew a crescent moon with my lips.

"One is a Constellation who controls time. The other is a Constellation who controls information. Thanks to the two of you joining forces, I didn't even hear the message that I had become a Constellation. What a perfect match."

"...Grr!"

The serpent with reversed eyes bared its fangs. Its upside-down eyes poured out a terrifying light, glaring sharply at Mutia.

"You were so confident, so it's your fault! Deal with it yourself!"

"What."

"I know nothing of it!"

Blue flames wrapped around the snake's body.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth flees to its own world!]

Literally tucking its tail, it fled.

"You foolish thing!!"

Left alone beneath the ground, Mutia spat blood from her mouth and shouted.

"If I am subdued, the next target will be you! It's your turn! Whether it's death or survival, we must settle it here, and yet, do you think fleeing will grant you even six more days of life? Do you think it will allow you to enjoy your power even for one more day? You imbecile, worse off than dead!"

"Well, whatever. I'll just take a day off and then go up."

"....."

Mutia was at a loss for words.

I smiled broadly.

"If a day seems too harsh, how about I take a full week off for you? After all, you two formed an alliance just to catch me. It wouldn't be right for there to be bad blood between you two. I'll considerately give you that much."

"Ugh....."

"Whatever reason you two had for banding together to attack me, I'll hear it out eventually... Uh, I'll find out later."

Even if you don't tell me, capturing [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] and giving it a good beating will suffice.

I meant it that way, and it seemed Mutia understood it in that sense too. The hammer it held in both hands hesitated.

"Surrender."

"....."

"I won't say that I'll accept your surrender without any punishment. I will take what needs to be taken. But I won't add emotion to the fact that you ambushed me while blocking my sight and hearing and double the weight of the punishment. I promise you that."

Hesitation swirled in Mutia's eyes.

Mutia, who had prepared five or six plans just to capture me, now truly had its back to the wall. With [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] abandoning it and fleeing, there weren't many options left for Mutia. My suggestion of surrender had narrowed those few options down to one.

"What do you want?"

"Goldencup. Transfer the identity of Silvia Evanair to me completely."

I started with the most obvious condition.

"Don't ever claim ownership of Silvia again. Don't raise objections regarding the fact that Silvia belonged to my family."

"....."

Mutia's lips twitched. Neither a yes nor a no came out. We both knew this was just the first demand.

"And?"

"You must also help in capturing [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth]. What world does that Constellation live in? How can we break through easily? Release all the information you know."

Still, Mutia's lips did not utter either confirmation or denial.

The second demand was also quite easy.

Hisimet Cretsu had betrayed Mutia first. What could be easier in this world than betraying someone who had betrayed you? Because it was so easy, Mutia must have guessed there were heavier conditions yet to come.

"Is there more?"

"Kneel."

"....."

"In front of the Apostles watching, make it clear that I am stronger than you, that I have defeated you, and that you have surrendered to me."

Drip.

Blood flowed from Mutia's mouth.

It wasn't from biting its lips. It was from the teeth crushing each other so hard that the gums couldn't bear it, biting down so fiercely that wounds opened between the canines and molars.

"You, as a Constellation, have an aesthetic."

I continued to speak.

"A kind of law, or a self-discipline. Excuses like 'even though my body kneels, my heart remains steadfast' that common humans might make don't work for you."

It was similar to pride but different.

A Constellation is an entity made of power. Perhaps the power is the reason for a Constellation's existence.

To the heart of a human, it's the core.

For me, who possesses the return skill, for Mutia, [the Constellation of Return], to kneel is to acknowledge my superiority in the same realm, just as a general might admit defeat to another general, or a musician might concede to another musician.

Could the Guardian Spirit ever kneel to another swordsman?

After kneeling, could the Guardian Spirit still claim to be the supreme swordsman of all time?

The condition I imposed on Mutia was laden with the weight of a fortune.

"If you refuse..."

And it was precisely as heavy as a life.

"I will take the other horn you have left."

"....."

"I'll give you 3 minutes."

Three minutes passed.

A death-like silence accumulated at the bottom of hell.

Just before about 160 seconds had passed, the only noise that rang out made the silence all the more eerie.

[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow manifests its power.]

[A Music Box Just for You manifests its power.]

I could tell what Mutia was attempting.

It tried to stop time.

Mutia couldn't come to terms within 180 seconds. There wasn't enough time. It needed the luxury to ponder. It tried to forcibly extend the unpermitted time, but it was thwarted by the fox.

"....."

And thus.

"I, Mutia."

An unsettled heart leaked out through Mutia's hands.

"The Ruin-Harvesting Cow."

Thud.

A crack formed where Mutia knelt, and holes were dug in the ground where its hands were placed, following the five fingers.

"Surrenders to..."

Blood dropped.

Blood that flowed from its mouth, down its chin, and dripped, drip, drip, seeped into the holes dug by Mutia's fingers.

"The Heaven that Gathers Wails... I surrender."

I nodded.

"Yes."

I looked down at the Constellation pressing its forehead to the ground.

"Then let me ask you, Mutia."

"Why did you collude with Hisimet Cretsu to attack me?"

There was a moment of silence.

As the holes dug by the fingers deepened and more blood flowed into them, turning the ground redder, Mutia opened her mouth.

"You are tied to us by fate."

"Today is the first time we

've met."

"But it can be said we've been entangled since your beginning."

I tilted my head.

"Why is that?"

"[Returner's Winding Clock]."

Mutia answered.

With words I never expected.

"The very creators of that return skill you possess are none other than me and Hisimet Cretsu."

Chapter 330:

Starlight (3)

---

“Huh?”

I blinked in surprise.

“You guys made the [Returner’s Winding Clock]?”

“...Yes.”

Mutia answered. While saying 'Yes', the noise of teeth being grinded got mixed in, so the accurate pronunciation was closer to 'Yegrss'.

However, I was a man generous even to the defeated. I kindly pretended not to hear. I had the right to ask Mutia anything I was curious about, whether she grinded her teeth or not after all.

“My skill was obtained from the Flame Emperor. The Flame Emperor, as far as I know, received the skill from [The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages]. It's the first time I am hearing that you were involved in its creation.”

“It's like a movie.”

“What?”

“I said it's like the movies you enjoy watching.”

The golden Constellation looked up at me with eyes full of hatred. The reason for such an angle in its gaze was because Mutia was still kneeling. Because, well, I had the right to demand the loser to keep their knees touching the ground.

“To make a movie, there needs to be a director, a producer, and sponsors. An EX-grade skill is equivalent to a blockbuster movie in your terms. [The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages] is like the director of that movie... or rather, closer to a producer.”

“Hmm.”

I recalled a memory.

「I'm really sorry! King of Death!」

「It was me who gave the skill to the Flame Emperor!」

At some point, the princess had told me this while hitting her head against mine.

I see.

So it wasn't the princess alone who made the skill from.

“What was your role then?”

“...I am adhering to the etiquette that the loser must answer the winner's questions. But may I stand up now to answer? It's embarrassing in front of the children.”

“Eh, standing is more tiring than sitting. Just tell me as you are.”

“Damn you.”

Mutia scratched the ground with her nails.

“One day, the princess came to me and said she wanted to make a regression skill. As regression falls under my domain, she needed my permission first.”

“A domain dispute?”

“Something like that. I initially refused but eventually agreed on the condition that it would be a skill that could only regress [just one day], and only if accompanied by a severe penalty.”

Penalty.

“And then, that snake bastard interfered.”

“[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth].”

“Exactly. That snake bastard.”

It seemed Mutia thought she had the right to call the traitor whatever she wished. A reasonable assertion. I respected that right.

The golden Constellation spoke.

“The snake bastard suggested that the skill be activated only upon death.”

"....."

“I found the penalty interesting and agreed, but it wasn’t just that. The snake bastard, the Constellation governing secrets and labyrinths, wanted not just any death, but a [labyrinth activated upon death].”

Labyrinth. Maze. Or trap.

I pulled out the skill card of [Returner’s Winding Clock] and looked down at it.

+

[Returner's Winding Clock]

Rank: EX

Effect: Activated automatically on death. You will return 24 hours back in time from the moment of your death. Your memories and stats are preserved while returning.

*However, there is a greater penalty the higher your rank.

*Skill copied from Yoo Soo-Ha

+

“...So that labyrinth was a trauma?”

“Correct.”

Mutia nodded.

“The snake bastard said, [People's lives are often compared to paths. Like having walked a long way. But to others, that path is twisted and an unfathomable puzzle. Other people's lives, their pasts and their paths, I consider them the ultimate mazes.]”

The great snake had said.

「 Humans are contemptible beings. 」

「 But each harbors a palace within their heart, hiding a maze. 」

「 Which is a void palace, isn't it? 」

While conveying the snake's words, Mutia gnashed her molars.

“A truly snake-like suggestion. So we decided to install the maze of death in your skill.”

"....."

“Perhaps it wasn't just the two of us involved. The Tower Master...”

Mutia was continuing her story when she suddenly furrowed her brow and looked up. Floating in the sky, now turned black from its original blue, was one of the pillars, [The Staff of Time Immemorial].

“...Is it alright for me to speak up to here?”

“Huh? Ah, it doesn't matter to me.”

The mage holding a thin, long staff yawned as if bored.

“The King of Death has already met the Tower Master directly. He's practically been granted the highest security clearance. He probably even understands the language of the original world.”

“What? He directly met the Tower Master?”

Mutia raised her eyebrows and turned to look at me.

The look in her eyes seemed to say, 'What kind of person are you?'

“What exactly are you?”

“Who knows. Even if I don't know what kind of person I am, it seems I'm someone [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] and [The Ruin-Harvesting Cow] should kneel and talk to.”

“You fucking... No, never mind. Let's not speak of it.”

Mutia sighed.

“Anyway, since the princess is also the Tower Master's daughter, it's possible she used powers from other Constellations as well, not just from the snake bastard and me. By asking the Tower Master, that is.”

“Hmm.”

“So your existence is indeed troublesome.”

The golden eyes glared at me.

“Because of you, both the snake bastard and I are in danger.”

“Eh?”

“As long as you're alive and well, I can't fulfill the wishes of my believers. No. My very faith is shaking!”

I tilted my head, still not understanding why Mutia and Hisimet Cretsu held animosity towards me, even after hearing the whole story of how my skill was created.

“You can't fulfill your believers' wishes because of me? Why?”

“You connected the time with that Silver Lily or whatever!”

Mutia growled.

“Regression should be exclusive, do you understand? The value of regression is established by the fact that only I have returned to the past. If someone else knows that time has been reversed, the value of regression, my power, plummets! Yet! You and Silver Lily drew a [Line of Time] together!”

“...A Line of Time?”

“You return, and Silver Lily knows. Silver Lily returns, and you know! No matter what, one of you realizes [time has been rewound]!”

Ah.

“Are you talking about [A Certain Returner's Love]?”

“That's right!”

Mutia shouted, engulfed in anger.

“Even if I fulfill a believer's wish and regress them, they can no longer enjoy an exclusive position! Because of you two! Do you understand? I can no longer claim absolute power over time. My power has been compromised!”

As Mutia raged on, I went over Raviel's skill in my head.

+

[A Certain Returner's Love]

Rank: EX

Effect: For a returner, love is like poison. No matter how much they struggle, they can't share time with the one they love. Thus, a certain returner had a burning desire, 'Let my beloved keep her memories.' This desire reached the tower and was granted.

You share a timeline with your beloved. If your lover goes back a day, you go back a day. If you go back a day, so does your lover. This is the vow of a ring. This is a marriage of time.

May fortune be with both of you.

*However, it only activates when you and your lover mutually love each other.

+

“I see.”

I understood the whole picture.

“If only I were the regressor, it would be fine. It would also be fine if Raviel were the only regressor. But because we share each other's timelines...”

A sort of line connecting each other.

From now on, even if a new regressor is born, they cannot ignore the red line of time we have drawn.

If a new regressor goes back to the past, Raviel and I will immediately know that [the world has been rewound].

There can longer be a regressor who monopolizes time.

Except for Raviel and me.

“I was curious why that skill was ranked EX, but... there was indeed a reason for the highest ranking.”

“Because of you two, my position as a Constellation has plummeted!”

“Yes, I see why you're hostile towards me.”

Of course, it wasn't something I needed to concern myself with.

Nor was it something Raviel needed to worry about.

“Why would anyone make something like [Returner's Winding Clock]? It's all self-inflicted.”

“Don't laugh! It was the princess who first mentioned making it, not me!”

“I'm not laughing. Anyway, you were the one who attached the trauma penalty, weren't you? Raviel having [A Certain Returner's Love] is, if you think about it, thanks to the trauma penalty. Hmm. I'm a bit sorry to say... but this is entirely your own doing from start to finish.”

“Damn the Tower! Damn the princess!”

[The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages manifests.]

“Did someone call me?”

“No one called you! Get lost, you false god!”

“That's so mean...!”

[The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages disappears.]

For a brief 6 seconds, someone popped their head out from beneath the ground and then vanished right away.

It was agreed that no one would mention this incident.

“Well, leaving aside the reason you attacked me...”

I glanced at the spot where the princess had disappeared and said.

“What about Hisimet Cretsu? What made that Constellation anxious enough to form an alliance with you?”

“Hmph. Why don’t you ask that traitor directly?”

Mutia turned her head away.

“Thanks to you, my power is already tattered. I can't even create a new regressor anymore, and even if I could, I'd have to get your consent first. That's no longer fitting for a respectable Constellation. ...I am resentful.”

“Mutia!”

“We have no one but you, Mutia! We would never serve another Constellation!”

“We will remain loyal until the end of the world!”

A few of the two hundred apostles who had regained their senses cried bitterly. Mutia looked around at them, sighed deeply, and said.

“...Anyway, find out about Hisimet Cretsu's circumstances yourself. I've adhered to the manners expected of a loser. I wish you wouldn't insult me further.”

"Fair enough."

I had proven to be stronger than Mutia in the domain of regression through this duel.

If the flowing times within this Tower were to be described in a history book, only the timeline of Raviel and me would be the main chronicle, and the timelines produced by Mutia would be relegated to biographies.

'I've gotten everything I could out of Mutia. Now it's time for...'

I turned my gaze.

To the sky.

Floating there, watching the conversation between the victor and the vanquished, was [The Staff of Time Immemorial].

“O Pillar.”

“I’m listening.”

“Two Constellations senior to me conspired to ambush me. I received no prior warning, and I even had to figure out I had become a Constellation on my own. The latter is especially unfair, isn’t it?”

“[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] used its power to collaborate with [Ruin-Harvesting Cow] to achieve that.”

“But that doesn’t change its unfairness.”

“That’s right. And that’s exactly why I appeared as the judge.”

The pink eyes gazed down at me.

“If you want something, say it. If I find it reasonable, I’ll grant it.”

“Yep. I’m supposedly at the level of a Constellation now. Well, I won’t throw a tantrum.”

I shrugged my shoulders.

“I’m currently on the 62nd floor, right?”

“Yep. Unless both of our memories are severely damaged.”

“What I want as a reward is very simple.”

Grinning widely.

I smiled with all my might.

“Please appoint [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] as the manager of the next 63rd floor stage.”

“Oh.”

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] slightly tilted its head.

“That’s an interesting request for a reward. Why?”

“I detest the fact that it fled during the battle.”

“It could be seen as a wise action, couldn’t it?”

“To betray a comrade you promised to stand with is utterly despicable.”

“There might be room to see it as a wise action as well.”

“More importantly, since it chose to fight me, I have the right to conclude the matter. From the perspective of justice, karma, and resolution, you should consider my request.”

“If the world worked on rights, there would’ve been no need for the Tower.”

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] stroked its staff.

“This is the Tower, after all. Alright, I’ll grant it.”

At that moment.

[The Constellation observing the story in secret is shocked.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth protests against the unjust treatment!]

Although it had fled in body, it had left its eyes and ears here.

The protest messages poured in, but [The Staff of Time Immemorial] didn't even blink. To be precise, it blinked only when it felt like it.

“It’s not really unjust.”

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth screams that this must not happen!]

“I’m a Pillar. It can happen.”

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth vows to never forget this incident!]

“It’s not about not forgetting, but about not being able to forget, right? Probably.”

Okay.

“Little Fox.”

“Squeak?”

“The stage is cleared. Let's move on.”

The fox, transformed into a scarf around my neck, waved its tail once.

[Quest Clear!]

[The 62nd floor has been c leared!]

[You will be instantly transferred to the 63rd floor as per your wicked wish.]

Then, a message close to a scream resounded.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth cries out that this must not happen!]

Of course, the response I had to give was predetermined.

“It will.”

And then, a whirlwind of light swallowed me up.

Chapter 331: Glass Palace (1)

---

[You have entered the 63rd floor.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth detects your presence and becomes enraged!]

Sandstorms enveloped me before settling down.

Like a hand that grabs only to release after a moment.

Feeling the scent of sand grains polished by the wind and dried by the sun, I straightened up confidently.

"There's really no need to say it through messages anymore, Serpent."

I didn't use telepathy.

My opponent is a Constellation that governs all riddles and secrets.

Peeking into unseen places and eavesdropping on unheard sounds must be easy for them. In other words, an expert in wiretapping.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth shivers its scales at your rudeness!]

Hmm.

I squinted one eye.

"Perhaps negotiation is possible. I, for one, am a man who tends to get along surprisingly well once spoken to. Instead of hiding and spending an eternity, why not have some tea time and chat?"

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth scolds you for attempting to butter it up!]

As expected.

'It has no intention of revealing its voice, even in death.'

I looked around.

'It's probably being cautious so its location isn't exposed by its voice. Having witnessed Mutia being defeated by me... It probably doesn't have the courage to show itself before me. Now then... should we start a game of hide and seek from now?'

The Labyrinth.

I was surrounded by towering walls.

It was debatable whether to call them 'walls' because I knew of no 'wall' that seemed capable of reaching the stratosphere, let alone extend beyond it.

Moreover, the sky was sealed in a dome. It was as if an eggshell covered the earth. Climbing the walls would likely only lead to being blocked by the shell of the sky.

'The ground?'

It was made of wood.

The wooden floor swirled with patterns akin to snake scales.

I tried swinging my sword as a test, but both the walls and the floor remained intact, undamaged. They were probably designed to be very hard to destroy.

"...Is this stage shaped like a maze itself?"

I muttered.

"This is troublesome. The serpent will keep changing its position. While I'm unfamiliar with this place, the serpent knows it inside out. If it just keeps running away, there's no way for me to catch it..."

"You don't need to worry about that."

A voice came from behind me.

The reason I didn't reflexively swing my sword to attack was that I had heard this voice before.

"The Staff of Time Immemorial?"

"Just call me a mage. Because I am a mage."

With a face that looked like it had never smiled, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] spoke. The mage was yawning, maintaining a distance of about 6 meters from me.

"It's not really a big deal. I'm just the greatest mage in the world, that's all."

"No, I think that's quite an impressive achievement..."

"No, it's not a big deal. Before becoming a Pillar, I slaughtered thirteen Dragon Emperors alone, conquered seven Dragon Kingdoms, and was the first to reach the Void Pole, the root and starting point of the world, planting a flag there. But, I was just a mage, nothing more."

"Are you just trying to brag to me now?"

"King of Death. Do you know why people who have achieved great success are incredibly humble? Once you reach such a position, being humble makes others feel inferior. While making others feel inferior, I remain completely innocent. Only those in power can afford to be genuinely humble. In that sense, it's not surprising that successful people are humble. What do you think? Have I enlightened you?"

"The only thing I realized from your words is that your character is rotten..."

"Congratulations. You've realized a lot already."

Clap. Clap. Clap.

The mage clapped his hands. Not with his hands, but with his mouth. In other words, he moved his mouth to make 'clap, clap, clap' sounds. Listening to the mage's mouth clapping, I sensed that this Pillar was also an extraordinary lunatic.

"Let's get back to the main point. Why don't I need to worry?"

The mage took out a piece of paper from his pocket and wrote something on it.

The paper read [Main Point].

The mage attached the paper to the wall, took three steps back, then three steps forward again.

"Ta-da."

"....."

"I've returned."

I decided to calmly ignore the events of the last approximately 15 seconds. When dealing with a lunatic, one must arm themselves with madness too.

"Right. Insane mage. Why don't I need to worry?"

"Constellations are unfair beings. They are so powerful that ordinary humans can't possibly oppose them, not only in physical strength but also because their very existence is grand."

The mage spoke as if he were the only sane person around.

"But even within that unfairness, there's a hint of fairness."

"Fairness?"

"Yes. A riddle, no matter how difficult, is a riddle because it has an answer. A labyrinth, no matter how complex, is a labyrinth because it has an exit. A riddle without an answer is just an annoying string of sentences, and a labyrinth without an exit is merely a tedious sequence of locations."

The mage muttered expressionlessly.

"That wouldn't be any different from the 'ordinary human' lives that Constellations look down upon."

"....."

"Even if it's a twisted answer. Even if it's a warped exit. The role of a Constellation, no, the very essence of a Constellation's existence is to provide answers to a world without answers and to create doors in a life without doors."

In other words.

"Hisimet Cretsu... The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth won't run away, will it?"

"Every palace has a throne. A labyrinth is also a palace. A king who flees from the throne is no longer a king."

I see.

I nodded and then glared at the surrounding walls.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth clenches its teeth.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its power!]

And then, as if responding to my provocative gaze, the world transformed at that moment.

The world was still made of walls.

But they were no longer walls that blocked my vision and remained unseen.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth requests a pact with the tower.]

[Sanctuary designated.]

[Approved.]

The outer shell of the walls melted away.

[From this moment, this place belongs to The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth.]

The shell peeled away, revealing glass beneath.

Transparent glass windows.

No longer blocked by sight, they allowed for a free view inside. Whether intentionally or not, I looked through the glass and saw...

"...Mannequins? Figures?"

Numerous dolls were displayed inside the glass walls.

The expression "countless" was quite literal here.

The glass walls, tall enough to reach the sky and so vast their ends were unknown, formed a glass labyrinth. In each glass window, the dolls were densely lined up, layer upon layer, row upon row, creating an elaborate display.

[He is the one who conceals and reveals, worship him.]

Creak.

A mannequin hanging near the closest glass window suddenly lifted its head.

Its mouth opened.

"He is the one who conceals and reveals, worship him."

To the left, right, and above the mannequin, other frozen figures began to open their mouths.

"He is the one who conceals and reveals, worship him."

Then the dolls surrounding them.

"He is the one who conceals and reveals, worship him."

From the alleys' dead ends, the straight paths, the winding corners, dozens, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands of mannequins, and infinitely more beyond my sight, creaked and groaned behind the glass, opening their mouths.

"If you dare seek me, then try."

The voices of thousands and millions layered together.

Each doll's distinct voice created a discordant harmony.

"One among these is my true body."

"....."

Among them.

In this place where hundreds of millions, or perhaps even more, dolls were displayed, The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth was hiding.

I smiled slightly.

"For a game of hide and seek, it seems too biased against the seeker."

"It's still a fair game, nonetheless."

A doll displayed on the glass wall to my right moved its lips.

"If you cannot find me, simply admit defeat and leave. Or you might as well wander in my glass palace forever!"

Each doll had its unique features.

Some were as detailed as action figures, or rather, they were so lifelike that they could be mistaken for real. They had faces. They had eyes. They appeared vividly alive, yet their expressions remained unchanged as if time had stopped for them.

Others were no different from mannequins. Some were wooden dolls. The others were faceless, expressionless marionettes with exposed joints.

The dolls varied in their level of detail. From perfect finished products to those that seemed barely touched by a sculptor's knife. Numerous puppet dolls hung from strings, each assuming different poses.

But one thing was common.

『I am the murderer who killed the neighbor's child.』

Every doll held a sign.

『I betrayed my best friend.』

This was their one similarity.

『I committed adultery with a priest from the temple.』

『The one who plotted the poisoning of the Grand Duke was me.』

『I killed my father.』

『I hate the noble who took me in.』

『I conspired with the enemy of my lord to destroy my own family.』

The dolls' signs varied in content.

Some were serious; others were trivial.

"...They're all secrets."

I easily realized what the signs meant.

"Things people don't want to show others. Confidential information they don't want revealed. Each person has at least one secret. And with that, you can deduce the person's identity."

"Well done, you're quick-witted."

Creak-crack.

A puppet in front of me opened its mouth. The noise from its joints, presumably intended by The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth as a mocking laugh.

"These are all individuals who once prayed to me for a wish. They have all, at least once, relied on my power. My realm is vast, incomparable to a newly born star like you!"

"I don't particularly desire to create such a vast world..."

Hamusutra was a grand library. Mutia was a sand temple. And Hisimet Cretsu is a glass exhibition hall?

"What kind of wishes do you usually grant?"

"[Please, tell me the weakness of that detestable person.]"

"....."

"[Make sure no one knows what I did.] [Please.] [So that I can kill him without anyone finding out.] [So they can't uncover my past, no matter how hard they try.] [That summer incident.] [Make me appear utterly innocent.]"

Creak, crack.

Seven mannequins simultaneously sneered.

"Every human has once deeply wished for such things in their heart. You humans have many secrets you wish to reveal, but even more that you wish to conceal!"

Hisimet Cretsu.

The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth.

Keywords are snake, egg, labyrinth, secret, riddle, paradox, maintaining and securing secrets.

Locks and keys.

Exposure.

"Of course, I faithfully keep their secrets as they wish. Under my power, they enjoy the blessing of not having their most dreaded secrets exposed, but here, their hidden secrets are blatantly displayed!"

I nodded in understanding.

"That's why you could be related to my skill [Trauma Penalty]."

Seven mannequins simultaneously tilted their heads.

"Hmm?"

"A person's past is the epitome of secrets. The deepest scars held in one's past are the perfect keys to understanding them."

I took a deep breath and continued.

"The Tower Master mentioned that this power originates from 'All Lives' and traces back to an ancestor, a disciple of Hamusutra. But at the same time, the aspect of 'peering' in my skill connects it to your power."

The mannequins burst into laughter.

"Ah, indeed! Correct! Yes, a person's past is a [memory] and thus a [story], but it is also a [secret]. You have excellently exposed that."

From the corner of my vision, a mannequin creaked and raised its hand.

"A wise expositor should be rewarded."

Wooden fingers pointed somewhere.

"Rejoice. I shall bestow upon you a small gift."

"Is it a hint about your location?"

"You'll know when you see it."

I followed the direction indicated.

There was another mannequin pointing somewhere else with its finger, and so I walked the same path, repeating it sixteen times.

And then...

"....."

I paused momentarily upon re aching the destination.

"How do you find it, young star?"

Through the thin glass, a doll moved its lips.

The marionette was intricately crafted.

It had a voice and face I recognized well.

"Do you not wish to know this child's secret?"

There...

A doll identical to the Paladin was on display.

Chapter 332: Glass Palace (2)

---

I knew.

"It's a pity."

For a long time, I thought I knew.

"Think about it. Whoever, whatever being created this tower must have put in tremendous effort."

"It should be a moment to marvel and admire."

"But we've become too accustomed to everything by the 10th floor."

Always maintaining a stoic expression, hidden behind a helmet, making immense effort to show as little of her face as possible to others.

Always clad in armor.

"I thought I had a good poker face."

"Kim Gong-Ja, do you possess a mind-reading skill?"

Someone who has built even more formidable walls within their heart.

"No choice then."

My companion.

Patricia.

Our noble and pure Paladin.

"I have the ability to detect lies."

"It's the skill that helped me rise to the position of deputy guild master of the Vigilante Corps."

"Doubt is a poison that eats away at humans, and truth is the most powerful antidote. We may not be able to regain the trust we've lost so far, but at least we can cooperate on the 12th floor."

Just before the decisive battle with the Demon King of Autumn Rain.

After years, the excitement among the hunters who had finally broken through a stage was palpable. So much that they easily fell into the Demon King's trap. The possibility that 'the quest itself could be a trap set by the Demon King' was overlooked.

When it was announced that someone had betrayed us and sided with the Demon King, the leaders of the major guilds readily suspected each other.

"How foolish...!"

"I told you! Don't choose the Demon King's reward. Yet... stupidly!"

"Fine. As the master of Black Dragon, I declare here. I don't know who dared to betray us, but I'll gift that person the most painful death."

It was a time when the trust among us was yet to be established.

The Heretic Inquisitor interrogated people in the Temple's basement under the guise of heresy, the Black Dragon Witch's assassins roamed the nights of Babylon, and the Countess was busy encroaching on the capital of other guilds.

And above all.

"Ah, I get it. I get the atmosphere. The air. It's the feeling from when we were conquering the early stages of the tower..."

"That's true. Reminds me of the days when the 5 great guilds were actually 10."

"Many died back then. Killed many too, didn't we?"

Everyone was nothing more than a mass murderer.

Everyone knew it too well.

"Paladin! Start interrogating everyone with [Lie Detection] right now. Don't leave anyone out! If even one person refuses to answer or tries to evade the question, I'll kill them right here and now!"

Thus.

"I was planning to do that anyway."

I knew.

"First, I'll start by clarifying that I am not the traitor."

Someone like you would never forget the mass murderers.

It's impossible to be persuaded or forgiven.

If you lack the power to punish the mass murderers now, you will wait until that power accumulates. You will be patient. Whether it takes 5 years or 10 years, you will persevere until the moment of opportunity arrives.

"I'm quite confident in my poker face."

"I have some skill in maintaining a poker face."

Making others think [the Paladin is a reliable person].

Even if you miss the opportunity, you won't show any regret.

Even if the opportunity comes, you won't show any excitement.

You will do what needs to be done.

"Life is truly unpredictable."

"Reconciling with the Black Dragon Witch and becoming friends again, improving relations with other guild leaders..."

"Really."

"It's unbelievable."

I've thought I knew for a long time.

When I faced a doll that looked exactly like the Paladin in a dead-end alley of the 63rd floor's glass labyrinth— when I saw the paper sign the doll was holding.

I wasn't surprised.

Not at all. Not even a little bit.

"I have..."

The sign was written in a simple script.

"Planned 17 different ways to assassinate all my comrades."

That was exactly the Patricia I knew.

Creak.

"Are you surprised?"

The doll, identical to the Paladin, moved its lips. The serpent, revealing neither its form nor voice, whispered through the doll.

"Such devotion. Technically, Constellations are prohibited from directly interfering with humans who haven't reached the 50th floor. Therefore, they make indirect contact through skills and blessings."

"....."

Indirect propagation of faith.

From the standpoint of Constellations, skills and blessings are merely tools.

There are far more worlds that fail to reach the 50th floor than those that do. Far more.

From the Constellations' perspective, it would be a waste to let the faith resources of so many worlds go unused.

Therefore, they create skills and distribute blessings, like the [Blessing of the God of Snakes] I once received as a hidden stage reward, using their powers.

"But this human was desperate."

Creak, creak.

As I filed away this new information, the marionette Paladin spoke as if delighted.

"Although I don't particularly enjoy giving special treatment, this human was indeed 'special' to me. Such fervent prayers hadn't been seen in quite a while! Over ten years ago, this human bit her lips until they bled, praying to a god they didn't even believe in."

During the Tower's major purge.

"Grant me the power to execute evil in secrecy," they prayed.

"....."

"Essentially, this human wished to become an assassin! Secret killings. Concealed executions. Planned murders. Although I don't govern death, all conspiracies and assassinations are touched by my power. I gladly lent my strength!"

I muttered bitterly.

"So, [Lie Detection] was a skill you gave."

"Yes. And that's not all!"

The doll produced a grating sound.

"This human's skill set is practically a list of my glorious powers. They can see how much others like them in numerical form. When revealing their skills to others, they can distort and manipulate the descriptions as they wish. Secret detection. Information distortion. Manipulation. Strategy. Isn't it beautiful?"

"....."

"You thought your comrades were trustworthy, but they were plotting your death!"

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] taunted.

"They never approached you with genuine kindness. Not a single one."

Perhaps.

"What do you think?" The serpent Constellation asked.

"Before you even heard their stories, they were already planning your demise, devising perfect methods to kill you, Kim Gong-Ja. Even before you were known as the King of Death!"

Yes.

"This is the true nature of the friendship you hold so dear!"

Even the most inconsequential dagger can hurt when it grazes the flesh.

Even if I already knew, even if I had already come to terms with it, even if what I'm hearing now is nothing but provocation aimed to shake me, meant to push me to the brink because that's the only chance the other side has, even if I know all this...

A blade is a blade, and a wound is a wound.

It hurts, even if it's a lie.

"If you wish, I can keep silent about these secrets and not divulge them."

Then the question is.

"Even if you don't wish it, I can lay bare all their secrets right before your eyes!"

Can I endure it?

"Fear what should be feared. You humans, you should be wise enough for that. You've been granted a name far beyond your destiny. Lay down that sword..."

"What do you know?"

The doll's artificial eyes turned towards me.

"What?"

"What makes you think you know so much about Patricia?"

I took a handkerchief from my pocket and fiddled with it.

A white handkerchief with silver thread embroidery.

Feeling its soft touch, I calmed my agitated emotions by tracing the patterns with my fingers.

Lowering my heart's temperature.

"You know far less about Patricia than I do."

"Ha! You didn't even know what murderous plans those things had!"

"Patricia used Yoo Soo-Ha."

"...What?"

I recalled a memory.

It felt like a distant past.

The moment I decided to undergo 4,000 days of regression, Patricia was there at the scene.

"Water ability users, don't use your skills alone!"

"Right, time it together! Right!"

Yoo Soo-Ha had set the back streets of Babylon ablaze.

Amongst the top rankers, only the Paladin and the Master Alchemist rushed to the scene of the fire. The Paladin might not have known, but that was the first time I saw her.

The two rankers talked amidst the flames.

"It's strange. Why hasn't the Saintess arrived yet...?"

"She mentioned she had something tonight. I'm not sure what, but it's probably a date. She's been spending a lot more time with the Flame Emperor lately."

"...I don't like that Flame Emperor."

Of course, both of them knew Yoo Soo-Ha.

"The Saintess should be with someone better, I think."

And.

"There's no one better than the Rank 1 holder. Who else could she possibly meet?"

The Paladin didn't speak ill of Yoo Soo-Ha.

Someone who should despise Yoo Soo-Ha more than anyone, if there was anyone in the world who should hate Yoo Soo-Ha, it should have been her, but she showed no signs of contempt.

"Welcome, Flame Emperor."

On the contrary, she was polite.

"As you can see, there's been arson in the old slum area. Could you please help?"

She was respectful.

"What's in it for me?"

"Tomorrow, headlines in every newspaper and broadcast around the world will read, 'The Flame Emperor, a Great Deed in Extinguishing a Fire.' It will shock the public and improve your image at the same time."

Why?

Why did she do that?

Because she was deceived by Yoo Soo-Ha's acting, tricking everyone including herself, leading to frustration and resentment?

"When the Saintess attempted to poison Yoo Soo-Ha, he fell for it once but then returned through regression to take revenge on the Saintess. At that time, Yoo Soo-Ha believed for some reason that 'the person who ordered my assassination was the Black Dragon Witch.'"

"What? ...What are you talking about?"

"Who suggested that idea to him?"

Someone wanted to use Yoo Soo-Ha to eliminate the Sword Saint.

That someone wanted to use Yoo Soo-Ha to get rid of the Black Dragon Witch.

Someone wanted to instill a desire for revenge in the Saintess, irreparably damaging the relationship between Yoo Soo-Ha and the Black Dragon Witch.

"Who could have suggested that?"

In the IF scenario shown by the Tower Master, the great guilds collapsed.

The Heretic Inquisitor was killed by a terrorist who infiltrated the Temple, and the Black Dragon Witch was also dealt with by an assassin.

The Heretic Inquisitor and the Black Dragon Witch were people who valued security above all else.

How could a terrorist and an assassin not only enter the tower but also infiltrate the core of the great guilds?

"The guild that examines and vouches for the identities of those entering the tower is the Vigilante Corps. Conveniently, they were under Patricia's control."

How?

"If the Tower Master wanted to prove to me that 'Yoo Soo-Ha could change,' why show me a fantasy? If you're going to show a fantasy, why not show the most perfect world? Why show a broken world to me?"

Because the Tower Master cannot ignore human desires.

Even if it's blood-stained resentment, Patricia's wish was to deliver just retribution to the mass murderers.

The Tower Master simply couldn't ignore that wish.

"....."

For a long time, I thought I knew.

"The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth."

I spoke up.

"You know far less than you think you do."

"....."

"You want to suggest that the trust I've built is nothing more than a sandcastle, to reveal each of my companions' secrets one by one, to push me to a point where I can trust no one, not even myself. That's what you want."

But.

"I know far more than you think I do."

About Patricia.

About my companions.

"I know the expressions they've shown and even the expressions they've never shown. I know everything about them, even the things they don't know about themselves."

It's not because they seem incapable of such acts, or because I believe they wouldn't do such things that I trust them.

I grasped my sword.

"I'm by their side to ensure that those capable of such acts don't, and to ensure that those who could do such things don't end up doing them. That's why I'm here, and that's why they trust me."

"You..."

"There's no blade among the secrets you could reveal that could shatter me."

"Insolent brat!"

"Human beings are not dolls meant to be displayed in your glass garden."

With all my might, I struck the ground of the labyrinth with my sword.

"No one lives to be displayed to others, and no one has the right to display another."

The glass world shattered around the point of impact.

"Let's bring you down now."

The world of glass split apart.

Chapter 333: Glass Palace (3)

---

"You lowly thing!"

Hisimet Cretsu urgently exclaimed.

"What on earth are you doing!"

The Constellation no longer used Patricia's doll to make its voice heard. Beyond the windows surrounding me, hundreds and thousands of dolls screamed in unison.

"Do you think my existence will fade even if you overpower me with force!"

The outcry of thousands was a scream that seemed to tear the heavens apart.

"I am the master of all secrets! I posed a problem to you, and you accepted my challenge! It's a duel. This too is a duel. Do you understand! Your petty blade breaking through the glass and tearing the ground solves nothing! You cutting the Gordian Knot<sup>[1]</sup> is not acknowledged! Never! Just wait, the judge will eventually declare my victory.....!"

"I'm not Alexander."

I twisted the hilt of my sword.

"I'm doing this because I have the correct answer."

The sword blade, already deeply embedded in the ground, twisted with a violent roar. Cracks spread like a spiderweb around the sword. It was over in an instant.

"What do you mean, an answer... Stop! Stop it! You're not using force now but violence! Violence is essentially assault! Do you understand! Assault!"

"Yes. If you insist on resisting, I'll give you the answer that you and I both know."

Find Hisimet Cretsu's true body in the world of the Glass Palace.

This was the task given to me on the 63rd floor.

And as soon as I heard the task, no, even before I heard it, I only cared about two things.

"I thought it would either be the sky or the ground from the start."

".....What....."

"These dolls are all controlled by you. What this means is simple. The moment I'm killed by one of these dolls, Hisimet Cretsu, I'll see your trauma."

I lifted the corners of my mouth.

"That's what you truly want, isn't it?"

"Claiming to rule all secrets, well-versed in labyrinths and mazes, you are that Constellation. You're also the very person who designed the trauma penalty. I may not know exactly how you did it, but one thing is for sure, [Your trauma is a labyrinth from which it is terribly hard to escape]."

".....Eeek! Eeeeeek!"

That's right.

All the dolls were merely bait.

'Logically' thinking, among the countless dolls covering the entire world, finding Hisimet Cretsu's true body would be impossible.

Only by using my 'illogical' skill, [Returner's Winding Clock], could I possibly find the true body.

If I enter the trauma and see Hisimet Cretsu's past, I will naturally learn about that Constellation, and understanding its habits and nature, I will naturally realize where it has hidden itself.

"It's not working."

Therefore, in this stage, [Trauma] is the fastest shortcut and the only key.

"If you dare challenge me in the domain you're most confident in, I'm not that foolish!"

And thus the most dangerous [trap].

"All the dolls are bait! Exposing Patricia's secret to provoke me was to tempt me into hastily taking the easiest shortcut as my emotions intensify! If I hadn't met the fox constellation on the 61st floor, if I hadn't fallen into triple-layered dreams, I might have overlooked the danger of trauma!"

I was already aware of how dangerous a 'Constellation's Trauma' could be.

Haven't I lived through half the lives of Raviel and my master?

The gap between the 61st and 63rd floors was too short to forget those lessons.

"Bad timing, you venomous snake!"

Crackling!

The cracks engraved in the ground widened further. The cracks became crevices, and the crevices split open, revealing a gap. Just a bit wider and it would be an abyss, just a moment longer and it would be a cliff's edge. An earthquake-like tremor occurred.

"And you were foolish!"

"Can't you hear me telling you to stop! You! Even if the human race is such a lowly race that it cannot understand human words, you cannot ignore the decrees of the Constellations! Listen to me!"

"Being able to move the mouths of all dolls, controlling them at will, wherever they are, whatever doll they may be. That means— you are, in a [higher place] where all dolls can be seen, or in a [lower place] where all dolls are supported!"

"Listen to me!"

"I'll tell you the answer to the riddle you posed!"

The earth split open.

"The very ground of this Glass Palace is your true body!"

The exhibition halls made of glass shattered noisily.

"This world's ground is your skin! No, your shell!"

Feeling the intensifying earthquake,

I recalled the fact I had confirmed immediately after falling into the labyrinth.

'The ground is.'

'Made of wood.'

'A wooden floor with patterns swirling like snake scales was spread out.'

Every riddle comes with a hint.

The fact that the pattern of the ground I was standing on resembled snake scales could have been seen as just [the Serpent's World-appropriate interior].

Or perhaps it could have been seen as [the old skin shed by a snake as big as the world].

"Accept my answer! Master of the Labyrinth!"

The gap widened, and the ground sunk.

The dolls displayed in the exhibition hall also fell.

Countless white shards of glass fell like petals.

Billions of wooden dolls fell like branches.

"I hereby expose your secret at this place!"

"Ugh.....!"

Alias, The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth.

True name, Hisimet Cretsu.

And its true identity is.

"[I am here!]"

Jormungand[2].

A monster so huge it could swallow the entire world, eventually wrapping around the edges of the world, biting its own tail with its mouth.

A snake that made up an entire world.

"I am the victor of this duel!"

"Ugh.....!"

And then the ground crumbled.

The ground, as vast and thick as to be mistaken for the actual ground, the old shell, tore apart.

"You, bastard.....!"

Beneath the torn shell was nothing but endless darkness.

It was the deep sea, but there was no water, so one could not swim.

It was space, but physical laws did not apply. Endlessly hidden, forever concealing the inside of an eggshell.

"You! You! You, King of Death! You dare to!"

There was a snake there.

"Dare to defeat me, Hisimet Cretsu!"

The snake coiled around the entire abyss, covering the whole universe. When the snake opened its mouth, a hellish abyss opened up.

Only two eyes.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth's existence manifests.]

Two eyes shining with bright red hostility were the only light in this deep sea.

In a world where only its gaze was allowed, without any other form of light— It lay within its old shell, using the exterior it created as walls. This circular world was probably the deepest palace.

That's why it is the Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth.

Anyone can build this palace in their heart. Anyone can become the sole ruler sitting on the throne. The massive monster, being the king of a world governed only by itself, inside a palace ruled by no one else, roared like an old tyrant.

"Rising through the ranks by flattering Hamusutra, you mere human!"

The snake's tail lashed out at me, immeasurably large.

Perhaps, it really had no size.

This place was Hisimet Cretsu's depth and heart, the dwelling of its heart. In the world it created, only it was gigantic, and the only existing thing was itself. This vast abyss was no more than a wick to be split apart.

"Aha!"

Therefore, I sliced through it.

"How light! So light! Even a mere flick of the finger from the venomous snake weighed a thousand times more than your tail flick!"

With my single strike, Jormungand's tail was severed. Blood sprayed, and an infinite red dyed the world, casting a brief dusk upon the abyss, even if it was but a fleeting moment.

"-----!"

The scream added more red to the bloody waves.

"Peep."

Timely, the fox coiled around my neck let out a small cry.

[A Music Box Just for You grants you a quest.]

As I fell and Jormungand crouched at the bottom, sand grains formed letters between us.

+

[The Shedding God]

Difficulty: S-

Objective: Defeat the ruler of the 63rd floor, [The Eyes

Dwelling in the Labyrinth] Hisimet Cretsu. Hisimet Cretsu has exposed your companion and insulted your honor.

*However, if you die even once to Hisimet Cretsu, you will be defeated.

+

"This is why it's convenient to serve a Constellation!"

"Pop."

"Why did I ignore such convenience until now!"

Swoosh—

I continued to slice through the snake's attacks. I didn't avoid them. Even as Hisimet Cretsu constantly thrashed its body to strike, bit with its fangs, and spat poison from its mouth, I countered everything without retreating an inch.

"Ugh, ...Eek! Eek! Aaaagh!"

With every swing of my sword, blood burst forth.

The darkness of the abyss welcomed the red dusk.

"Aaaaagh, ah, aaaaaah!!"

The echo resonated in the world, which should have been self-contained.

The screams overlapped and overlapped.

Endlessly, like waves crashing against the cliffs by the sea.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth's existence becomes faint.]

Like the waves eroding the rocks surrounding the sea.

Creak, crack!

The snake's screams gradually cracked the eggshell surrounding it.

"Aaaaaaaaah!!"

Though it was a world wide enough to contain its mind, it was too shallow to withstand its own screams.

Eventually, every palace is a house destined for destruction.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth's existence becomes faint.]

Just as every dynasty inevitably marks its era with the forecast of its downfall.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth's existence becomes faint.]

The kingdom of the Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth, built by the tyrant named Hisimet Cretsu, surrounded by walls of dolls' bodies and pillars of human secrets, declares its end at this moment.

".....Ugh..... Black. Ugh....."

The snake's moans flowed softly.

"Everything..... All will be exposed. Everything....."

This place was no longer the deep sea that refused the bottom.

Light seeped through the wound-like crevices.

Under the light more ominous than shadows, Jormungand shrank to just a slightly larger snake size.

"If you attack me, the more you attack, the fact that you possess the return skill... not just in the world you live in! But also your companions, your son, your daughter, and not just them... everywhere my faith reaches! Every world! Yes, the entire tower! I'll expose everything!"

"....."

"If I get hurt, that very moment will also be the day of your downfall. Do you understand? You know, right? All the successes you've achieved will be belittled as mere results of your returns. Your-your blood will be utterly devalued. No one will respect you, as if they knew it all along. Your blood. Your time. Your dedication. Everything will be treated as if- as if it never existed."

"....."

"Do you understand!"

The snake was truly small.

If inflicting wounds is all you know how to do.

"Really, you, do you truly understand my authority!"

A stone lying on the road, a blade placed there by chance.

A piece of metal.

It was no different from such existences.

"Let's do that."

My wounds may still be wounds, but.

You too shall remain a mere piece of metal forever.

"I have Raviel, a family, and friends. Just as I stay by Patricia's side knowing her secret, Patricia will continue to stay by my side even after knowing mine."

"....."

"While you play eternity here, I've gained people through shedding blood."

It wasn't enemy blood.

It wasn't thin blood either.

There was no blood that wasn't red.

"Hisimet Cretsu."

"Ugh..... Ugh....."

"I shall end you."

As soon as I spoke, the snake screamed as if being torn apart.

"Let's do this then!"

I silently raised my sword.

"I'll protect your secret! I'll ensure that absolutely no one, nobody knows you possess the return skill... with my authority over secrets! Forever! I'll hide it deep within my shell! How about it!? This should satisfy you enough...!"

I raised it high.

"Is that not enough for you!? What, you, no, Gong-Ja! When you entered Hamusutra's domain, didn't you use the protection of the God of Snakes!? How was it!? Convenient, right!? What if you could use that power unlimitedly!? Huh!? How about that!?"

I lifted it to its peak.

"That's not all! My life has been as long as my body! My powers are just as deep! I can give you more powers! There are! I can! I, Hisimet Cretsu, am saying this!"

I paused for a moment, then,

"Let's talk! Like people! Beings with intellect should interact not with fists but with words. Now! Let's agree! Let's talk! Let's wisely resolve this situation, so, ah, you brat, young star! No, great star! Sir! Really, just listen to me for a moment.....!!"

I swung it down without hesitation.

In the next moment, as the world split in two with a tearing scream, the snake was bisected.

[1]: The cutting of the Gordian Knot is an Ancient Greek legend associated with Alexander the Great in Gordium in Phrygia, regarding a complex knot that tied an oxcart. Reputedly, whoever could untie it would be destined to rule all of Asia. In 333 BC Alexander was challenged to untie the knot. It is thus used as a metaphor for a seemingly intractable problem which is solved by exercising an unexpectedly direct, novel, rule-bending, decis ive, and simple approach that removes the perceived constraints.

[2]: Jormungand / Jörmungandr is the Midgard Serpent (also World Serpent) in Norse mythology who encircles the realm of Midgard. He is the son of the god Loki and the giantess Angrboða and brother of the great wolf Fenrir and Hel, Queen of the Dead.

Chapter 334: The Constellations' Auction (1)

---

Right after slaying a Constellation.

Let's digress for a moment.

I'm not sure if this is the right time to bring up such a story, but what does it matter?

I had the right to blabber on as I pleased.

So... long, long ago, back when dinosaurs roamed the Earth and selling tobacco targeted at them was quite profitable, it was said that every stationery store had a 100-won gacha machine.

During this era, gachas enthralled children.

Of course, I wasn't even born at that time, so I know little about the gacha craze.

But I do wonder if the older generation was captivated by gachas to the extent that, as time passed and dinosaurs became extinct, they started gacha-ing on their cell phones. I harbored a highly reasonable level of suspicion even from my distant childhood.

Why bring up gachas all of a sudden?

Of course, there's a perfectly logical reason.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth's existence becomes faint.]

The moment I sliced through the massive serpent in a straight line.

"Kieeeeek!!"

From within the body of the snake, that is, from inside the severed halves of the snake's body, a very small snake, barely distinguishable from an earthworm, popped out with a 'pop' sound.

"....."

Hmm.

Slicing through a gigantic snake only to have a much smaller snake spring out.

At that moment, I was reminded of gachas that pop open to reveal a toy inside.

Why? Just because.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests.]

The snake that crawled out from the corpse of the serpent was small enough to fit in the palm of my hand. Sorry to keep comparing it to an earthworm, but it looked like it could get bullied by a slightly larger earthworm.

However, its scales resembled waves.

Its distinct inverse eyes radiated color powerfully, even from its tiny body.

"Uuum.....".

In the end, I could only mutter logically.

"Could you be... the true form of Hisimet Cretsu?"

"Kieeeee-!!"

The earthworm-sized snake cried out pitifully.

[The Snake Dwelling in the Labyrinth cannot hide its outcry of indignation.]

The snake, bending its body, repeatedly hit my palm with its upper body, seemingly trying to express its [injustice] to the greatest extent possible.

If I had seen this scene alone, I might have felt a bit sorry for it.

"No way, seriously? This earthworm is 'The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth'? Amazing."

However, a natural-born aggro magnet from the Constellations was coiled around my neck.

"What do we do with this one, huh? What should we do? If it goes in front of its followers in this form and shouts, [I am the Constellation that governs all secrets! The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth!], instead of gathering faith, the faith it has gathered so far would fly away like a wild bird, wouldn't it?"

"This...!"

"This? Did you say this? You're still not in your right mind! Maybe we should quickly call the Apostles and have them give this god a proper nourishment. Ah, calling the Apostles shouldn't be too hard, right? Hmmm? Huuum? If I press here, will the alarm go off and the communication open...?"

"This god...!"

On my palm, the real snake shed tears drop by drop.

It seemed quite upset.

"Please don't reveal this form to my followers... I beg you! Please!"

"Hmm."

I scratched my cheek.

-Hey, Kim Zombie.

Meanwhile, the Guardian Spirit spoke softly.

-Calm down a bit.

'I haven't gotten excited, have I? I'm just the same as usual.'

-The same, my foot. You got all worked up because your friend was insulted. Don't try to fool me. Fool a ghost instead. I am not a ghost, after all.

The Guardian Spirit sighed.

-My, my. There's no one as emotional as this guy, honestly. Nobody knows that. He just lives and dies by his emotions, sigh.

"....."

Right.

As much as I hate to admit it, the Guardian Spirit's banter worked.

It worked a lot.

"Hmm."

I gently touched the handkerchief once.

The emotions and the desire for revenge that had been heightened by the recent fight calmed down in an instant.

By the time I nodded my head, I had completely returned to my normal state.

'Thank you. I've calmed down.'

-There you go.

'Yes. Now that I'm settled, hmm. Let's see.'

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains laughs uproariously at this scene!]

[The Lonely Seeker slams his desk in shock at the scene before him.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust laughs for the first time in ten years, saying she hasn't laughed like this before.]

First, I need to deal with them.

"Excuse me, but from now on, I would like to have a conversation only between Hisimet Cretsu and myself. There might be discussions about strategies for conquering stages and such, which could be considered military secrets. I am very grateful for the interest shown by the various Constellations, but I kindly request that you withdraw for today."

Fortunately, the Constellations immediately complied with my polite request.

[The Warhorse of the Eternal Plains withdraws.]

[The Incarnation of Love and Lust requests that this scene be recorded on video as she withdraws.]

[The Lonely Seeker disappears, unable to stop laughing no matter what.]

Good.

The outsiders have been dealt with.

Now it's time to get to the main topic.

"Hisimet Cretsu."

With a voice devoid of any emotion, I was able to bow respectfully to the small snake on my palm.

The snake seemed a bit flustered too. If a real snake had an expression, it would probably be embarrassment.

The real snake spoke.

"Hi-Hisimet Cretsu... whose power lies in secrets and revelations. The Constellation that governs labyrinths and mazes. O, King of Death. The Heaven that Gathers Wails."

"Yes."

I nodded.

"As you said, my name is Kim Gong-Ja. I'm a newcomer who has just grabbed the tail end of a Constellation. I have a few things to ask, do you have a moment?"

"...Ye-Yes, of course. Speak."

Hisimet Cretsu shrank on my right palm, visibly tensed.

I sighed once more and said.

"Why did you try to attack me? And in alliance with Mutia, no less, launching a surprise operation?"

"...It's for a similar reason to that bitch. Because of you, that bitch can no longer grant the wishes of humans who pray for reincarnation indiscriminately. She has become a power that requires your permission, which is utterly ridiculous. That's no longer a Constellation. It's even less so a god."

The small snake god's lament, of course, was also directed at itself.

"The two most common wishes my followers make are: [Please let me know that bastard's secret]. [Please ensure that no one knows my secret]. From my standpoint, both wishes are equally important. 99% of the reason why my followers rely on me and send me their faith is because of those wishes."

"Did a problem arise then?"

"Indeed. All because of you!"

The real snake howled.

Again, it was just a real snake.

Even if a real snake howled, it had no force, only causing a breeze that barely brushed my hair.

"...Keuk."

Realizing this, the snake made an aggrieved expression and began to mutter softly.

"I provided my followers with the utmost security. Except for me, Hisimet Cretsu, no one else could handle my followers' secrets. But then..."

"Ah."

I realized.

"The Trauma Penalty? Don't tell me that's what caused a security breach?"

"Er... ..Yes..."

The real snake buried its head in my palm. Thump. Thump. It wasn't bowing to apologize to me, but rather punishing itself in regret for its foolish decisions.

"Thanks to you, essentially everyone's past can be uncovered! No secret can stand before you. They're like a treasure chest that requires a bit of effort to open. And in your hands, you have a golden key that can unlock any chest!"

"Indeed."

"I can no longer guarantee [perfect secrecy]... My Apostle, on the 50th floor, had his entire past exposed due to trauma while under your influence, and the security barriers and systems I had set up did not function at all. They were completely useless!"

I see.

I nodded.

"Your power has been irreparably damaged."

"Exactly! And, as I said before, it's all your doing!"

"I said the same thing to Mutia. It was you who created [Returner's Winding Clock] with such a structure in the first place. You made it lightly, thinking it would be fun, didn't you?"

"Ugh..."

"In other words, this is poetic justice. You were arrogant and careless, not knowing how your actions would come back to haunt you, and finally, the arrow returned to pierce your own back."

A classic theme in myths.

"Consider it a blessing to have been defeated by such a divine cliché. It was destined to end this way from the start."

"Kuueeeee... Kieek..."

As I stroked the small Constellation-turned-snake with my finger.

"Is the discussion roughly settled?"

Thump.

"It's been quite a while since I've seen the egg of the Serpent God. It's quite amusing. Strictly speaking, it's not the egg but the inside of the egg. The interior of a completely sealed cocoon looks like this. Heh."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial].

One of the six pillars in the tower, and the only one.

"Mage."

"Yep. I was the judge for this duel, so I should rightly determine the winner and loser. Congratulations! The winner is the King of Death. The loser is 'The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth.' This result is irrevocable and engraved in the tower. I, as one of the pillars, guarantee the outcome of the two of you."

The mage spoke to us and closed one of his eyes.

"I'm also the pillar responsible for floors up to the 70th floor. So, within the 70th floor, I can arrange the stages quite freely."

A slight premonition of unease crept in.

"Wait. By free arrangement, you mean...?"

"Simple. A tenant can choose to leave and take the deposit, or leave without it, the landlord doesn't have to stop a tenant from leaving tenant, and doesn't have to prevent a tenant who wants to come."

Thump.

The mage tapped the air with his staff, and a hologram unfolded.

A cartoonish map of the 61st to 70th floors.

My face was drawn on the 61st, 62nd, and 63rd floors, along with the fox coiled around my neck. Our faces were caricatured, somewhat comically.

The 64th, 65th, 66th, 67th, 68th, 69th, and 70th floors were different.

Faces I had never seen before reigned as the masters of the stages.

"Now."

The mage danced a little with his staff in hand.

"For exactly six minutes from now, free trade is allowed from the 64th to the 70th floor~."

The mage's playful words were filtered through an emotionless message and echoed throughout the tower.

[Free trade is now possible from the 64th to the 70th floor.]

[The time limit is 06:00.]

[Tenants and prospective tenants, please feel free to trade.]

"....."

What exactly was happening?

As I stood dumbfounded, staring at the hologram the mage had created, unable to comprehend the situation.

[The 64th floor stage is up for auction.]

[The manager of the 64th floor, 'The Righteous Nine-Tailed Fox,' promises to hand over the stage management rights to anyone who wishes, with no need for a deposit, monthly rent, or anything!]

Huh?

I wasn't sure how the trade between Constellations worked, but from my human perspective, that seemed like an incredibly unreasonable deal.

[The next in line after the 63rd floor is the 64th floor.]

But the very next moment, I understood the cause of this unprecedented stage tenancy auction race.

['The Righteous Nine-Tailed Fox' would rather give away the stage management rights for free if it means escaping from that King of Death's path!]

[The 65th floor stage is up for auction.]

[The manager of the 65th floor, 'A Goose is Still a Goose When Flipped,' flaps its wings and flies far away!]

[The 66th and 67th floor stages are up for auction.]

[The managers of the 66th and 67th floors, 'The Rubber Duck that Oversees the Ocean,' deflate themselves and sink deep into the sea!]

The cause of this unheard-of stage tenancy auction race was none other than me.

Kim Gong-Ja.

Chapter 335: The Constellations' Auction (2)

---

[The 68th floor stage is up for auction.]

[The 69th floor stage is up for auction.]

I listened blankly to the messages ringing in my head one after another. I was so stunned that my face might as well have turned into a fish face, like that of a crucian carp pancake...

No, that pun isn't quite right.

Let's just keep watching blankly.

[The 70th floor stage is up for auction.]

"Stop."

Finally, the last floor among the stages available for auction was listed.

The pillar of the tower, the Staff of Time Immemorial, carved its mark.

"Beyond that is not the territory I govern. If you want to escape from the King of Death, you should look for another pillar. There might be Constellations who don't know who I am. And Constellations who have never even heard of a 'pillar,' but consider this a special case and....."

The message cut off, and silence fell all around.

"Now then, shall we find someone to buy the items up for auction?"

It wasn't long.

"I'll explain the gist of the auction."

With a tap, the Staff of Time Immemorial prodded the void with the tip of the staff.

"As you know, the King of Death is a [Hunter], in other words, a challenger climbing the tower towards the hundredth-floor, the [Apex of Heaven]. Though not fully bloomed yet, he is also a Constellation known as 'The Heaven that Gathers Wails.'"

Indeed.

So in the tower, a 'hunter' refers to those who climb the tower.

"From now on, it's not a battle between a teacher giving a test and a student taking it, but a fair fight between warriors."

The mage's voice was low in pitch and temperature.

Like the sound of a piano playing softly outdoors on a winter day.

Many Constellations dwelling above the tower became spectators for a moment, listening to the song of the mage.

"I believe every warrior has the right to flee from a duel."

The mage's eyes were silver.

"A sword should be wielded only by those who wish to use it in a duel."

Eyes resembling the color of a blade looked at me.

"So, who wants to duel with the King of Death?"

"....."

"Among the numerous Constellations, who is the beast that hasn't forgotten the joy of victory? Who is the snake that, even after ascending to the sky, cannot shed the pleasure of its scales scraping against the ground? What kind of light is being scattered by the star that refused to be embraced by the Tower Master?"

With a tap.

The mage rolled his tongue inside his mouth.

"Floor 64. The auction begins."

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality places a bid.]

As soon as the mage finished speaking, there was someone who sent a message.

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality warns not to outbid if you don't want to die.]

The mage tilted his head.

"Well, using that tone might actually provoke others to pounce due to spite."

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality advises participating in the auction from the next stage if you don't want to die.]

"Good. Much better."

I had difficulty finding the difference between the two statements, but it seemed the mage detected a meaningful difference.

An unknown Constellation continuously poured out messages.

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality proposes an opinion on the method of the auction.]

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality says it's better to appoint a manager for up to the 70th floor at once, and as the King of Death clears each stage, the next floor should be auctioned off.]

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality very logically argues that if the King of Death loses at the 64th floor, only the Constellation that bid for the 65th floor would turn into a bird.]

"Hmm..."

The mage closed his left eye.

"That makes sense."

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality reminds everyone that it always speaks the truth.]

"Let's assume that's true. But the most important part is still left."

The mage looked up at the sky.

"What's your bid? How much do you want to pay for the manager's rights?"

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality answers.]

[Everything it has.]

The mage nodded.

"There's no reason not to accept. The manager of the 64th floor will be changed from 'The Righteous Nine-Tailed Fox' to 'The Blazing Bird of Immortality.'"

And with that, it was over.

The mage turned to look at me.

"King of Death, proceed to the next stage."

"....."

The fox that had coiled around my neck chirped.

The fox fluttered its tail, asking for my opinion.

"Sure, I have no reason to refuse either."

I put the snake, Hisimet Cretsu, that had been resting on my palm, back into my pocket. And lightly ignored the snake's low hiss as I nodded.

"Frankly, the snake lacked a satisfying bite. Please, God, I ask of you."

"Chirp."

At my words, the fox didn't hesitate and immediately declared.

[Quest Cleared!]

[The 63rd floor has been cleared.]

[A Music Box Just for You will give you the same quest from the 64th to the 69th floor as the previous stages.]

[You will be instantly transferred to the 64th floor according to your request.]

The sandstorm wrapped around my sight.

-Zombie.

As the scent that crossed the desert wrapped around my nose and swirled throughout my body during that brief moment, the Guardian Spirit directly spoke to my consciousness.

-I climbed up to the 99th floor, but I didn't know about the pillars. Thinking back, it's not that I never encountered a pillar. I must have forgotten after meeting one.

'.....'

-These things called pillars or whatever probably have the [authority to erase memories related to themselves].

Indeed.

That must be the case.

-Perhaps even after this ordeal ends, that is, after you climb up to the 70th floor, all memories might vanish.

That's possible.

-But the likelihood is low.

The Guardian Spirit said.

-You met the Tower Master. No matter how great those pillars are, they shouldn't be able to erase the time imbued with meaning by the Tower Master.

His voice was calm yet filled with regret.

-You and I walked different paths.

The Sword Emperor said.

-Go that way.

Finally, the sandstorm completely obscured my vision.

-No one will look down on you as weak anymore!

And so, I opened my eyes.

[You have entered the 64th floor.]

Upon opening my eyes, it was all grey.

A land where only ash stretched endlessly to the horizon.

[The Blazing Bird of Immortality manifests!]

In the center of that world, a bird with its entire body aflame, a phoenix, was fluttering its vast wings.

"—I was resentful."

A strong smell clung to the mucous membranes of my nose.

It was the smell of burning.

The bird, whose entire body was aflame, could easily envelop the world with its two wings. The wings traversed between heaven and earth. Due to the burning wings, there was no distinction between up and down.

Looking up or down, everything was reduced to ashes.

"The Sword Emperor ascended the tower with a momentum that sprang up everywhere, and I ignored him. I looked down on him. Thus, I lost the opportunity to compete with the highest-ranked warrior the tower has ever seen. I was resentful, very resentful."

I gripped the hilt of my sword.

"I understand why you participated in the auction."

The phoenix's eyes looked down at me. It was unclear whether it even had eyes due to its entirely engulfed form. The phoenix was burning ceaselessly, leaving no part untouched by flames.

So perhaps the phoenix was glaring at me not with the eyes of the flesh but with the eyes of the soul.

"You are the successor of the Sword Emperor, I hear. Is that true?"

"You have selective hearing even amidst the flames, focusing only on what suits you."

"Good. This is a good opportunity. I cannot allow myself to be resentful twice."

The phoenix flapped its wings.

All the ash that had settled in the world was stirred up by the fluttering, swirling around.

Ash fluttered down, touching even my cheeks.

"I am the fire that burns fire. An omen of disaster, a bird of disaster. I wish to be the last fire left in the world."

"I am the King of Death."

I wiped the ash off my cheeks. My mouth felt gritty. Ash had swept in, filling my throat. I willingly chewed and swallowed the remnants left by the fire, showing respect for the duel.

"I am the sword that wishes to break other swords."

There was no point in further conversation.

The judge who had followed me onto the stage, the Staff of Time Immemorial, stood between us.

The mage raised the long staff and tapped the ground lightly.

Taking that subtle signal as a cue, I dashed across the ash-covered ground.

"Hisimet Cretsu, fulfill your promise."

The loser of the previous stage responded to my command.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its power.]

Squirm.

The snake crawled out of my pocket and wrapped around my wrist like a bracelet. The snake had sworn to assist me in conquering the tower and was now fulfilling that promise.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth exposes the enemy's information.]

In the flow of aura, time slowed down, and within the sluggish current, characters were etched before my eyes.

I could see the true name of the enemy.

The Blazing Bird of Immortality.

Taotie[1].

Then, the origins of the phoenix were embroidered in the void.

In one stroke.

The writing of Hisimet Cretsu was as serpentine as its body, yet as distinct as the light in its inverse eyes, making it easy to read.

+

Taotie is fire.

If water flows downward as the righteous path, fire goes against it, signifying a rebellious heart. Taotie's fire represents emotions.

Fire grows by consuming others and does not see the world around it. Therefore, Taotie governs only blind emotions, such as [hatred], [disgust], and above all, the [pleasure] that melts away in showing oneself off.

It screams as if it's about to die at any moment but never dies, instead, it kills only others.

If I was addicted to the pleasure of observing others, Taotie was addicted solely to the act of displaying itself.

A being that demands only its own attention but, in reality, cannot burn on its own unless there is something else to consume.

Its names are [The Fire that Burns Fire], [The Self that Consumes Itself], [Blindness].

Merely a blind fire.

+

Indeed.

I instantly pierced through the identity of the phoenix.

"You weren't just resentful because you couldn't fight the Sword Emperor."

The phoenix's wings fluttered.

In other words, the phoenix opened its eyes.

Although it had a form far removed from a human, I was confident in reading [the expression of fire] better than anyone.

The angles at which the flames enveloping the Constellation bent, the lines where the fire split, and the signs of embers flaring up allowed me to see its psychology.

"You were just resentful that you couldn't participate in the 'event' called the Sword Emperor. It wasn't about the duel between warriors at all."

"....."

"You just wanted to have the business card of having fought the Sword Emperor once. Just not having that business card was enough to make you resentful. Jealous of the past Constellations who had that card, envious of the Constellations who lost to me, and jealous of the genuine desire of the Constellations who could truly compete with me, you wanted to join in."

I whispered and swung my sword.

"You're probably pondering not how to defeat me but how to stage the most impressive scene to imprint yourself on the other Constellations."

".....!"

The phoenix couldn't refute my words. It wasn't that it didn't want to refute but that it couldn't.

Not because it had nothing to say, but because it had no time to say it.

While it took a moment for the Constellation to utter a word, I spilled a dozen. The Constellation had no chance to counter.

And if that was the case with the voice, what about the speed of the sword?

"You must have been the Constellation who gifted the flame skills to Yoo Soo-Ha."

The Sword Emperor once said that the Demon King of Autumn Rain, Ester, was a D-class Constellation.

Purely in terms of strength, this phoenix would be about the same. D+ to C- class.

"I have no time to entertain someone who has no intention of dueling with me."

In a flash.

I conveyed two meanings in one go.

"Disappear."

And I cut down the Constellation that could have become Yoo Soo-Ha's god.

Screams followed.

If it took years to cut down the Demon King of Autumn Rain, this time it took not even seconds.

"The 64th floor. The duel is over. The winner is the King of Death."

The Staff of Time Immemorial, which had witnessed the whole ordeal, declared.

In the midst of t he swirling ash, the voice gently settled.

"Then, let's immediately start the auction for the 65th floor."

[1]: The Taotie is an ancient Chinese mythological creature that was commonly emblazoned on bronze and other artifacts during the 1st millennium BC. Taotie are one of the "four evil creatures of the world".

Chapter 336: The Constellations' Auction (3)

---

I have a plethora of Constellations.

It's a sentence that could become a novel title with a bit of tweaking. Something like [My Infinite Constellations] or [I Have 999,999,999 Constellations].

That's to say, I am laden with the burden of numerous sins.

"Cheep."

Firstly, around my neck hangs the fox god.

[A Music Box Just for You] awes coiled around my neck.

While the god had grasped the world's time, it had seized mine in exchange. A testament, perhaps? The fox perpetually used its tail as a scarf, gently constricting my breath.

Its authority is 'Absolute Interference Immunity'.

No one can deny or distort my time.

That alone may seem simple, but through it, I've gained immunity to the unfathomable 'changes in causality.'

"Kee... Keekuk..."

And on my wrist, a serpent.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] hung like a bracelet.

The snake emerged from the egg it had crafted, compelled now to gaze beyond its world. It's time for it to not comprehend the world with its mind, but to awaken to it with its body.

Perhaps the silver lining was the vastness of knowledge it holds in its head, or rather, the most extensive of all.

Its authority is 'Total Revelation of Secrets'.

No adversary can conceal their secrets from me. Origin. Source. Roots. Strengths and weaknesses alike.

There might be foes lacking in information, but none remain devoid of secrets.

-Oh, what a field day for you, our Kim Zombie. Immunity to status ailments and now holding a real-time monster manual in your grasp.

Behind me stood the Guardian Spirit.

[The Sword Constellation] was present.

Let's just skip this gentleman.

[The Goddess of Protection feels it's time to sort out the hierarchy.]

And lastly, there was Shiny.

[The Goddess of Protection points out that everything in the world is ordered by seniority. The first Constellation to join the hero was herself, and she entered through the most proper route, thus, the fox and snake should rightfully address her as their senior.]

[The Goddess of Protection openly declares that although she is lenient and generous towards humans, she remains strict towards the Constellations.]

Shiny is... what exactly?

Really, what is it?

How did she manage not to show its quirks during her time with Kim Yul? Or did her quirks only bloom after meeting me?

-Zombie, they say a sword takes after its master. When it was the Constellation Killer's sword, it had the heft of the Constellation Killer, but after becoming yours, it's as light as a rabbit's fur. Whose fault do you think that is?

I couldn't possibly know.

A true mystery.

"...No bids?"

Off to the side, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] spoke.

"Was my voice too soft? Let me repeat. The 64th floor has been cleared. It's now the 65th floor's turn. If there's a Constellation wishing to bid for the stage, please do so promptly. We can't wait forever."

Indeed.

There's a reason I started boasting about my own Constellations. It's because no one else was participating in the auction.

I felt like an auction item too expensive to sell.

"Sigh..."

Even after three minutes, the auction didn't proceed. The mage sighed in disappointment.

"Everyone's too scared. Petrified. After the Phoenix got knocked down by the King of Death in one hit, they're utterly frozen in fear. This is why modern Constellations are said to lack resolve. In the past, they were a bit more..."

On and on.

Meanwhile, the hierarchy war between the fox god, the serpent, and Shiny heated up fiercely.

[A Music Box Just for You inquires politely about the well-being of the intelligence within the skulls of these B-grade Constellations.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth merely points out, as a matter of objective fact, that it may have been defeated by the King of Death, but not by you lowly beings.]

[The Goddess of Protection mentions B-grade and argues that being an actual B-grade makes one the strongest, citing Earth's comics as evidence.]

[A Music Box Just for You scoffs at using B-grade comic writers as a reference.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth threatens to reveal your ages.]

[The Goddess of Protection encourages this, as it would only prove that she is the youngest.]

"Cheep?"

"Keeek?"

-Brrr.

It's noisy.

They are so damn noisy!

Having three Constellations in one place just makes for an endless noise fest?!

[The Goddess of Protection offers a brilliant idea to you.]

What is it?

[The Goddess of Protection reminds you of the very obvious fact that she is also a Constellation.]

"Yeah... So?"

[Then, she suggests that she could also bid for the stage and win the auction.]

"Huh?"

I blinked.

"...Wait. Is that even possible?"

[The Goddess of Protection assures you that there is no violation of the rules as she unsheathes her blade.]

"Ah, don't unsheathe that. I got cut. See, I'm bleeding... Anyway."

My mind raced. Fiddling with the hilt of my sword, I carefully calculated every detail.

"But to win the auction, you need something of value, right? Like faith or something, as a wager? That's like currency for Constellations. Do you have money?"

[The Goddess of Protection smiles triumphantly.]

Shiny explained as follows:

1. Originally, she was a Constellation overseeing [Protection] and [Immortality], quite a high-ranking one.

2. During that time, the Constellation Killer established the Aegim Empire. She became the de facto Guardian Deity of the Aegim Empire, securing a lifetime pension, so to speak.

3. But just then, Kim Yul sealed her away.

4. Her believers continued to send faith, but since she was sealed, she had no opportunity to use it. It was a situation where deposits were made, but no withdrawals could happen, so the faith just accumulated like in a savings account.

5. After eons, the hero unsealed her.

6. When she finally checked her neglected account, oh my?

Shiny shimmered brightly.

[The Goddess of Protection is confident there's no Constellation with a cash reserve to match hers.]

In short, Shiny had become a deposit-rich aristocrat.

"Indeed... Being sealed was a blessing in disguise, in a sense."

[The Goddess of Protection declares she will demonstrate her status.]

That seemed more like reckless spending than demonstrating status, but I couldn't quite point that out.

Either way, Shiny did what she could and wanted to.

[The Goddess of Protection places a bid.]

The other Constellations, previously urged by [The Staff of Time Immemorial] to participate in the auction, turned their attention this way. Even the usually nonchalant mage had a flicker of shock in his eyes.

If I were to translate that subtle expression into human language, it would probably be 'Really? Are you seriously going to stoop that low?'

"King of Death, are you really going to stoop that low?"

My translation skills haven't waned, it seems.

"Yeah, but it's not me doing it. It's my sword."

"Thieves also say it was their hand that did it."

"No, it's different. I might be the nominal owner, but that doesn't mean it has no free will. It wants to do it, so how can I stop it?"

"But still, you know, there's something called moral integrity..."

[A Music Box Just for You breaks its savings account.]

The fox growled from around my neck.

[A Music Box Just for You places a bid!]

The mage fell silent.

I protested.

"It's not me. It's my scarf."

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth places a bid.]

"My bracelet just..."

"Oh, I really..."

The mage rubbed his forehead.

"These damn balsamic vinaigrette creatures. Fine. When has life ever gone the way I planned? If there's no violation of the rules, do as you please."

[The Goddess of Protection doesn't care who else bids; she only wants to know who bids the highest.]

"Ugh."

The mage sighed.

"...I'll change the manager of the 65th floor to the 'Goddess of Protection.'"

[A Music Box Just for You protests that this cannot be!]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth is astonished at how much was spent.]

Despite my lack of involvement, the sheath of the holy sword rattled slightly.

[The Goddess of Protection sends a pitying look at the loose purse strings of her juniors.]

And as expected, chaos ensued.

[Quest Cleared.]

[The 64th floor has been cleared.]

[The manager of the 65th floor assigns you a quest.]

+

[The Hero's Swordsmanship]

Difficulty: B

Objective: The ruler of the 65th floor, [The Goddess of Protection] Hwiya, demands that you strike a pose of [The Hero's Swordsmanship].

*However, if the [Goddess of Protection] finds the pose unsatisfactory, you must strike the pose again.

+

Hmm.

I held my sword at an angle, much like a transforming robot drawing its weapon for a climax scene.

Fittingly, the moment I angled the sword, a brilliant flash...! erupted from the blade.

[Quest Cleared.]

[The 65th floor has been cleared.]

"Incredible."

I shivered.

"This is just too sneaky..."

"It's you who's being sneaky."

The disgrace didn't end there.

[The Goddess of Protection demands that her juniors address her as 'senior.']

[A Music Box Just for You immediately jumps into the auction for the 66th floor stage!]

Refusing to acknowledge this, the fox cried out, and the serpent hissed in protest.

[A Music Box Just for You places a bid.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth places a bid.]

[The Goddess of Protection sighs in pity.]

[The Goddess of Protection places a bid.]

What is it...

What exactly are they doing this for...

-Mascot battles are meant to heat up.

The Guardian Spirit chuckled. He was the spitting image of a neighborhood guy enjoying a spectacle.

-Let them be. They're sorting out their hierarchy among themselves. This is a form of loyalty competition.

"I didn't ask for this kind of loyalty, though..."

-They're saying they'll clear stages for you without you having to lift a finger, and you're questioning their loyalty? Just gratefully suck up the honey.

It was a rather ambiguous honey.

As the chaos intensified,

[A Music Box Just for You pours in its fortune!]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth reveals its hidden savings account.]

[The Goddess of Protection doubles her bid.]

The mage rubbed his forehead.

"...I'll change the manager of the 66th floor to the 'Goddess of Protection.'"

A fox and a snake cried out as if the sky was tearing apart for a brief moment.

+

[The Dance of the Sword]

Difficulty: B

Objective: The ruler of the 66th floor, [The Goddess of Protection] Hwiya, demands that you perform a sword dance.

*However, if the [Goddess of Protection] finds the dance unsatisfactory, you must dance again.

+

The 66th floor was a serene plain. It was night, with a solitary moon hanging in the sky.

Under the unusual moonlight, I began to dance with Shiny in hand. I must have looked quite mad...

[Quest Cleared.]

[The 66th floor has been cleared!]

It was remarkable.

"Congratulations, King of Death. You're the first hunter to smash through stages in this manner since the Tower was erected."

"I wish I'd be the last as well."

"Let's see how the next floor's auction goes."

The mage grimaced.

"Alright. Let's start the auction for the 67th floor."

[A Music Box Just for You places a bid!]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth places a bid!]

[The Goddess of Protection places a bid!]

And then, at that moment,

[The Reddest Sommelier places a bid...]

Finally, a new participant appeared. The mage's eyes sparkled, and he immediately raised his staff high.

"Awarded! The manager of the 67th floor will be changed to 'The Reddest Sommelier'!"

"Cheep?!"

"Keeek! Keeek!"

"No complaints. I'm both the host and the judge. Bids are confidential, so I can't disclose them. That's the rule I just made."

The mage shouted.

"Hey, King of Death! Hurry up! Before he changes his mind!"

And so I did.

[You have entered the 67th floor.]

[The Reddest Sommelier manifests.]

Ever heard of crocodile tears?

The notion that crocodiles shed tears while munching on their prey, thus becoming a synonym for insincere sorrow. What's the point of crying after you kill, they say.

"Sniff... Sniffle..."

But the crocodile tears falling before me seemed genuinely heartfelt.

"Sniff... Sob... Sniffle..."

It was a crocodile dressed in a cape.

The crocodile, seemingly built to walk on two legs rather than four, pounded the ground with its hands. Cloaked in not just a shoulder cape but also a fine suit, it would have passed for a respectable gentleman if not for its crocodile head.

"Why, oh why, has this befallen me...!"

The Crocodile Gentleman was sobbing uncontrollably.

"Despicable, King of Death! How low can you stoop! To engage in such underhanded tactics! You sho uld've quietly waited for other Constellations to join the auction, maybe for 100 or 200 years! Why! Why couldn't you wait for that bird to arrive before hoarding the stages!"

"You were planning such a vile delay tactic, weren't you..."

"Lowly creature! Never have I seen one as vile and despicable as you!"

It wasn't me, but he kept going on about it.

Chapter 337: Blood and Wine (1)

---

"So, what will you do?"

I flicked my holy sword. The Crocodile Gentleman, already sobbing miserably, swallowed a scream upon seeing the tip of my blade.

"What do you mean, what will I do? What are you talking about?"

"Regardless of the circumstances, you've bid for it and won. Now, we must determine who deserves to become the Constellation of humans, whether it turns out to be a boon or a curse. That's why you've come before me, isn't it? Because you don't want to lose that faith."

"....."

"A duel? One-on-one? A fair fight?"

The Crocodile Gentleman stared at my blade. Gulp. The massive throat of the Crocodile, covered in scaly leather, trembled.

"Deal?"

"Wait, hold on a moment! I didn't come here to fight you one-on-one. Despite my appearance, I am a Gentleman."

"Then why are you here?"

"Even if it comes to surrender, my good sir, we must at least have a conversation, mustn't we? We should know who we're dealing with before deciding whether to cook or boil, right?"

I raised an eyebrow.

"Hmm."

"You must not know since you've stormed through from the 50th floor to here in no time, huh? Among the Constellations residing in the upper floors, there are connections, networks. It's somewhat similar to the world of humans. See, even 'The Ruin-Harvesting Cow' collaborated with 'The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth' to attack you!"

The Crocodile Gentleman pulled out a handkerchief from his suit pocket and kept wiping his forehead. Although it was impossible for a Crocodile to sweat.

"In short, you're saying you're afraid to fight me?"

"That's not it... Yes, damn it. I am scared! Ah! So frightening! Happy now? Where did such a creature come from all of a sudden!"

Why are you angry with me?

"Let's try to settle this through conversation, shall we? Through words. Do you know how many divine powers you've consumed by now? Keep that up and you might get indigestion, young man. Mutia's return, Hisimet Cretsu's information, and whatnot, countless Constellations..."

"Eating one more of you won't make my already upset stomach any worse."

"Of course, that's a damn fact..."

The Crocodile shed tears.

He was an honest Gentleman.

"However, looking at you, young man, you seem quite transparent. Or at least trying to be. You are. Then, shouldn't we first try to resolve this through dialogue, as is the proper way?"

Just as I adopted a contemplative pose:

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth cautiously speaks to you.]

I looked down at my wrist.

There, coiled like a wristwatch, was a tiny snake.

"Hisss."

Raising its tiny head, the snake seemed anxious, as if worried I might strike it. It was quite cute, despite being the notorious villain who turned countless humans into mannequins for display.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth says, it might be unnecessary meddling but.]

What? What is it?

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth secretly informs you that everything the Crocodile Gentleman has said so far, without exception, has been a lie.]

"....."

I slowly shifted my gaze.

In front of me, the Crocodile was still dabbing at his non-sweaty leather with a handkerchief.

Both my eyes and the snake's pupils were fixed on him.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth makes a judgment.]

"Of course, we don't expect to understand each other right from the start through dialogue. Dialogue, communication, isn't just about exchanging words. It's a kind of grand achievement, isn't it?"

[False.]

"Perhaps the essence of dialogue is sharing time with each other. Time. Giving time to each other. A 30-minute conversation won't mean much to someone who has lived 30 years without the other. But what about after a year?"

[False.]

"After a year since the first conversation, if we talk again, and then 10 years later, 20 years later, the two people's time would have overlapped for 20 years. That's a new life, comparable to the past 30 years!"

[False.]

"I don't think I can earn your trust right from the start. But... I hope to be a Constellation worth your time, worth getting to know slowly. How about it, King of Death."

The Crocodile blinked.

"Would you grant me the opportunity to have a dialogue with you?"

And the snake also blinked.

[False.]

I slowly smiled.

'Interesting.'

I gently stroked the head of the still trembling snake with my finger. The snake cried out softly, as if it might sink into the ground at any moment.

'Everything up to his last words was a lie. Even the question [Would you grant me the opportunity to have a dialogue with you?] contains a lie... There's no need to think about it. The very word [dialogue] is a lie, isn't it?'

[That's correct.]

'He's not asking for a chance to talk to me but for a chance to finish me off. That's his true intention.'

[It seems so.]

So, these are the infamous Crocodile tears.

I smiled at the Crocodile Gentleman.

"Alright."

The Crocodile Gentleman's eyes lit up.

"Let's prepare it. A place for dialogue."

It was soon revealed that the 'dialogue' the Crocodile Gentleman spoke of wasn't a one-on-one conversation.

It was a meeting also attended by Constellations whose divine powers were threatened by me, Constellations whose territories overlapped with the domain I would govern. In other words, Constellations whose feet were already on fire.

[The Reddest Sommelier has won the bidding for the 67th floor's management rights.]

[The Eternal Dance of the Twins has won the bidding for the 68th floor's management rights.]

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints has won the bidding for the 69th floor's management rights.]

Several Constellations sat around a long table, waiting for me.

Not just a long table, but an excessively long one.

The table stretched endlessly, converging towards a vanishing point on both sides. The space arranged for this meeting of dialogue extended lengthwise along the table. Although we could sit facing each other, that was all; to cross to the other side, one would have to use their body, not just words.

"Come, take a seat! King of Death, welcome!"

The Crocodile Gentleman greeted me warmly.

"All of us here wish to have a conversation with you. It may seem this way, but everyone is shy, and it's only because I led this gathering that they finally showed up. Hehe. It's natural for people, big or small, to be shy."

[False.]

I already knew.

Without losing my smile, I surveyed the faces introduced by the Crocodile Gentleman.

"First, it's an honor to introduce you to the 'Eternal Dance of the Twins.' It's a very rare case of twin Constellations among the stars."

The twins seated at the far end of the table nodded simultaneously, in perfectly the same moment and angle.

"Nice to meet you." "This is the first time."

Even their timing of speaking overlapped.

One had a higher pitch, and the other lower, but they harmoniously created a chord. It was just ordinary speech, yet a harmony emerged. The twins, expressionless, were interlocking their fingers tightly.

"Interesting, isn't it?"

The Crocodile Gentleman chuckled.

"Both are not Constellations on their own, but together they form a complete Constellation. Maybe they're actually one person but appear to be two. Who knows? Next is....."

"I am the [Noble of Dry Fingerprints], child."

A gorgeously dressed Constellation spoke bluntly.

The Constellation looked at me with eyes full of hatred.

The eyebrows were furrowed, the forehead wrinkled, and the corners of the mouth twisted grotesquely.

"I expect nothing from you."

Perhaps this hatred wasn't specifically directed at 'me.'

That expression was aimed at an unspecified many. The anger might have solidified at some point, becoming a part of his skin.

It was less about hating someone and more about hating something, and that something would inevitably be his own life.

"Only one thing."

The [Noble] glared at me.

"I wish you could understand my situation."

"Alright! Alright! Let's save those stories for later!"

The Crocodile clapped his hands hurriedly, his short arms making the applause seem comical.

"First, to commemorate the successful convening of this meeting! Let's raise a toast!"

As he clapped, bang! The doors of the meeting room flew open. From there, butlers dressed in tailcoats entered in a line.

The butlers were holding bottles that appeared to be wine.

"Very, very precious wine."

The Crocodile licked his lips.

"True to the epithet 'The Reddest Sommelier,' I am quite picky about alcohol. Brewing human emotions into alcohol. This is my blessed divine power."

The butlers seemed perfect in every way, except for one glaring absence.

Their chests were empty.

It reminded me of a famous mouse cartoon featuring Swiss cheese. The butlers had holes right through the middle of their chests.

"The more desperate the heart, the more life seeps into the emotion, the fresher the aroma and the richer the taste when brewed into alcohol."

There was no blood dripping or intestines visible from the butlers' hollowed-out spots. It was as if they were cleanly cut out like in cartoons. One of the butlers approached me and tilted the bottle.

"I always wander in search of humans' concentrated emotions, their true hearts. So, you may call me the Constellation of sincerity. What do you think, King of Death?"

Drip, drip.

Red liquid filled my cup.

"Aren't we similar in some ways?"

"....."

"Cheers!"

The Crocodile Gentleman opened his jaws wide. With his short arms, he couldn't hold the cup and drink on his own. He just opened his mouth, and a butler poured the wine directly into it.

Gulp.

The thick Crocodile skin quivered as he swallowed. Gulp. Red wine leaked through his teeth, staining the Gentleman's neck and white shirt.

"Delicious!"

That one word must have been the truth among all the lies.

"Disgusting smell."

The [Noble], with a twisted expression, elegantly tilted his glass.

"....." "....."

The [Twins] didn't use a butler to drink nor did they lift their cups. They sipped the wine through each other's lips, fingers still interlocked.

Not a single drop of the red liquid spilled. The timing of their swallowing and the movements of their throats were identical.

Perhaps even the rhythm of their breathing was the same? The [Twins] weren't drinking wine; they were simply ensuring they didn't lose each other.

"....." "....."

Not just now, but in everything they do. To them, all events that pass by are merely a white backdrop, and the only fact they always prove, the only truth they seek to confirm, is that they haven't lost each other.

So...

"Indeed."

I put down the glass.

The level of the red liquid in the cup hadn't changed at all.

Leisurely, I looked over at the Constellations seated across the table.

"You are indeed similar to me."

The Crocodile Gentleman dressed in a suit.

[The Reddest Sommelier].

He, who takes the hearts of others and revels in emotions.

"It's clear that the more established I become as a Constellation, the more troubled you become."

The noble dressed in splendid attire.

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints].

He, who feeds on hatred and builds his frame with anger.

"That's why I'm glad."

The two, fingers interlocked.

[The Eternal Dance of the Twins].

They, who need nothing but the acknowledgment of the other.

"I'm glad that it's me, not someone else, who will bring about your downfall."

"....."

The Constellations stopped moving.

The [Noble] stared at me with his cup still at his lips. The [Twins], still with their lips pressed together, rolled their eyes simultaneously to look at me.

"Hmm."

The Crocodile Gentleman slowly closed his mouth and wiped away the wine that had flowed between his teeth with a handkerchief. It wasn't sweat but blood from others that he needed the handkerchief for— to wipe away the warmth of someone else's life.

"Why, I wonder?"

The Crocodile looked at me with eyes filled with cracks.

"If you intended to be hostile from the start, there was no need for conversation. There was no n eed to accept my invitation and come here, only to face three Constellations at once and invite trouble."

"Regrettably."

I gripped the hilt of my sword.

"That statement will soon become a lie as well."

The Constellations leaped at me all at once, aiming to confront me.

Chapter 338: Blood and Wine (2)

---

The Crocodile Gentleman bared his long snout just before charging at me.

"O Tower! Fulfill the promise!"

Behind the crocodile, dozens of butlers lined up. Clang! The wine bottles they were holding fell down. Clang. Shattered glass scattered everywhere. Stained with red wine, the fragments bloomed like petals of flowers with a shade of red that reflected the mountains.

[The Reddest Sommelier requests a covenant with the tower.]

[Sanctuary designated.]

[Approved.]

It was the manifestation of the Crocodile Gentleman's power.

[From this moment, this place belongs to the Reddest Sommelier.]

[He who sucks blood and spits it out, worship him.]

It was a thick fog.

Glass fragments twinkled and scattered in all directions. Red. Where they passed, crimson mists followed. A red haze blossomed into the world.

"I am strong to the weak,"

The Crocodile Gentleman chuckled gruesomely. That's what the laughter of a crocodile sounded like.

"And stronger to the strong!"

And then, we collided. Bang! The crocodile's staff and my holy sword clashed. Of course, I intended to slice through him in one stroke with my aura. However, the crocodile, engulfed in red mist, seemed unharmed.

"Hmm."

I frowned.

"You didn't seem like a martial artist."

"To be honest, you don't quite look like a martial artist either, young man! You'd fit more as a butler than a swordsman! What do you say? I'm recruiting butlers, fancy a change of employment?"

"I'm already committed to becoming a Consort for the Ivansia Ducal Family."

"Pity! I'll build you a new house in the grave!"

I increased my speed a bit more. I unleashed a tri-pronged sword attack. Bang! Surprisingly, the Crocodile Gentleman kept up with my speed. With one hand, he adjusted his tie, and with the other, he swung his staff, blocking my sword.

'What's this?'

Honestly, it was surprising.

'Was he capable of attacking me? His skill level seems low.'

Just when I wondered if I had misjudged my opponent's strength, the bracelet on my wrist, shaped like a serpent, vibrated.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its power.]

[Exposure.]

[Your opponent's power has been revealed to you.]

Hisimet Cretsu. The Constellation that governs information, now my subordinate, Jormungand, had exposed the enemy's true nature.

Letters appeared before my eyes, wriggling like a snake.

+

[Evil Parasitizes Good]

Owner: The Reddest Sommelier

Effect: The power of a vampire disguised as a crocodile. A truly simple yet annoying power that turns the strength used against him into his own.

It collects the lives, emotions, and souls of others. If you feel a genuine connection or believe you are equals while opposing him, it's merely an illusion. He will savor the look of delusion in your eyes. His true nature is that of a parasite.

The Reddest Sommelier is a parasite among parasites, and no one can withstand his power alone.

+

I let out a laugh.

"So, it wasn't martial prowess."

"Hm? Ah, hmm! Oh dear. Hisimet Cretsu, is it!"

The Crocodile Gentleman clicked his tongue as if it were troublesome.

"So, you were not only captured but have also offered information to this young man! O greatest serpent! Aren't you ashamed! I have always respected you, yet instead of seeking revenge against the one who defeated you, you have submitted! Disappointing!"

[That's a lie.]

The serpent bracelet hissed sharply.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth points out that 'I have always respected you' is particularly false and gnashes its teeth.]

There's a reason why it's hard for Constellations to cooperate.

"Twins! What are you doing! It's your turn!"

But here, that difficult cooperation was happening.

"Don't," "Order us around."

From behind, the twins kissed. The angle of the lips and the direction of the heads were identical, causing their small noses to press against each other slightly. But without caring a bit, the twins slowly separated their lips, looking into each other's increasingly distant eyes.

"O Tower." "It's a promise."

For the first time, the twins uncrossed their fingers.

[The Eternal Dance of the Twins requests a covenant with the tower.]

Sararak.

The twins' hair, which had been tinged with gray, changed.

One turned stark white, and the other pitch black. The White one and the Black one were clearly distinguished.

Such stark black and white.

As if the world itself had split in two between them.

[Sanctuary designated.]

[Approved.]

"Excellent!"

Someone moved upon seeing this. It was the Crocodile Gentleman. The crocodile leaped backward in a flash. Tat! I launched a chasing strike, but it was blocked by the crocodile's swirling staff.

"Futile, King of Death! Your realm becomes my realm!"

The Crocodile chuckled deeply.

"As the master here, I generously accept the twins' intervention!"

The crocodile retreated, and one of the twins dove into the space he left. It was a tag-out. The white twin, The White one, swung a fist at me with an expressionless face.

[From this moment, this place belongs to the Eternal Dance of the Twins.]

[Joint ownership has been recognized.]

I thrust my sword forward.

[They who are harmed and harm in return, worship them.]

Cleanly.

The tip of my sword pierced through The White one's shoulder.

"Ah! Aaaah, aaaaaah!"

The White one clutched his shoulder and screamed. Unlike the Crocodile Gentleman, who easily blocked my attack, The White one showed no such skill. One half of the Constellation writhed in agony, shedding tears.

As I wondered why he had charged so recklessly, the moment I harbored doubt,

"It's okay."

Far beyond the table, standing still, The Black one smiled gently. Her pitch-black hair, which seemed to swallow even gazes, whispered.

"You're not hurt."

".....!"

The White one's eyes filled with bloodlust.

"I'm not hurt!"

It was madness more intense than pain.

The White one swung his fist. It was as if he had forgotten that his shoulder was pierced. I naturally extended my sword to deflect the punch and, at the same time, cut off the enemy's arm.

"Ah, hee?! Uh, ugh, aaaaaah!!"

And right after I severed the arm, I realized.

"It's okay."

The wound I had opened in his shoulder had already healed completely.

"You haven't been damaged."

I unleashed my sword strikes. Left, right, overhead, with a speed that the opponent couldn't possibly follow, I launched a relentless offensive. The enemy's limbs were torn apart. Each time, The White one screamed. And each time, from a distance, The Black one softly whispered.

"You haven't been hurt, right?"

"Ugh! Yes.....!"

Where an arm fell, another grew. Crumbled knees stood up again. I didn't hesitate and aimed for the opponent's neck, but it was in vain. That neck, too, shed its skin and grew anew.

The Black one chuckled.

"You're noble. No one can harm you."

"Except for you!"

"Ah, right. Except for me."

The black screams and white whispers mingled, muddying the air.

"We are complete."

I narrowed my brows.

'Tricky.'

It was meaningless to inflict fatal wounds.

At this very moment, The White one, battered and torn, swung his fist. I turned him into even more of a rag, but the enemy recovered in no time.

"You're not hurting! You're nothing! There's nothing to be concerned about!"

The Black one charged incessantly with eyes filled with madness.

What kind of strategy would work? As I pondered, new letters were carved before my eyes by the serpent.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its power.]

[Exposure.]

[Your opponent's power has been revealed to you.]

And the power of the twins was laid bare.

+

[The Twin's Complete Pact]

Owners: The Eternal Dance of the Twins

Effect: A power that completes the world. If I interpret the world you see and you interpret the world I see, the world is complete in itself.

A spell that closes off the world. If I aim to collect 'everything' and expand my size to match the breadth of the world, the twins adjust the world's breadth to their size by not collecting 'anything'.

Attacking one of the twins is futile if the other half remains unharmed. This applies to both physical and mental attacks.

+

"....."

So, if the vampire parasitizes, the twins coexist.

Is the former a [Dealer] and the latter a [Tanker]?

"I have no choice."

Then, The White one and The Black one, if I strike both twins at the same time, that should do it.

I instantly extended the shadow of my holy sword. The four swords that unfolded were the power held by the [Goddess of Protection], the sister swords. Whisk! While dealing with The White one, I leisurely sent the remaining swords with my swordsmanship towards The Black one.

"Ah!"

The White one's eyes widened. Even if the wounds were nullified, The White one's martial arts themselves weren't impressive. The White one couldn't stop my shadow swords cutting through the air.

"No!!"

"....."

Seeing the four swords rushing towards her, The Black one did not move an inch. She just watched with a gentle smile. There was a reason for that.

"O Tower."

The last remaining party member of the enemy, [The Noble of Dry Fingerprints], closed his fan.

"Fulfill the promise."

His voice, laden with aura, echoed momentarily.

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints requests a covenant with the tower.]

[Sanctuary designated.]

[Approved.]

[From this moment, this place belongs to the Noble of Dry Fingerprints.]

The Crocodile Gentleman shouted in a telepathic voice in desperation.

"I have nothing to do with this!"

[Joint ownership has been recognized.]

A curtain spread on the table blocked my attack for a moment. Chiang! One of the four swords was deflected. Three remained. The sister swords flew through the gap created by their deflected comrade.

It was at that moment that the Noble's power was activated.

[He who is resented and despised, worship him.]

My swords sliced through The Black one's body.

Clearly, they cut through.

"Hic?! Th— ugh, aaaaaah!!"

But the one who screamed wasn't The Black one.

"Ahah, ugh... aaaaaah....."

It was The White one.

Right before me, The White one, who had been swinging his fist, suddenly knelt down and wrapped his arms around himself. Thud. Blood flowed from parts I hadn't cut.

I realized that all those wounds were exactly where The Black one should have been injured.

"Indeed."

I took a step back.

"There's no need to request an exposure from Hisimet Cretsu."

And I raised my hand to retrieve the sister swords.

"Is it damage transfer?"

"That's right."

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints] spread his fan.

"I can transfer the wounds one has received to another. If it's justified, that is."

"It's interesting. It's never justifiable to shift wounds onto others."

"I see it differently."

The Noble glared at The White one.

"Uh, black....."

The White one was still groaning, holding his wounds. But the Noble's eyes, looking at The White one, were filled with the same hatred as when he looked at me.

"It's your fault. It's all because of you."

"Ah...?"

"If you had stopped the King of Death, your other half wouldn't have been slashed. There would have been no danger to your other half. It's because you're powerless, because you're weak. Wretched. Despicable. Born lacking. Thus, everything is your fault. If blood must flow here, it must only be yours."

"....."

The sharp words ruthlessly stabbed The White one.

The White one, with a stunned face, looked up at his other half.

"It's okay."

The Black one was gently smiling.

"You're not to blame."

"Ah....."

"Everything is the fault of this King of Death who attacks us. You just wanted to protect me. You wanted to protect us. You're not at fault at all."

A few words healed the wounds.

New flesh sprouted, swallowing the blood.

The White one, as if never fallen, stood up with quiet hostility in his eyes.

"....."

I looked around.

The Reddest Sommelier.

The Eternal Dance of the Twins.

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints.

A complete dealer, a complete tanker, and a perfect supporter.

"Oh dear, didn't I say so, young man?"

The Crocodile Gentleman spun his staff like a stage clown.

"Do you understand what it means to face three Constellations at once? Remember? Although you realize now, it's too late. Just fall from the night sky and loathe your foolish past."

"Indeed."

I nodded.

"Facing Constellations determined to attack together is not easy. I was slightly impressed."

"That's good! Falling in despair is better than losing in admiration, at least it provides some self-satisfaction."

"However, it was wrong to say there are three Constellations."

"Hmm?"

The Crocodile Gentleman blinked.

"What do you mean?"

"You don't know me well, Sommelier. My specialty isn't one-on-one duels."

I gripped the holy sword.

"Since the days of slaying Demon Kings, I've been good at winning gr oup fights."

Light flowed from the blade.

[The Goddess of Protection requests a covenant with the tower.]

The Crocodile Gentleman had his mouth agape in shock, but that brief gasp did nothing to halt me—or rather, 'us'.

[Sanctuary designated.]

[Approved.]

The Tower's voice boomed.

[From this moment, this place belongs to the Goddess of Protection.]

Chapter 339: Blood and Wine (3)

---

The Goddess of Protection is composed of five fragments.

Those pieces now emitted light around me.

[She is the worshiped one,]

The Idol Sword.

The Goddess is always revered by the people. She bears it. She is the one who is expected. The one who must meet those expectations. The one who must proudly hold her head high until the end of the world.

For she is a monarch.

[She is the compassionate one,]

The Pity Sword.

The Goddess always understands the wounds of the people. She takes them in. Even if her flesh is not wounded, her heart is pockmarked with injuries of others, storing nameless screams in her heart.

For she is a monarch.

[She is the tester,]

The Prayer Sword.

The Goddess always makes judgments. She selects. She tests whether those who petition her hold sincerity. Whether they whisper falsehoods to deceive. To ensure that genuine pleas are never buried under false accusations.

For she is a monarch.

[She is the sacrificer,]

The Sacrifice Sword.

The Goddess always suffers. She volunteers. As her time is devoured, others' time flourishes, and as her pain deepens, others' lives brighten. Meaningless suffering is not permitted for her.

For she is a monarch.

[She is the savior,]

The Salvation Sword.

The Goddess always saves others. She forsakes herself. She places parts of herself she wished to protect, her tastes, pleasures, preferences, aesthetics, on the cold scales. On the other side of that scale are others. Other people. To elevate others, she continuously lowers herself. She must lower herself.

Thus.

[Worship her.]

She is a monarch.

[The Goddess of Protection manifests.]

My sword shone brightly.

Someone screamed.

It was the Crocodile Gentleman.

"Five? More than the four promised sayings?"

The gentleman widened his eyes in disbelief, staring at me as if he couldn't believe it.

"It can't be! Impossible! The Goddess of Protection... Hwiya must have been the constellation first torn apart by the Constellation Killer! It must have been divided into five pieces!"

A cry of astonishment leaked between the crocodile's large teeth.

"Even if you somehow collected and assembled the fragments, the final piece would still remain! The last fragment was still with the Constellation Killer! How on earth did you manage to obtain the sword of the Constellation Killer...?!"

Indeed.

Kim Yul had knelt before me long ago, yet the Crocodile Gentleman was completely unaware of this fact. Perhaps it was only natural. There would only be a few constellations that could know this, like the [Ruin-Harvesting Cow] that had seen through my past or the [Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth] that had read my information.

"It's a trick... Yes! It's a trick! King of Death! You were not only the King of Death but also the King of Necromancy! But such tricks won't fool us—"

"I have never played nor allowed games with my existence."

A voice interrupted the Crocodile Gentleman's words.

It wasn't mine.

"It's been a while."

Light leaking from the holy sword twisted and formed a shape. Radiance filled the area. Somehow, the light wasn't blinding, instead, one could keep watching it indefinitely.

Crackle! Crunch. The light intensified. Not only the holy sword I held but also the Pity, Prayer, Sacrifice, and Salvation, the four shadow swords, shattered into light and were sucked in.

"It has been a long time since I have manifested fully in one body."

And then, giant wings spread out.

"King of Death."

There were five pairs of wings.

"You are my hero."

A thunderous noise resounded.

A table was blown away as one pair of wings unfolded. Crash! When the second wing unfolded, the walls of the assembly hall shattered. The ceiling split as the third wing spread. The fourth wing stirred a gale, and the fifth, the last wing, covered the skies of this world.

[The Goddess of Protection manifests her authority.]

The angel obscured the sun, and five shadows were cast upon the earth.

"I will fight alongside you."

Those shadows were the authority of the Goddess.

The territory cast by the 'Goddess of Protection.'

A world of shadows, where the sun was ousted, the sky was fended off, and only the white wings reigned as the sole light, had descended here.

"—I refuse!"

The Crocodile Gentleman screamed as if vomiting blood.

"Hwiya! The one who became light in the shadows! The 67th floor doesn't belong to you! It's mine! Ours! [The Eternal Dance of the Twins] and [The Noble of Dry Fingerprints], and me, [The Reddest Sommelier], are the true masters of this place! Your sanctuary will lose its light here!"

The crocodile's outcry wasn't just a desperate act.

[The manager has rejected joint ownership.]

[The Goddess of Protection does not own this place.]

The sky turned blood red.

The sun that illuminated the 66th world twisted away from its familiar form. The sphere that emitted white light suddenly turned black. Line by line, as if a child had colored it with a crayon, it was painted black.

[The Reddest Sommelier manifests his authority.]

A black hole.

Where the sun once was, now only an abyss remained.

"Overflow!"

From the hole, vast like a giant well, gushed a liquid thicker than water and stickier than alcohol. Gurgle! It was blood. Red blood flowed endlessly from the well in the sky.

"Look at it! Every single drop forming this torrent of blood was collected by me! They are my lovely followers!"

The Crocodile Gentleman raised his arms. Drip! Blood poured from the sky.

Blood pooled in the small palm of the crocodile, overflowing through the thick webbing.

"This is my temple! My sanctuary! No one can deny me,"

"Is that so."

The Goddess of Protection folded and then spread her wings horizontally.

Light burst forth.

The white wings, like the cross-guard of a sword, cast shadows as if the body extended straight was a blade.

The flickering sword, the Goddess of Protection Hwiya, spoke.

"Then, I shall cut."

[The Goddess of Protection manifests her authority.]

[The Goddess of Protection is the manager of the 65th and 66th floors.]

Hwiya reached out her hand.

Her fingers, curled like hooks, pointed towards the Crocodile Gentleman.

[The Goddess of Protection invades the 67th floor!]

And then, five rays of light burst from the tips of each fingernail, striking the Crocodile Gentleman.

[This world is not subject to beginner protection.]

[The battle for floor control commences.]

[Currently, a battle for control is underway between The World of the Lone Child - The World of the Silver-Lily - The World of the Moonlit Night and The World of the Banquet - The World of Ying and Yang - The World of Demonic Realm.]

"Arghhhhh!"

The crocodile screamed.

The five rays of light carved into his body, like fissures in the earth spewing lava, were [squeezing] out the crimson wine from the crocodile's body.

"The souls are dense."

The Goddess of Protection remarked.

"Only beings capable of ruthlessly sucking the essence from the heart can squeeze out such blood. Even a beast that eats flesh would feel compassion for its hairless young, and even a scaled beast would stop hunting when satiated, yet."

[The Reddest Sommelier's existence becomes faint.]

"You were no more than an insect."

[The Reddest Sommelier's existence becomes faint.]

"Damn it, damn it! Being betrayed and split by humans you chose yourself! A trash that couldn't even handle an unheard-of lower constellation!"

"Yes. I was such a being."

Hwiya calmly accepted and let go of the crocodile's scream.

As if a master swordsman deflecting an opponent's strike.

"But before that, I was a founding monarch who established an empire."

The deflected blade, like a butterfly, whirled around, spun, and struck the crocodile's shoulder three times.

"Aaagh!"

[The Reddest Sommelier's existance becomes faint.]

[The Reddest Sommelier's existance becomes faint.]

"Stop!!"

Startled by the sudden turn of events, the allies of 'The Reddest Sommelier' sprang into action.

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints shouted at the Twins.

"It's your fault! Why are you frozen? If you had fulfilled your role properly, 'The Reddest Sommelier' wouldn't have been injured like—"

"Is that really so?"

Of course.

The Goddess of Protection also had allies.

Swoosh!

"There's a simple weakness to [skills that activate upon targeting someone]."

The constellations widened their eyes.

In the blink of an eye, my fist was racing through the air.

"Go ahead, try scooping out rainwater with both hands."

My fist plunged directly into the crocodile's stomach. Boom!

The vibration pierced through the crocodile's body and spread like a wave in the surrounding air.

Droplets of blood were mixed into the formless wave.

"Kuh, hah...!"

"Your stomach is sturdy. It's not punctured yet."

I swung my fist again.

"It shouldn't be like this. It's embarrassing."

Thump!

The same blood that was scattered around stained my knuckles.

"As the owner of Hwiya, I should at least be able to match Hwiya."

Once more, I delivered a punch.

"Keugh, eugh...!"

A hole was punctured in the crocodile's stomach.

Thus, even if the Noble of Dry Fingerprints transferred the damage inflicted by Hwiya's sword strikes to the crocodile, the amount of wine gushing from the crocodile would not decrease.

[The Reddest Sommelier's existence becomes faint.]

[The Reddest Sommelier's existence becomes faint.]

[The Reddest Sommelier's existence becomes faint...]

"Ah,"

The sky opened up.

As more wine burst from the crocodile's belly, blood gushed from the hole in the sky. Like a broken sewer during the rainy season, the blood gurgled continuously.

[The Reddest Sommelier can no longer maintain his authority.]

A small crocodile, swept away by the crimson flood, might have been the final fate of the sommelier.

[Initiating rank adjustment.]

[The Reddest Sommelier's alias has been revoked.]

[The quest on the 67th floor has been cleared!]

[The result of the floor control battle has been updated.]

[The 67th floor is now under the control of The Goddess of Protection!]

Good.

I turned my head. There, the goddess floated. We exchanged glances, with the crocodile's shed skin between us.

"Hwiya."

"Yes, hero."

That was the end of our conversation.

I dashed towards the left. Hwiya flew to the right.

Only the crocodile's shed skin remained in the middle, swallowed by the crimson flood and swept away somewhere.

"...Ah!"

At the end of the space where Hwiya flew, stood the White one.

At the end of my path stood the Black one.

"If attacking one side is meaningless,"

I threw a punch towards the Black one.

"Then attack both sides simultaneously."

Hwiya swung her wings at the White one.

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints manifests his authority!]

Though the Noble of Dry Fingerprints tried to transfer the simultaneous damage with damage transfer—

[The manager has rejected joint ownership.]

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints does not own this place.]

Just as the crocodile did, the Goddess of Protection, now the manager of this floor, repelled that authority.

"Damn it,"

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints invades the 67th floor!]

"Too late."

One step ahead, collisions occurred on both sides of the battlefield.

It was a fight that was disadvantageous for the Twins from the start. The Twins were merely performing the role of a tank. Their martial prowess was not remarkable.

On the opposite side, Hwiya swung her multiple pairs of wings simultaneously.

Striking down.

The White one was shattered to pieces.

"It's okay."

The Black one, facing me, spoke to the White one.

"You're okay."

Even as I approached, the Black one did not resist. Perhaps he lacked the ability to resist. The Black one's focus was solely on the other half.

"You're okay. As long as I'm here. You are...."

"Right."

I swung my fist.

"As long as you are here, that is."

The storm of punches struck.

The Black one was fully exposed to my attack. Unable to continue saying he was okay, his shoulder and chin were hit.

With the Black one's words gone, there was no one left to negate the damage to the White one.

"Aaaaah!"

The White one fell first. Unable to deny the accumulated damage and the wounds that could no longer be negated, the White one finally fell. Splashing! Into the blood-red surface of the water, which now extended to the horizon, the White one helplessly collapsed.

The fate of the Black one was no different.

"Ah...."

The Black one collapsed onto a rock, body shattered by my punches.

"To grit your teeth and rise again is an incredible feat."

I looked down at the Black one.

However, the Black one's gaze was not directed at me. Below the fluttering wings of Hwiya, it was towards the White one dimly submerged in the water. It gazed continuously towards its kther half.

"Each time, if you had become a little stronger, I wouldn't have won today. But instead of chewing, you spat it out. That's all."

"....."

The Black one smiled faintly. Finally, the Black one turned its head, its eyes lacking focus and pupils, filled with nothing but darkness, and looked up at me.

"Some people in this world cannot become stronger."

I nodded silently.

Without a word.

After a moment, the Black one spoke again.

"You guys can become stronger."

Its lips held a smile.

"Die. All of you."

That was the curse left by the Twins' constellation to the world.

[The Eternal Dance of the Twins's becomes faint.]

[Initiating rank adjustment.]

[The Eternal Dance of the Twins's alias has been revoked.]

The bodies of the Black and White ones simultaneously disintegrated into specks, turning to ash. Where the Black one had lain, a one-winged parrot raised its head.

[The quest on the 68th floor has been cleared!]

[Updating the result of the floor control battle...]

Yes.

I turned to face the last remaining constellation.

"You!"

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints was furious.

But his anger was futile.

As proven in classic games, a lone support left behind can do nothing but quietly take a portal.

A support refusing to take the portal only ends up highlighting their name on the scoreboard.

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints must have understood this fate as well.

Still, he glared at me with eyes burning with hatred. Splashing, splashing. The sound of blood splattering as I approached him, and Hwiya flying in from behind, everything reflected in his eyes seemed hateful.

"There is no constellation left for you to pass your damage onto."

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints looked at Hwiya.

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints manifests his authority.]

[The Goddess of Protection refuses.]

[The authority has been nullified.]

Perhaps, the Noble of Dry Fingerprints attempted to transfer the damage he was about to receive to Hwiya, but this process required the consent of the other party.

Naturally, Hwiya refused.

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints glared at me.

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints manifests his authority.]

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints has chosen you to bear the damage he is about to receive.]

[Do you accept the choice?]

I shook my head.

[The authority has been nullified.]

The Noble of Dry Fingerprints gnashed his teeth.

"You must understand me."

"....."

"It's not my fault. It's not a mistake. It's your fault, yours and the tower's. Everything is rightfully so. Therefore, you must understand my situation."

I reached out my hand.

Gradually, Hwiya disintegrated.

The five pairs of wings detached one by one, turning into five swords. The five swords merged again, condensing into one holy sword.

"No."

I grasped the hilt of the holy sword.

"Your presence in the tower is already proof that the Tower Master has understood you."

"You dare—"

"Enough. More than enough."

The sword traced an arc.

Something heavy plunged into the crimson water with a splash.

[The Noble of Dry Fingerprints's existence becomes faint.]

[Initiating rank adjustment.]

['The Noble of Dry Fingerprints's alias has been revoked.]

A chicken fluttered on the water's surface where a heavy object had fallen. It was a chicken with a red comb. The chicken, dyeing its white feathers red, swam past my feet.

Thus.

[The quest on the 69th floor has been cleared!]

[Updating the result of the floor control battle...]

The alliance of the three constellations fell under my blade.

[You have earned the right to challenge the 70th floor.]

The path to the seventieth stage was now open.

Chapter 340:

Absolute Music (1)

---

[You are being transferred immediately to the 70th floor as per your request.]

I was engulfed in a sandstorm without hesitation.

[You have entered the 70th stage.]

The scent of sand, heated by the sun since the dawn of time, lingered at the tip of my nose.

The smell of the sun.

During my childhood, in a meager playground where we played, there was a languid scent that emanated from the palm upon a sudden glance. The fragrant loam. The heated body and mind from the recent decisive battle calmed down.

There was also a message I hadn't heard in a while.

[The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages blesses your ascent.]

Had she been watching my battle from somewhere?

Imagining the Princess lounging on a sofa, munching on potato chips while watching, brought a smile to my face.

"You're at ease, judging by your expression."

Before me stood another Pillar.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] was sitting there.

"It's been quite some time since a challenger has shown up in the lobby that I manage. The one who backed you up, the Sword Emperor, when he came up here, he wasn't as composed as you..."

The mage furrowed his brows.

"...No. He was even more carefree than you. Perhaps it's such individuals who succeed in ascending."

"I'm curious. What kind of expression did he have?"

"The kind that asked if guests don't get offered a drink here. He actually said that, with some rather innovative swear words, but I won't go into those details."

I clicked my tongue and glanced back at the Guardian Spirit, who gave a "what?" kind of look.

-I don't remember doing that. Of course, as soon as I entered here, I thought it seemed quite unremarkable, to the point where it seemed there wouldn't be anything worth getting, but anyway, I never said that.

"Of course, the Sword Emperor himself wouldn't be able to recall."

The mage spoke as if he heard the Guardian Spirit's grumbling. He probably didn't actually hear it. He possessed the intelligence to preemptively predict things that weren't audible, taking it for granted.

"It's not just the Sword Emperor whose memories were stripped away. Everyone who meets us Pillars for the first time in the tower loses their memory. Even the memory that a stage auction just took place fades quickly."

"....."

"That's right, King of Death. Except for you."

The mage leaned on his long staff.

The 70th floor was a white world without mountains or rivers. However, it differed from the [Purely White Waiting Room] where the Princess had stayed. Sssrrrk... Large and small cubes turned as if they were Rubik's cubes.

Some cubes were as large as the moon, while others were smaller than a fist.

Sssk. The cubes moved continuously, meshing like gears. The cubes blended with the white background, protruded with sharp angles, and then disappeared into whiteness again.

Just like that, gathering for a moment before returning. The simple cycle repeated eternally was the celestial and physical body of this world.

"What do you desire from me?"

"The one who wished for oblivion was the Tower Master."

The mage started from the east and groped his way to the west.

"The Tower Master, Jaa Soo-Jeong, the Amethyst wanted the tower to be entirely yours. Or at least, she wanted you to believe so. It's better if the traces of the administrator don't show."

"For someone with such intentions, you send us blessings via messages every time we climb a stage."

The mage smirked wryly.

"Selfish, isn't it? The Viscountess can't stand not letting you know that someone is by your side. A god wants to exist only when you need them, that's the nature of it."

Cubes moved slowly behind the mage.

"I can't save the Tower Master."

"....."

"Everyone chosen as a Pillar is the same. In a way, what the Constellation Killer is to you, we are to the Tower Master. We owe a debt. We leaned on her for our lives. All we can do is help the Tower Master. Zuraqua... everyone born in the same world as the Tower Master, the kingdom, are bound by fetters."

The mage looked at me.

"But."

"It's different for someone who comes from outside."

I had guessed what the mage was about to say.

"Like the Sword Emperor. Like me."

"Exactly."

Silver eyes sank.

"King of Death, it's not that I don't erase your memory. I can't. You've earned that status and authority on your own. If you wait a thousand years, ten thousand years, until a million years decay and ten million years pass, there will come a human who will ascend to the 99th floor. Plenty of times. Someday, even the 100th floor will be broken, but a being who acquires a position like yours, it's uncertain when it will be allowed again."

"....."

"You are a miracle. You sprouted from a gap created by the Princess, through a seam woven by Mutia and Hisimet Cretsu, nourished by the rain Hamusutra provided. You caught the loophole in the web spun by the Tower Master. And I have no intention of waiting for the miracle of life to bloom in the universe once more."

I asked again.

"What do you desire from me?"

"Only what you will come to desire."

It was at that moment.

The mage lifted his staff and touched the void. A corner of a cube that had popped out from the white background was touched by the staff.

"Up until now, you have fought in your [specialization] area."

The cube was dyed in color.

The cube, turned yellow, had its sharp edges worn away. No, they melted. It seemed like paint flowing out of a balloon pricked by a scale.

Unlike the balloon, the cube's capacity was infinite.

"From now on, you will have to struggle in [non-specialized] areas."

The yellow paint melted down, wetting the floor.

First, at the feet of the mage.

Then, across my shadow.

"The areas you haven't been particularly interested in until now."

And to the horizon.

The ground beneath was dyed bright yellow.

The yellow was more gentle than gold and as soft as a wheat field.

"A Constellation of martial arts doesn't mean it's only worshiped by warriors."

Walking on the color of wheat grains, the mage looked down.

"Even a merchant who has lived a life completely detached from martial arts might find himself in a dark alley fighting a robber. A musician chasing love might duel with a rival. Music, medicine, magic, academia, agriculture, commerce, navigation..."

Human figures were reflected in the yellow waves. Someone was striking the ground with a pickaxe, while another turned their ship's bow toward an unnamed sea. Tiiing! There was also a man plucking the strings of a violin-like instrument.

"These are the professions you must be willing to reach out to if you wish to become a Constellation."

"Well, to put it grandly, that's it. Simply put, these are non-professional, amateur fields for you."

The corners of the mage's mouth twitched slightly.

I realized belatedly that it was a smile.

"So, whether you've cleared the stage or not, naturally, we need to call in an [expert] to judge, right?"

The mage struck the ground with his staff.

Whoosh!

Light burst forth, and a vague silhouette formed within it.

"Hmm?"

It was the shape of a person.

"Uh? Hmm? Uh-uh-uh----"

Perhaps they were in the middle of a meal. Someone summoned by the mage appeared still sitting, and with a metallic clang! they bruised their buttocks.

"Ouch! Oh, this is, what. Is it the Black Dragon Witch? Or the Heretic Inquisitor? It's troublesome to summon me like this without an invitation."

What was notable was the remarkably stable falling technique. Despite being suddenly summoned and falling in an entirely unprepared motion, that person immediately rolled on the ground and stood up.

And then our eyes met.

"Oh?"

"Yikes."

Both the other party and I knew each other all too well.

"What is it, Kim Gong-Ja? Did you summon me? I didn't know you had learned summoning spells."

The polished armor shone brightly.

There was only one acquaintance I knew who wore armor in everyday life.

"...Patricia?"

"That's right. I was worried for nothing. I thought some emergency had arisen, and I was summoned in haste, so I was momentarily tense."

It was indeed the Paladin.

"And for the record, Kim Gong-Ja, you're the only friend who didn't make a Patrasche joke after knowing my real name."

"Uh, this might not fit the current situation, but I'll ask anyway. What is that?"

"What...? You don't know Patrasche?"

The Paladin looked shocked.

"Are you in your right mind?"

"Why do I have to be treated like this..."

"This is serious. It's a sign of the end of the world. Kim Gong-Ja, what exactly do you know? What were you born to know? And you call yourself a representative hunter of our tower? I suggest you deeply reflect on your life. After reflecting, watch [A Dog of Flanders] and cry. The reason you have tear ducts is precisely for that."

"Okay. Now I'm certain this isn't the conversation we should be having in this situation."

One thing was clear. Even after meeting after a long time, we didn't ask about each other's well-being but questioned each other's sanity, indicating that our relationship was 360% friendly.

Why 360%? Well, because it came full circle.

"King of Death."

While Patricia and I were puzzled, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] spoke up.

"I'll tell you the quest you need to solve from the 70th floor."

Both of us turned to look at the mage.

"Make that person your believer."

"....."

"From the 71st to the 79th floor, one person per stage. In total, you need to recruit at least 9 followers. That's your first mission as a Constellation."

The mage moved his lips.

This time, it was a clear smile.

"A Constellation without believers doesn't exist."

The people fell silent.

-Indeed. I understand everything perfectly!

In other words, the ghost, rather than the people, was a bit noisy.

-That explains why those Sword Emperor Sect folks clung to me. Huh? If a religion worshiping me as a god were to be established, I would have personally stormed in and destroyed it, saying, "Hey, brats, why are you turning a perfectly alive person into a ghost on an altar?"

'But you are a ghost, aren't you?'

-Not at all! I wasn't!

The Guardian Spirit snorted.

-I knew something was off. I thought it was just because I was so awesome that people naturally started worshipping me. Tsk. Now it seems I was going through this quest from the 70th to the 80th floor without realizing it.

‘Huh?’

-Yeah, yeah. That pillar or whatever said, [Memories will be erased]. I had a strange feeling that my memories were distorted after clearing the stages. In the end, I successfully created followers, leading to the birth of the Sword Emperor Sect, but I conveniently forgot the process itself.

It sounded plausible.

While the origin story of the Sword Emperor Sect was inadvertently revealed, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] opened its lips.

"Originally, the 70th to 80th floors were extremely difficult hurdles. In most cases, hunters of the tower, just like the challenger are chosen as examiners, and usually, the challenger doesn't get along with those hunters. They're desperate to fail them."

"Haah..."

"Even the most skilled hunters usually fail here. Or they wander here for hundreds of years. But maybe things will be different for the King of Death."

Indeed.

The mage also explained the stage's gimmick to the Paladin. At first, the Paladin tilted her head, not understanding, but soon she grasped the whole picture.

"In short, if I worship Kim Gong-Ja as a god, the 71st floor will be easily cleared."

The mage nodded.

"That's right, child."

"Does worshipping a Constellation require any special conditions? For example, do I need to worship from the depths of my heart, sincerely, or offer my soul, and only then can it be said that I [worship]?"

"No. If the King of Death struggles on the 71st floor and you [acknowledge that's enough], then it's over."

"Good."

The Paladin turned to look at me.

"Gong-Ja."

"Yes."

"Take a good look at my face."

As always, her expression was very serious.

"My name is Patricia. Right now... I am the human who will make you a god."

"I appreciate it."

What's with this?

"I don't ask for anything from you. Go to the 71st floor and live as you wish. Or, just breathe. Breathing should be something anyone can do without failing. It's okay. I will make you a god."

Why, despite the serious expression and tone, does this make me want to po ke her in the chest and start a squabble right away?

"Even if you do something stupid... I will accept you as a god. Because that too is a form of god."

"Did we really become friends after all this time?"

The first candidate for a follower was quite extraordinary.

Chapter 341:

Absolute Music (2)

---

"Alright, let's leave the chit-chat there."

A staff wedged itself between the Paladin and me. Turning my head, I saw the [Staff of Time Immemorial] looking at me impassively.

"Listen to the final explanation before you ascend to the 71st floor."

"Ah, yes."

"King of Death, the world you are about to enter is already dominated by Constellations. However, it's different from before. You have no need to fight the Constellations."

I tilted my head in confusion.

"Why? Are they good Constellations?"

"Well, to be precise, it's not that you 'can't fight' them. Until now, you've only met Constellations with personalities. Relatively, Constellations that are close to human forms. But from the 71st to the 79th floor, [Constellations without personalities] reign."

Without personalities.

"Are they like objects or plants, then?"

"Something like that. You could say they are the laws of the world itself. The important thing is that you have no way to fight those Constellations. Unless you've reached the realm where you can freely wield the Sword Heart, it's not possible."

"....."

"I specifically summoned this knight among your comrades for a simple reason. The 71st floor is, how should I put it, a world dominated by music. It's what you'd call a Heaven of Music."

"Hoh."

The first to react to the word 'music' was Patricia.

"Indeed, I must be the right person for the job. Not to brag, but I am among the most excellent musicians in our tower. My concert was sold out this time as well. An excellent choice."

Patricia crossed her arms and looked confidently at the [Staff of Time Immemorial].

The reason for her confident gaze... I wasn't quite sure. Ever since she started performing jazz again, Patricia had become much, much more liberated than before.

"I don't see why you're bragging to me. Anyway, yes. King of Death, you will also become a musician in the Heaven of Music and live on."

"Do I have to be a musician?"

"There's no freedom of career choice. In the Heaven of Music, every being is a musician. Don't think that every world will be as free and vibrant as your neighborhood."

What a harsh world.

"Even though I've learned a bit of piano from Patricia, I'm still a complete beginner..."

"Most Hunters are like that. Outside their field of expertise, they're all amateurs."

The mage looked as if wondering what the problem was.

"That's why so many Hunters despair in the 70th floor region, right?"

".....Indeed. You have a point."

"Don't worry, Kim Gong-Ja."

Patricia patted me on the shoulder.

"Didn't I say? Even if you show the most embarrassing side of yourself, I plan to stamp a pass without any conditions. Unless it's a Blood Fire Play. It's practically impossible for you to move me with ordinary music anyway. Relax your mind."

"That was oddly offensive."

"One should be humble about their talents... For example, Kim Gong-Ja, one could say you lack talent in fashion. Your leather fetish is quite severe."

"I don't want to hear that from someone who wears armor 365 days a year?! Besides, this style was designated by Anastasia! Don't complain to me!"

"Indeed."

The mage nodded deeply.

"You and your friend could chat endlessly if left alone. I'll have to send you by force."

Squish, the ground beneath my feet gave way.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial is transporting you.]

Looking down, my feet were sinking into a floor that swayed like yellow paint.

"Uh? Wh-What?"

"Off you go."

I sank up to my waist in an instant. Right before I was completely submerged, Patricia urgently shouted at me.

"Kim Gong-Ja! Even if you lack talent in fashion, I don't mind!"

"Patricia....."

"Because you also lack talent in your face. Your fashion and face are a perfect match."

"Let's see each other after clearing the 71st floor."

And then I fell through the bottom.

[You have entered the 71st stage.]

[You are stepping into a place where you should not be.]

[A certain penalty has been given.]

I opened my eyes.

It was a village that seemed like it could come to mind when one thinks of 'heaven,' resembling a fairy-tale elf kingdom painted in watercolor.

It was very quiet.

And deathly still.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests his authority.]

[General information about this stage is revealed to you.]

It was the first time I set foot in this world, but there was no inconvenience in gathering information. The supreme Constellation Hisimet Cretsu had submitted to me, after all.

Before I could take a second breath of this world's air, texts appeared.

+

[Heaven of Music]

Floor: 71st

Constellation: The Maestro Singing of Heaven

Difficulty: B~A+

Description (Lv.1): Everything in this world revolves around music. If you wish to buy something, you must 'play music' for the seller. The better the music, the higher the price, and the worse the music, the lower the price.

The nutrients consumed by the inhabitants of this world are also solely music. Waking up in the morning and listening to music fills them with nutrients, and not hearing music for a week leads to starvation. Currency. Food. Power.

Think of everything as being made of music.

+

Everything made of music.

'It's much more convenient than before.'

After taking Hisimet Cretsu as my subordinate, the trouble with gathering information disappeared. Is this why the Constellations so feared having their authority taken away? Even I, who am a newcomer in the Constellation realm, am growing unstoppably.

'Now, how to strategize... Hm?'

It was while I was planning my route in my mind.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests his authority.]

[Exposure.]

A new message arrived, slightly different this time.

[You have not met the conditions to acquire hidden information.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth forcibly satisfies the conditions!]

[Hidden information has been revealed!]

Wriggle, wriggle!

The letters that appeared in front of me suddenly decomposed and reassembled. Like black worms wriggling their bodies, the characters changed into new meanings.

[Heaven of Music]

Floor: 71st

Constellation: The Maestro Singing of Heaven

Difficulty: B~B+

Description (Lv.2): Not every Hunter enjoys the fortune of living for hundreds of years. Some die. Many people die. Have you ever thought about where the souls of those who die in the tower go?

This is the heaven where the souls of those who have died in the tower arrive. The afterlife. The so-called underworld of the tower.

+

I blinked my eyes. What?

"The underworld?"

Astonishment blossomed in my mouth, and my tongue stiffened. But regardless of my surprise, Hisimet Cretsu continued to embroider the characters. The thread snake coiled around my wrist, flicking its tail.

The torrent of information did not stop.

+

There are nine levels of the underworld in the tower.

They are known as the Nine Heavens.

Even if the humans of the tower die, if they wish to remain somewhere instead of disappearing completely, they will wander the Nine Heavens. The heaven which they will wander in is entirely dependent on the hunter's last wish.

This is the 71st floor.

The first heaven. The Heaven of Music.

+

At that moment, as the information continued,

"■■■■!"

The characters suddenly stirred. The thread snake flicked its tongue. Then, it raised its head high and glared into the void.

Hisimet Cretsu seemed stressed, to say the least. I wondered why it was suddenly trying to bite at the empty air, but the reason soon became clear.

[You have not met the conditions to acquire hidden information.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth forcibly satisfies the conditions!]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth forcibly satisfies the conditions!]

I grasped the situation. Something invisible was interfering with Hisimet Cretsu's authority.

Whether it was interference from the system or obstruction by the Constellation governing this stage, I couldn't yet tell. But Hisimet Cretsu was not at all diminished in vigor. "■■! ■■!" It bared its teeth, threatening that something.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth forcibly satisfies the conditions!]

[You have earned the right to view hidden information.]

[Hidden information is revealed!]

Finally, the turmoil among the characters settled.

Hisimet Cretsu snorted, as if saying 'How dare something so insignificant try to block me?' Then, as if boasting that its existence was now far more valuable than the [Goddess of Protection], it displayed the characters.

[Heaven of Music]

Floor: 71st

Constellation: The Maestro Singing of Heaven

Difficulty: B

Description (Lv.3): Heaven of Music. The heaven where souls tired of life, weary of language, and nauseated by conversation arrive.

Now, they no longer believe in the language between people. They do not attempt to approach each other, and if they do, it is only through music.

Everything that breathes life in this place possesses a soul. The dandelion ruling over the lowest heaven. The narcissus bowing its head. The stickleback enjoying a footbath in the shade of a rock by the stream. Every living being is merely a reincarnated soul.

They have forgotten the memories of their past lives. Sometimes, maybe always, as they dream, memories of their past lives rise like dim fog, swimming through it.

In this Heaven of Music, where music echoes, the weary souls will be soothed.

Forever, if they wish.

+

Indeed.

"....."

I looked around.

It was eerily quiet.

Under the tranquil sky, birds did not form flocks but scattered individually, flying in whichever direction they wished. According to the information revealed by the [Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth], these were also souls.

My head throbbed.

‘...Even the afterlife is arranged in the tower.’

Reincarnation was everywhere.

Flowers lined both sides of the dirt road leading to the village. Stark white hydrangeas. Buddha's head flowers sat in meditation in a row, silently chanting mantras.

‘Not a single person has been overlooked by the Tower Master. Not a single one.’

There were many white flowers.

White didn't pick seasons.

The Buddha's head flowers clasped their petals together, and behind them, acacias bowed their heads. White daffodils nibbled at the sky with their fingertips. The cherry tree, like a grown fingernail, shaved off its petals and tossed them into the void.

Those wanting to shed their color were erasing their past lives.

‘...But I don't hear any music.’

I pressed down on my uneasy heart and thought differently.

‘Isn't it too quiet?’

Since arriving on the 71st floor, I hadn't heard any sound. Strangely, it was silent. Even when Hisimet Cretsu had roared earlier, only silent vibrations were transmitted to my wrist.

-Huh? Quiet?

The Guardian Spirit tilted its head in confusion.

-What are you talking about? It's almost too noisy for me.

‘What?’

I stepped on the dirt road. Though the world was silent, where I needed to head was clear. In the middle of the village, far down the road, a tree large enough to cover the sky was growing.

Perhaps it could be called the World Tree.

The villages clung tightly to the massive trunk of the tree, much like layers of bracket fungi.

When I enhanced my vision with Aura and looked closer, I saw people and animals like deer and giraffes mingling without issue, moving up and down a large staircase made of wood at the center of the tree. Not all souls were reincarnated as plants.

-Even the chirping of birds is one thing, but the flowers are singing too.

‘What?’

-If you look closely, even the insects are whispering songs. Of course, I admit it's a magnificent choir. If you listen quietly, it seems like it could bring peace to the mind. But personally, this stage isn't really to my taste... No, wait. Kim Zombie, you really can't hear anything? Nothing at all?

"....."

Could it be?

I opened my mouth.

I moved my tongue and tried to emit a high note, "Aaah."

"....."

No sound was heard.

I moved my Aura to supplement my hearing. I wrapped the organs responsible for human hearing in Aura once more, making sure there were no gaps, and perfectly supplemented my hearing. Then, I made a sound with my mouth again.

"....."

Still, no sound was heard.

It wasn't that my hearing was broken, but rather, as if the very sense of hearing had been deleted.

‘Damn it.’

I realized what the message [A certain penalty has been given] meant, which came to mind right after I fell into the 71st-floor stage. Why even Hisimet Cretsu's roar sounded like ■■ to me.

‘I... I can't hear anything here!’

To clear a world made of music without sound.

And to win over the heart of Patricia, a musician, and make her a believer.

This was the penalty given to me.

Chapter 342:

Absolute Music (3)

---

-It was truly a stroke of luck.

Guardian Spirit clicked his tongue in disapproval.

- Just imagine, Zombie. If you hadn't managed your relationships well. Think about it. If things weren't great between you and the Paladin, you would've been immediately out of this stage, completely out. How would you succeed in the world of music without being able to hear?

"Indeed..."

I trudged towards the World Tree Village. The village was incredibly picturesque. Having traveled through many worlds and seen all sorts of landscapes, the fairytale-like view of the village built around the World Tree was still a marvel to me.

"■? ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■?"

I encountered a villager along the way. The resident waved and smiled at me. Despite being a stranger, I felt no hostility from them, perhaps because in this paradise, the concept of hostility towards each other seemed non-existent.

"Uh... um."

The problem was that I couldn't hear a word they were saying.

I opened my mouth to speak.

"Ah, hello?"

".....?"

The villager tilted their head in confusion.

"■■ ■■■■ ■■■■■ ■■■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■? ■■■ ■■■
■■■■■■■?"

What are they saying?

I tried my best to enhance my vision and observed the movements of the villager's lips, the twist of their tongue. It seemed like the villager was asking, "Is your voice always like this? Are you unwell?" Probably. I emphasize probably because their pronunciation seemed odd.

"I'm sorry. I have a bit of trouble hearing..."

"....."

The villager made a strange expression, continually tilting their head as if to say, "What a weirdo," before leaving without a word.

Why? What happened?

-Hehehe!

Guardian Spirit was the only one having a blast.

I grimaced.

"Ah, what's so funny? Do you find people who can't speak amusing? Huh? You, who knows nothing but swinging that sword around."

-You, you might not have heard because of your condition. But the villager who greeted you just now, they were singing like they were in a musical when they spoke to you.

So that's why even reading their lips seemed odd.

-And there you were, struggling to speak normally while they kept singing in soprano. Haha! This stage is going to be interesting to watch.

"Damn, you're still as despicable as ever! Forget it. I'm ignoring you."

In essence, this world itself was one giant musical stage.

Dandelions sang, white horses sang, and every villager I passed by sang.

Above all, the source of the grand chorus was the World Tree.

[The Goddess of Protection marvels at the song of the World Tree.]

[A Music Box Just for You acknowledges the spectacle.]

According to the Constellations, each leaf of the World Tree hums softly.

Low notes from the green leaves. High notes from the white blossoms.

Dozens of leaves and flowers come together to form a small harmony on each branch. Several branches unite to create a larger harmony, buzzing together. Thus, as if hundreds of thousands of choirs were murmuring, the entire World Tree sang quietly at times and magnificently at others.

"I can't hear any of it..."

Of course, I had no way to enjoy that overwhelming fairy tale.

"People would talk to me and I'd try lip-reading, but I can't hear anything. What a pity."

-That can't be helped. What will you do now? Your comrade said they'd acknowledge your clearance no matter what kind of spectacle you put on.

"Yes. So I just have to do something..."

At that moment, a slithering serpent wriggled on my wrist.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth informs you that the only meaningful actions in the evil world of music are related to music.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth suggests that engaging in musical activities, whatever they may be, might serve as a trigger for the judge to pass you.]

Music, whatever it may be, huh.

"Hmm."

I looked around. The village in the musical heaven was sloped, much like the shantytown I used to live in. Clinging close to the World Tree, it rose in altitude along vast stairs that also served as plazas.

"■■■■■."

"■■■■. ■■■■■ ■■■■■■■■■■■■■■■■?"

"■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■■■."

People bustled up and down the stair-plaza, their exchanges likely carrying the melody of songs.

But for residents who found the constant live musical odd or simply disliked conversing with others, instruments were set up at various points along the stairs.

"If any action is truly acceptable..."

I ascended the grand staircase, examining each instrument. Most were unfamiliar to me, belonging to worlds or civilizations unknown... played by humans before their deaths.

"Would a simple music piece suffice?"

Fortunately, I found a piano after a bit of searching.

The instruments had no owners. Anyone could sit and anyone could play. A child was playing the piano, surrounded by younger kids clapping their hands.

"■■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■ ■■ ■■■?"

The child noticed me and spoke.

'Would you like to sit?' They probably meant that.

"■■■ ■■ ■ ■■■ ■■■■."

The language felt like Spanish or French to me. Or it might have been a completely different foreign language, but it was clear it wasn't an alien language. This child died in the tower, thus must have lived in the same world as me.

Though they couldn't remember their past life.

This place, devoid of all but musical instruments from their former lives, was where only those who wanted to discard everything else ended up.

"Yeah, thanks for letting me."

"■?"

The children murmured upon hearing my voice.

"■■■■■ ■■■■."

"■■■■ ■■■■."

"■■■■■? ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■."

"■■■■....."

To these people, my voice must indeed sound strange...
Raviel said she liked the sounds I made...

Hmm.

Indeed.

'It's been too long since I last saw Raviel.'

I sat down at the piano bench.

'I'll play a piece about longing.'

There was no tuning the piano. I couldn't hear anything.

'Well, this is literally the Heaven of Music, so I suppose tuning would sort itself out.'

Six children watched with eager eyes, seated on the stairs. Excluding the Blood Fire Drama, this was my first concert. These kids were my first audience.

I gently pressed the E note.

'Sword Emperor, can you hear the E properly?'

-Huh? How would I know?

'I was a fool to expect anything from you...'

The Sword Emperor seemed to have no intention of becoming my ears. Well, perhaps it was for me to conquer this stage on my own.

Slowly, I began to play.

"■? ■■■ ■■■."

"■■."

"■■■."

The children blinked in surprise. I couldn't read their lips while concentrating on the play, but the atmosphere somewhat conveyed their reactions. 'He can play a bit.' 'Wow.' 'Not bad?' Something like that.

It was a positive response, but...

'Hmm.'

It wasn't up to the standard I had hoped for.

'Without Aura to adjust the notes, it's challenging. Like a knight who's gone to battle without his armor, forgetting to wear it.'

'Until now, if a note seemed weak, I'd blaze it with Aura, and if I wanted a note to ring more desperately, I'd grab and shake it. But now, I can't hear anything... Well, it's my own doing.'

My performances so far were more akin to sound techniques than music.

[If you neglect basic swordsmanship and focus only on extracting Aura, you'll suffer greatly someday.] Guardian Spirit had said. My performance now was exactly that.

It was like a mercenary who had grown too reliant on tricks.

"■■■■!"

"■■■, ■■■ ■■!"

"■■■■ ■■■ ■■■■."

The light piece ended, and the children clapped.

Judging by the atmosphere... It was like having a satisfying lunch at an unexpectedly good value-for-money restaurant.

'A modest debut.'

I smiled wryly.

It was quite an achievement to even get a 'good value restaurant' acknowledgment from children who had grown accustomed to the grand choir of the World Tree all day.

[You have taken an action valid in this world.]

[Your judge has granted you a pass!]

Patricia seemed content not to expect more. Watching my day's work from the 70th floor lobby, she quickly stamped her approval.

[You have earned your judge's recognition!]

[You can declare stage clear at any time!]

It was a moment when a stage in the 70th floor area, known as a hurdle for top-tier hunters, was conquered all too easily.

[The Goddess of Protection says the path you've walked as a hero has led to today's easy victory.]

Hmm.

'Perhaps that's true.'

If I summed up what I'd heard so far, it was rare for top-ranked hunters to get along well.

It's just rare.

There might be some close relationships, but a case where ranks 1 to 10 entirely build a fortress of trust, like we had, might be the first.

'So it's a difficult quest in ordinary cases.'

Originally, it would be muddled with sticky grudges, sticky jealousy, contempt, and indescribable emotions, like it was with the Black Dragon Witch or the Sword Saint before I made an effort.

-Right. I actually get confused with ranks below 2. Why waste precious brain capacity on that? Who cares about being 3rd or 4th? I'm the top anyway.

You're a unique case, to be sure...

[Would you like to declare a clear?]

Just as I shrugged and was about to say yes,

"■ ■ ■ ■■! ■■■!"

"■■ ■■■■■ ■■■■■ ■■!"

"■■! ■■! ■■!"

The children clapped and chanted something. This time, it was easy to decipher. It was an 'encore'.

I smiled awkwardly.

"Hmm. Well, if it's just one song."

There was no need to rush through the stage and move on.

The stage, seemingly impregnable, was conquered in less than half a day. There was plenty of time.

Instead of hastening my steps here, I wanted to mingle a bit more with the souls who died in the same tower as me. Though they might not remember why they died, in their last moments, they thought, "I don't want to hear anything but music now, I don't want to speak unless it's singing."

I played again.

"■■...."

"■ ■. ■■■■ ■■■■?"

"■■■, ■■■ ■■ ■■ ■■."

I couldn't hear the sound of the piano I was playing. I tried to recreate my hearing with Aura, but it seemed like the Tower had soundproofed it at the system level. Perhaps the Constellation of this world exerted some power.

"■■."

So, I had no way of knowing whether my performance was good or bad, or even if it was going well.

"■. ■■."

Not on my own.

"■■■...."

"■■■."

I watched the children's expressions as I played the piano. Their faces were the only clues I had.

If the children closed their eyes and gently nodded their heads left and right, that was a "good performance." If they blinked in confusion, ah, that was a missed note.

At some point, instead of chasing notes in my mind, I was pressing the keys while looking at the children's eyes, glances, and faces.

"■■■!"

The children laughed as if amused.

"■■, ■■! ■■ ■■!"

That meant I made a funny mistake, or a playful joke landed. Seeing the children laugh, I laughed too.

And to pull off another great performance, to know if I was doing well, the moment I looked into the children's eyes.

"....."

I realized something.

'Right.'

It was a simple realization.

'I've always been like this.'

Everything seemed to make sense in an instant. The performance I was giving now and all the things I had done before, though seemingly unrelated on the surface, somehow connected in a line.

'I wasn't fascinated by swords and started learning swordsmanship. I began holding the sword heavier and heavier because when I swung it, people around me reacted. I felt recognized.'

Even now, playing without hearing anything, it was the same.

Not exactly enchanted by the piano. Not because I have a perfect score in my mind to reproduce. Maybe some do, but I didn't.

The children's giggling breaths, the slight movement of their eyebrows, the curl of their lips. With that alone, I gauged whether it was a [good performance] and [bad performance].

"....."

I was just a human who had taken [this method] to the extreme.

'It doesn't matter if I can't hear.'

I let Aura surge throughout my body.

'This is actually more familiar to me.'

I raised Aura, but not focusing it on myself like when I was on the Blood Fire Drama stage. Quite the opposite.

I enveloped the children with Aura.

"■.....?"

"■■, ■■■■."

The children felt ticklish. There was no harm to them. I just let Aura seep in so that their physical states would transmit to me.

'Hmm.'

Where their gazes were directed.

Whether they were watching my fingers dance on the keys or looking around to chat with the child sitting next to them.

Reactions to the sound.

Heartbeats of the children.

Blood flow.

The speed of the blood flow.

'Yes.'

All of that reacted differently depending on my play. It was subtle, but the Aura's touch was even more delicate.

It wasn't just the expressions on the children's faces that were my standard. Everything has an expression. The question is whether I have the means, the experience, the skill to read those expressions.

'I've always wanted to be like this.'

And I had the skill to do so.

'Let's give it a try.'

I noted when the children's gaze fixed on my fingers for certain notes. I observed which sequences of notes made the children's hearts respond most violently. The children couldn't hide their expressions.

And they didn't.

"■....."

"■■■....."

The time the children whispered among themselves gradually shortened.

At first, it was difficult because each child reacted strongly to different notes. But it was okay. There was an intersection. The children shared a massive commonality beyond any differences.

These children once gave up on the world and desired the same heaven.

Thus,

Although I still couldn't hear anything.

I pressed the keys for the sounds that made all the children respond the most brightly.

"....."

For a moment, all the children's hearts resonated simultaneously.

Chapter 343:

Absolute Music (4)

---

The children's heartbeats began to slow down.

'Why is this so fascinating?'

My fingers moved rapidly over the keys.

'Even though I can't hear anything, why am I so captivated by watching people's reactions?'

Breath was finite in this world. Performers and audiences shared a predetermined amount of breath. As my fingers quickened, the children's breaths slowed, and as my fingers leisurely swam, the children could finally catch their breath.

'How far can I go?'

I struck the keys.

"■■....."

"■■■■? ■■■■?"

Pedestrians on the grand staircase began to stop, one or two at a time.

I expanded my Aura. Not just the six children, but also the young man who just stopped, the woman with dark circles under her eyes—I sensed the rhythm of their heartbeats.

'How far can I go?'

Soon, my thoughts blurred.

'The scent.'

I caught the scent flowing beneath the World Tree. Despite not hearing anything, my Aura-enhanced sense of smell caught the most subtle and vulgar scents.

The deep recesses of my nostrils turned green.

'The scent of animals... The scent of beasts.'

It wasn't just humans who hesitated on the grand staircase and began to listen to my performance. Beasts did too.

Owls, robins, swifts, birds with long ears like goblins, birds with thick lips like hippos, birds with atrophied forelimbs like dinosaurs, birds whose names I couldn't call because I didn't know their identities, all craned their necks and dropped their beaks on the low branches of the World Tree. I was performing underneath them.

'...The scent of life.'

Not only were the beasts blinking their eyes and watching my piano under the World Tree, flowers were too.

Azaleas, hydrangeas, gladioli, mountain hydrangeas, hibiscus, cherry blossoms, pear blossoms, flowers with eyes full of snow, children with finely chopped nails blooming as petals, those clasping a handful of sky with curled fingers, beings that had colors before names, all looked down at me.

'The scent of Aura.'

This place was a kind of heaven.

Even the petals that didn't know how to listen had Aura lingering on them. Who had given it? In the world of musical heaven, from the moment of their birth, flowers knew how to drink rainwater as they knew how to listen with Aura.

[A skill has been activated.]

Unknowingly, I used a skill. [Salvation of the Torn Goddess]. Salvation Sword. A technique that temporarily amplified my Aura in exchange for losing my memories.

It was a skill I intended not to use recklessly, but it was activated unconsciously now. It couldn't be helped.

'More.'

Even now, as a Constellation, I lacked the Aura to sense everyone under the shadow of the World Tree— children, passersby, beasts and flowers.

I just wanted the hearts of everyone who lent their ears to my performance.

'More.'

I lost the memory of what I played three seconds ago and grasped the performance that would follow in the next three seconds.

Aura would become more boundless the more one would be willing to forsake themselves.

[A skill has been activated.]

Even if I had been born a musician who couldn't hear, a painter who couldn't see colors, a poet who didn't know what poetry was, I would have surely written songs I couldn't hear, painted pictures I couldn't see, and written poems I didn't know.

I would have lived that way.

'...Good.'

Maybe compared to someone who received the sound from the beginning, knew what harmony and music were, and just transcribed the music they knew, my life might have been inferior.

But I knew no other way to live.

'Yeah, I like it.'

And I liked being alive.

'Everyone... is beautiful.'

If there was something I realized after sacrificing my life over four thousand times, it was that I liked living.

If I were a stone allowed only a life of breaking apart, I would have loved even the act of breaking. If I were a flower that had to shed the white it nurtured from spring when winter arrived, I would have loved the sensation of dropping petals.

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven opens his eyes.]

Blink.

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven looks down at you.]

The wind stirred.

It wasn't a wind I created. The branches subtly wriggled, and countless leaves moved like feathers on wings. It was the World Tree. When this tree, covering the sky here, nodded slightly, a kind wind blew.

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven listens to your sound.]

And I knew that the wind flowing through the crevices of the tree was the heartbeat of the tree, and the sound of leaves bustling against each other was the tree's temperature.

The blooming flowers were the tree's gaze.

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven begins to sing along to your sound.]

Thump.

A flower whiter than the piano keys fell onto it.

Thump, the petals fell from afar. From somewhere high above. From the sky. The World Tree shook its branches and dropped its flowers. Thump. With the speed of the sky and the gravity of green, the white flower fell, pressing the keys as it descended.

Another flower dropped.

Everytime they fell, the flowers struck the keys. It was a performance. As I leaned to the left and played on the left side of the piano, the flowers fell to the right. The World Tree played an accompaniment by dropping its flowers onto the piano keys.

"....."

Like rainwater, petals scattered over the keys.

I moved my fingers. White mirrors bloomed with white flowers. Pressing a key, I unwittingly crushed a flower someone had dropped there.

As I played the piano, fingerprints remained on the petals. Crushed between my fingers and the keys, the flower was slightly bruised. Mashed. Crushed. A juice-like moisture flowed from the petals. Just a little. A bit of fragrance, just a bit of scent, scent... scent.

The crushed fragrance must have been the tree's tears.

White keys, white petals, and a whiteness flowed, and if one noticed, the surroundings were filled with blooming flowers.

Petals that didn't know how to shed moisture until pressed, when they did shed, it wasn't a foul smell but a fragrance that flowed in white.

There was such a tree in heaven.

'Beautiful.'

What did the one who first planted this tree think?

"■■■....."

"■■....."

Children, pedestrians, and beasts opened their mouths. They probably sang along with the flowers. Unfortunately, I couldn't hear the world's chorus.

It didn't matter.

Really, it didn't matter.

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven blesses you.]

[Hidden Stage Clear.]

In the midst of falling flowers.

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven says you shouldn't stay here too long.]

[You will be transferred to the 70th floor.]

[The Maestro Singing of Heaven bids you farewell.]

[May fortune be with you.]

I opened my eyes.

The place where I opened my eyes was the 70th-floor lobby.

"....."

Patricia was silently watching me. She opened and closed her lips repeatedly, seemingly contemplating what to say first.

Finally, after some deliberation, Patricia spoke, "Kim Gong-Ja."

"Yes."

"Aura is a cheap trick, so I don't acknowledge it."

"Why did you even bother thinking about what to say first? Huh?"

"I find it somewhat embarrassing to praise you. Should I endure the embarrassment just to praise you? That would be your selfishness, your arrogance, and your vanity."

"I didn't say anything!?"

"Ha."

Patricia sighed.

"There was no need to try so hard. Didn't I tell you? Even if you did nothing, I would gladly acknowledge your stage clear. In fact, when you completely messed up your first performance, I immediately stamped the clear."

"You really say some harsh things so nonchalantly, don't you...?"

"Your last performance was... um, how should I put it?"

Patricia seemed lost in thought, then slowly nodded.

"I thought it was nice to live with a human like you. But now, after hearing your last performance, I thought it wouldn't be so bad to die together with you."

".....Oh."

Isn't that an even more embarrassing thing to say?
Overwhelmingly?

I can't grasp your subtle emotions, my friend.

"Yes. It was an excellent start."

While I was hesitating on how to respond, the Staff of Time Immemorial intervened, "It was remarkable considering it wasn't your area of expertise. Congratulations on gaining a believer for the first time since becoming a Constellation."

[You are gaining believers!]

[The Paladin becomes your believer.]

[Currently, there are no blessings you can bestow upon your believer.]

[Currently, there are no divine powers you can grant to your believer.]

Although messages followed one after another, it still didn't feel real to me. Blessings or divine powers. Maybe after conquering up to the 79th floor, when my status as a Constellation is solidified, something might become possible.

Even if it becomes possible, I have no intention of acting as a deity to Patricia, nor do I wish to be treated as one.

"Well, take care. Kim Gong-Ja... Hang in there."

Patricia's ankles were wrapped in white light.

Her role as a judge was ending, and she was returning to the 1st floor.

Looking closely, Patricia wore a bittersweet smile.

"I was told by this one that I won't remember anything about this incident."

"....."

"Memories are islands that each person possesses. It feels troubling to leave you on a deserted island, but I trust you'll swim through any sea as you please and go wherever you want."

"Patricia."

"Hm."

"I think 17 plans would be insufficient if you were to attempt assassination."

"....."

Patricia looked taken aback.

What followed in the next second went like this: In less than a second, Patricia realized she had momentarily lost control over her expression. Then, in another fraction of a moment, she pondered what to do. It was brief, but her contemplation was evident in her gaze.

And she made her choice.

".....Indeed."

Patricia opted to [leave her taken-aback expression as is].

"Disappointed...?"

"No. I knew you were that kind of person. I've just come to understand you a bit more."

"I'm sorry. But I have seen people change. Witnessed it.

Experienced it. The Sword Saint, the Black Dragon Witch, many hunters from the past who are now gone... I simply cannot believe in people who never change their hearts. So, just in case."

"Yes."

I smiled.

"I understand what you mean by [I wouldn't mind dying with you]."

"....."

"It's an honor."

"Really,"

Patricia let out a forced laugh.

"You're quite the unadorable fellow."

Splash!

The ground beneath Patricia softened and swallowed her up. She was teleported by the mage.

In the space where Rubik's cube-like cubes continuously rotated, only the mage and I were left.

"Will you move on to the next stage immediately? Or would you like some time to rest?"

"I'm fine with either."

"Then, let's proceed."

The slender staff struck the white floor.

"The world of music was somewhat favorable to you as a battlefield. Even though music wasn't your specialty, you weren't entirely devoid of talent in it. But what about this time?"

Where Patricia disappeared, a burst of light soared.

"Your next destination is [the world of money]."

Beyond the dazzling pillar, a shadow of a person flickered.

"And the top expert related to money in your tower seems to be this child."

Like Patricia, it was a familiar face to me.

The newly summoned judge on the 70th floor blinked.

".....Um? What's this all about?"

A hunter deeply connected to Patricia who had just vanished.

"How peculiar. Can you tell me where this is, King of Death?"

The head of the Merchants Union, Sang-Ryun.

It was the Countess.

Chapter 344: The Voyage of the Full Moon (1)

---

"Indeed."

After hearing the reason for her summoning, the Countess nodded.

"So, all I have to do is declare a pass and that's it? Simple. Easier than adding a slice of cheese to a hamburger."

"Of all things, why is the analogy a hamburger?"

"I'm on a diet at the moment..."

The Countess revealed a slightly despairing expression, reminiscent of a hamster who had just been told it's illegal to nibble on sunflower seeds. As someone who had never been on a diet, I found it difficult to relate, but it seemed she was enduring a particularly challenging period.

"Why not just burn off the fat with Aura?"

"That sort of thing is only possible for a crazy Aura fanatic like you, King of Death. Keep in mind that not every hunter in the world can use Aura as effectively as you. What if I burn my insides while trying to burn fat?"

"It's not that difficult..."

"Keep your deceit to yourself. Well, anyway, I see no reason to oppose. It's a pass, a pass. Now send me back to the 1st floor."

The Countess gestured as though the matter was settled.

However, the Staff of Time Immemorial shook its head.

"Sorry, but it doesn't work like that. You have a duty to observe the King of Death as a judge."

"If I had to pick the worst word I've ever heard, it would be 'duty'. It's just a sneaky way of shifting the blame not to the one who exercises power but to the one who is coerced. The worst scammers aren't merchants like me, it's language."

"You make a valid point. Then let me rephrase. Observe. You have no choice but to follow my power."

"Damn it."

The Countess flicked her fan into the air, and a miraculous event occurred. Out of thin air, poof! A luxurious sofa materialized and settled down.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth informs you that this is a divine power of the God of Commerce.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth says that if you have enough money, you can buy almost anything from the God of Commerce.]

The God of Commerce, then.

Just as Patricia's skills stemmed from Hisimet Cretsu, most of the Countess's skills seemed to have been granted by some unknown God of Commerce.

"Nice. Very nice. Being coerced by someone else feels so exhilarating, it makes even my life feel complete. At the very least, I want to fulfill my duties in comfort, but that's not too much to ask, right?"

"That's your prerogative."

The Countess leaned back on the sofa and propped up her chin. With a swish of her fan, the sofa was joined by a fluffy pillow, a cat plushie, potato chips, wet wipes, and cola. Even the potato chips were opened, and the cola came with a straw already inserted.

Munching on the chips, the Countess looked at me.

"What's the plan? Hurry up and get started with your quest. Consider it like watching a movie."

Incredible...

"Why can't you use that skill for dieting?"

"If the money spent on a diet item could buy a hair growth product, would you believe it?"

"Uh, there seems to be a serious error in price assessment..."

"That's how my skill is. Sometimes the prices of products go haywire. I once bought an item called [World Peace] for only 100 gold, and a message popped up saying, ['The world was peaceful to begin with! By realizing this fact, you have become a better person than yesterday!']"

"Wow."

"If I weren't a sufficiently rational person, I would have torn that skill card to shreds at that moment."

The character of the God of Commerce is clearly questionable.

"Quick question before I send you off."

"Yes?"

"I heard you're taking on the 72nd floor. That means someone else must have taken the role of judge for the 71st floor. Who was my predecessor?"

"Ah."

I didn't hesitate to answer.

"It was Patricia."

"Ho..."

The Countess crunched on the potato chips with a mustached gentleman's logo, famous for chips.

"I see."

There was no significant change in the Countess's expression.

"Just out of curiosity, hypothetically speaking. What happens if the judge refuses to stamp the pass?"

"What would happen, mage?"

"You'd wander in that stage forever. Simple."

The Staff of Time Immemorial explained.

"That's why many hunters give up on challenging the higher floors and settle for the previous ones. Honestly, you're the strange one for challenging the upper floors without any worries."

"Hmm..."

The Countess wiped her fingers, now dusty with chip crumbs, on a wet wipe.

"And the judge? I get that the challenger gets stuck in the stage, but what about the judge who has to watch over it?"

"Likewise, the judge has to stay here as long as the challenger is trapped in the stage."

"For decades?"

"Yes. For decades. However, they experience time differently. If a challenger has to fully endure 30 years as 30 years, a judge can use 'acceleration' as much as they want. If the challenger is a movie director, then the judge is a critic. A critic doesn't need to spend the same amount of time watching a movie as it took to produce it."

"So they can only watch. I see, I see... Got it."

Crunch.

"I've got the rules down. As long as there are rules, there's a way. The world I'm about to enter is related to [money], right?"

"Yes."

"Then that's settled. Go ahead with a light heart. Whether you find a part-time job and earn a... no, a weekly wage, the result will soon become clear."

The Countess's words were probably not a lie.

Naturally, I felt reassured.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial transfers you.]

The soft white ground swallowed my feet.

Until the moment my line of sight aligned with the ground level, the Countess watched me intently.

A gentle curve formed on the Countess's lips.

"You make a fine friend, King of Death."

Those were the last words the Countess offered me.

[You have entered the 72nd stage.]

[You are stepping into a place where you should not be.]

[A certain penalty has been given.]

I opened my eyes.

I was in what could typically be described as a "Mediterranean seaside village," the kind that corporations would likely prefer as a computer boot screen.

Blue and white.

The two colors that make up the sky were extracted with a dropper and then directly planted on the ground, creating a blue-and-white harbor.

It was truly peaceful...

"Orange apples for sale! Fresh and zesty orange apples!"

"Try the sweet potato grape wine imported from the distant Bastar Island!"

"Have you heard of the Dodeok pig barbecue? It's insanely delicious."

Okay.

There, among the street vendors' stalls, was the sale of utterly evil-looking, questionably sourced, and horrifyingly prepared monster barbecues, which at a glance could strip one of their sanity and incite an urge to immediately slaughter and gut them.

This world is not okay. Let's escape.

[You have not cleared the stage.]

[You cannot voluntarily exit this stage.]

Damn it!

"Hey, thin snake, quickly explain what kind of situation this is."

"Kkeeeek...."

The thin snake swayed its tail gently.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests his authority.]

[General information about this stage is revealed to you.]

Amid the bustling noise of street vendors in the port city, words began to dance in front of my eyes.

I read the information eagerly, hoping for an explanation of the unidentified foods laid out on the stalls.

+

[Heaven of Gold]

Floor: 72nd Floor

Constellation: The Cat That Bites Gold Coins

Difficulty: B+~A+

Description (Lv.1): A world where everything revolves around bargaining. There's no such thing as a free lunch here. Nor is there a fixed price. If you wish to purchase something, you must bargain with the seller, and the 'satisfaction' felt from this bargaining is what sustains you.

The nourishment for the inhabitants of this world is satisfaction from transactions. The feeling of successfully bargaining, sucking the marrow out of the other party's back, giving a sucker an experience of a lifetime fills them with fulfillment. Conversely, feelings of being duped, cheated and backstabbed will leave you starved.

There's no such thing as a set price. It's the sucker's fault for being duped. Think of everything as being subject to bargaining!

+

What is this?

Hell?

Why is this a hell instead of heaven?

"Try the orange apples! Orange apples here. Just one bite and the juice will cling to your palate forever, never to leave..."

"True grape wine must have a sweetness that lingers at the tip of your tongue. For those who believe so, our sweet potato grape wine will offer a perfect experience! Hey, sir. Try it comfortably. No, just drink it..."

"Deodeok pig. Absolutely, the Deodeok pig!"

Upon closer inspection, the street vendors' eyes were bloodshot.

It was the murderous intent of remnants who had fled from battle and starved for days, seeing nothing but survival.

This is scary.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifest his authority.]

[Exposure.]

A new message arrived, slightly different this time.

[You have not met the conditions to acquire hidden information.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth forcibly satisfies the conditions!]

[Hidden information has been revealed!]

But fear stems from ignorance. The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth quickly updated the information, revealing secrets that an ordinary hunter could never have accessed from the very beginning.

+

[Heaven of Gold]

Floor: 72nd Floor

Constellation: 'The Cat That Bites Gold Coins'

Difficulty: B+~A

Description (Lv.2): This is one of the afterworlds prepared by the Tower.

Description (Lv.3): Heaven of Gold. For those who don't want to believe there's anything beyond money, for those who fear their entire life would be invalidated if it were, wishing even the afterlife could be purchased with money so that their life wouldn't be invalidated.

Even for such individuals, the heavens extend.

Here, they need not ponder the world. Everything is clear. You don't have to become a cold human to deny morality. There's no reason to be criticized for refusing to understand others. As they wished, as they desired, only transactions exist here. Like all heavens, the Heaven of Gold welcomes you.

Do not agonize. Do not ponder.

Die as you have lived.

You have the right to do so.

You will trade to fill your belly. The only concern is your daily bread. You may tire of the daily grind, but if there's nothing beyond the wheel, there's no reason to tire in the first place.

May eternal labor console your soul.

+

"....."

For a moment, a chill ran down my spine.

'Someone's heaven is another's hell. But this place is the opposite.'

It wasn't surprising that there were people who considered this place heaven. Not at all.

The reason for my chill was the fact that a whole afterlife was truly constructed for those who [consider such a place heaven].

'The Tower Master.'

She was determined not to let even a single soul escape.

That almost curse-like determination was what I felt.

What kind of heavens were built on the other seven floors?

'...No, focus.'

I shook my head to clear the distracting thoughts.

'Right now, the priority is to receive the Countess's passing stamp. Yes, that's the immediate task.'

I refreshed my mood.

The condition set by the Countess was to earn money through any job, even part-time.

The job didn't matter.

"Hey, you..."

Just as I was about to look for a job.

Among the street vendors, someone who had merely spread out a stall called out to me. It was a voice imbued with Aura, precise enough to leave no doubt about who it was addressed to, drilling directly into my ears.

"Yes?"

"Judging by your appearance, you're a [Challenger], aren't you? Am I right? Your eyes are too bright, unlike a soul that has forgotten its past life..."

The person was hooded, concealing their face. Before I could even respond, the hooded figure spoke with a somewhat breathless voice.

"How about it? I'm also a challenger like you. A senior who fell into this damned world 300 years before you. Wouldn't you like to buy a piece of advice from such a senior, for a mere pittance...?"

Chapter 345: The Voyage of the Full Moon (2)

---

I blinked.

"Did you say you came here 300 years ago?"

"Indeed, junior..."

The hooded figure nodded repeatedly, their face concealed. Suddenly, I was the junior, and they were the senior, but I wasn't particularly concerned about that.

What caught my attention was what the hooded figure had said.

'Whether it's the Hell of Gold or the Heaven of Gold, everyone who comes here forgets their previous lives. The fact that they guessed I'm a challenger means there's a high chance they really are a hunter.'

Hadn't [The Staff of Time Immemorial] mentioned it? Unless recognized by the judge, one would linger in the stage like a ghost forever.

Perhaps the hooded figure in front of me was a challenger who hadn't completed the quest for 300 years.

"I am a failure..."

The hooded figure stuttered.

"Trapped here, unable to go anywhere, just wasting my time. My life might have ended like this, but junior, I wish to prevent other challengers from ending up like me..."

"How about it?" the hooded figure's voice rose.

"Wouldn't you like to hear my advice? Even if it's just the ramblings of a worthless life... a failure's murmurs, if it could help a junior..."

"No, no, what are you saying? You're willing to share your story, and I'm all ears."

"Huff, huff. Such a kind-hearted junior. Then, if you could just buy me an apple orange, I'll gladly assist in your future endeavors."

The hooded figure crooked his finger.

[A trade request has been made by the other party.]

Then, a message arrived.

[Do you wish to purchase the offered item with one apple orange?]

This seems pretty straightforward.

I went to a stall vendor and bought a fruit that was half apple, half orange. Literally, 50:50. The left side was an apple, and the right side was an orange. What's this?

"Come on over! Wow, young man, you're looking fine!"

The stall vendor, seeing me as an easy mark, gleefully asked for 3 gold. It was an obvious rip-off.

But my pockets were full of gold coins. Considering it an investment for advice from a person 300 years my senior, it wasn't too bad.

[The bargaining is over.]

[The other party is satisfied with the trade.]

[You are satisfied with the trade.]

That was easy.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth discreetly reveals that the fruit vendor considered you a top-tier sucker....]

I know that, but I just wanted to finish it quickly!

"Here you go, sir."

"Oh, such a kind junior..."

I quickly handed over the apple orange to the hooded man. He shakily took the fruit from my hand.

[The trade is completed.]

[The bargaining is over.]

That's when it happened.

"Yahoo!"

The hooded man sprang up and, with a surprisingly cheerful motion, threw off his hood. The sudden change was so startling that I instinctively stepped back.

"What, what is it?"

"What do you mean, what? I'm the fisherman of Ravent Port who hooked you! Seeing your face screaming 'sucker', I cast my line hoping for a catch, and voila, you're a big one! Hahaha! This ripe, seasonal fruit is all mine now, young one!"

The hooded man, now unveiled, greedily devoured the apple orange.

"Ah! Delicious! Feasting on the tender and naive is the ultimate delicacy!"

"....."

I was dumbfounded.

"Wait. You said you were a challenger. How could you be a resident here and pull off all that challenger talk?"

"I have no idea what you're talking about. I merely recited the repertoire of a sucker who was fleeced by me long ago. Was it 300 years ago? Occasionally, some kids fall for such nonsense, standing right where you are."

"This crazy...?"

"That's the expression I wanted to see!"

A dramatic sound effect seemed to echo in my head.

[The other party is very satisfied with this trade.]

[You are very dissatisfied with this trade.]

[You have suffered a loss!]

Right after the message, it happened.

"Uh? Uh-oh?"

An immense hunger struck me. A hunger I had never experienced before ambushed me. Despite having endured extreme hunger while practicing Demonic Heavenly God Art, I had never felt such immense starvation.

"What, what's this all about?"

"Umm, delicious...."

Contrary to me, the hooded man's face shone brightly.

"Well eaten. Junior, don't be too disappointed. Thanks to me, you've learned a valuable lesson, haven't you? To teach such a life lesson with just one apple orange, oh, I'm too kind... How did I end up being so kind in this harsh world..."

"Hey."

The hooded man's expression had a devastating impact. Even I, who had grown accustomed to not getting angry, felt a surge of irritation at that face.

[You are more dissatisfied with this trade.]

[The other party gains even more satisfaction from this trade!]

[You have suffered another loss!]

I soon realized that even this anger was calculated by the other party.

"Ah, excellent. Excellent! It's like having a prime Deodeok pig steak in my mouth, oozing with juice! What a gourmet spot, young one. You were a gourmet spot..."

The other party savored the moment slowly, as if enjoying a delicacy.

"Now, considering the hordes of alley cats that will recognize you as a gourmet spot and flock to you, it's almost a pity. I'd like to enjoy this taste all to myself..."

"Hey."

The hooded man's turn was so dramatic it could have been from a western movie.

"....."

And something in my head just snapped. I swear, if you could watch that and not get furious, you were not a human but a rock.

[You are even more dissatisfied with this trade.]

[The other party gains even more satisfaction from this trade!]

[You have suffered yet another loss!]

Fuck.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth says the other party considers you the biggest sucker in the universe...]

Shut up, you snake.

[The Goddess of Protection looks at you with a very pitiful gaze.]

Where even are your eyes, huh? You're a sword.

[A Music Box Just for You doesn't say anything and just looks at you with a compassionate heart.]

You too, fox?

-Puhahahahahahaha! Puhah, hah, heh, ho! I'm dying! I'm dead! Kim Gong-Ja, this bastard is killing the Sword Emperor! Oh my, people of the neighborhood! The Sword Emperor, who conquered up to the 99th floor, is about to be killed by this bastard!

You... just don't speak. No. Please don't speak. Can you not speak, please? Please.

"Look, that young man is a sucker."

Whispers.

"Is he really a gourmet spot?"

Murmurs.

Not only the Constellations were looking at me. The stall vendors were blatantly staring, gossiping among themselves. Their gazes could be described as those of a panda cub, that after starving for three days, sees a bamboo leaf falling right in front of it. How do I know what a panda cub's gaze looks like?

Well... can you leave me alone for a bit?

"Young man! Mister! Do you remember me? I sold you the apple orange earlier. Young man, trade with me just one more time! We've already proven a solid trust between a seller and a buyer, haven't we?"

"Try the sweet potato grape wine! Just one sip, no more, no less! Young man, I'll take responsibility for pouring sweet potato grape wine down your throat until you vomit from its novelty! A whole new world!"

"Deodeok pig barbecue."

The vendors rushed in. Their eyes were all twitching. Like waves crashing against the shore, they kept coming in waves, leaving the rock (me) with no choice but to be eroded away in this utterly shitty situation.

"Just one bite..."

"Gourmet spot..."

"Deodeok pig. Try it."

What more could I do here?

"Okay."

Run away.

"Ah, the gourmet spot is escaping!"

I launched myself into the air with Aura-infused footwork, clutching my stomach with my left hand. The extreme hunger gnawed at my stomach.

"Chase him!"

"Catch him!"

"How often do we get a sucker like this! We can't let him go!"

As a result, I had no choice but to run around, twisting my body and bending over.

If Master saw me now, she'd probably cry, saying, 'I've never seen such a disgraceful movement technique...'

"Hungry, ugh. So hungry..."

Of course, I managed to escape.

No matter how hungry I was, I wasn't going to fail at fleeing from angry pandas.

In a dark alley.

"I'm hungry... What kind of insane hunger is this...?"

I staggered along, enacting the opening scene of a classic movie. I was a poor little kid wandering the alleyways. The problem was, even that kid had trash cans to rummage through for food scraps, but there was nothing like that here.

What if I hadn't mastered the Demonic Heavenly God Art's Sword of Starving Death?

Would I have gone mad by now?

The hunger tormenting me was something no ordinary hunter could withstand. Seriously, if it was someone else instead of me, they would have flipped their eyes and collapsed by now, writhing on the ground.

-Gong-Ja.

That's when the Guardian Spirit spoke to me.

"Yes...?"

-I have something I really want to say to you.

I looked at Guardian Spirit with difficulty. Guardian Spirit was looking down at me with a serious expression, as if about to impart a crucial message.

And then the Guardian Spirit said.

-Adieu.

"....."

-Hahahahaha!

Right.

Okay.

That's how it's going to be.

"I understand..."

I slowly straightened my bent back. I stood firmly on the ground, despite the monochrome scenes flickering before my eyes due to severe hunger. Somehow, my mind was eerily clear.

"The world treats me this way, so I have no choice..."

-Huh? What? What's the gourmet artisan mumbling about?

"You all are dead."

It seemed like my mind had cleared because the fuse had blown.

When a blackout occurs, silence naturally follows.

-...

Guardian Spirit's expression changed upon seeing my face.

-Zombie? Hey, Kim Gong-Ja? Hello? Can you hear me?

"Yes. I can hear you perfectly, as if it's a 1080p high-definition video. Do you have something else to say to me, Sword Emperor?"

-.....

The Guardian Spirit quietly retreated.

-I just said adieu. I did nothing wrong.

[The Goddess of Protection insists she is completely innocent!]

[A Music Box Just for You reminds you that it has always been an innocent entity.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth argues that it merely spoke the truth...]

I drew the Holy Sword and gripped it tightly in my right hand.

"Why are you all like this? I'm not angry."

-.....

"I just think... shouldn't people not play with hunger? Because that's rude. It's about manners... This city lacks manners."

I smiled brightly.

"Let's teach them some manners."

It's time to set things straight in Heaven of Gold, or whatever it is, starting with this port city.

Chapter 346: The Voyage of the Full Moon (3)

---

The operation was carried out.

"Hello, brother. Do you perhaps know the way?"

It might sound like nonsense, but any nonsense becomes reasonable when one believes it themselves. And since I was the one who had just made this remark, it was endowed with reason, a hundred reasons or a thousand reasons.

"Huh? ...What the hell are you talking about on our first meeting?"

Of course, the merchant who was suddenly asked if he knew the way furrowed his brows.

In the port city, inside of a fairly large general store. Even now, in broad daylight, there were quite a few customers. There was even a regular customer playing chess with the store owner.

In the store displayed with various antiques, the street vendor put down his chess piece and slightly pushed up his monocle.

"I don't take nonsense. A young man with a decent build is up to no good here. There's nothing for you to scavenge here, so beat it. Shoo, shoo."

"In my opinion, elder brother, it seems you need to know the way. Have you ever heard of a god called 'The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth'?"

"It's like a dog meowing and a cat barking....."

I was curious what that was supposed to mean, but the curiosity I wanted to address immediately was elsewhere.

'Hey.'

I tapped the thin snake wrapped around my wrist.

The thread snake cried out sadly, "Kiiik."

'Reveal a secret between the merchant and the regular customer in front of me. Anything will do. Just make sure it's a critical secret.'

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth laments not knowing when it had fallen so low after being revered as one of the Twelve Zodiac Gods....]

'Should we add more sorrow to an already sorrowful life?'

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its power....]

While the snake was fulfilling its role, the street vendor clicked his tongue and turned his gaze back to the chessboard. However, the regular customer opposite him reacted differently. After examining my face, he tilted his head in confusion.

"Hmm? This friend, upon closer inspection, seems like the popular spot that caused a commotion at the docks."

"Popular spot? What are you talking about?"

"You wouldn't know since you're cooped up in the store, but it was quite noisy. A new young man, not only a complete sucker but also said to have a delicious soul, you see? Everyone is eager to strip him bare."

"That frail kid? Really?"

"They say it's incredibly sweet."

The eyes of the street vendor and the regular customer gleamed with greed as they looked at me, scanning me from head to toe as if they were tigers in front of a pig.

[Exposure.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth reveals a secret to you.]

Who the real tiger was remained to be seen.

+

Name: Serbados Xeniamilia

Previous World: Nameless Tower

Afterlife: Port City Levanta, Heaven of Gold

Secret: General store owner. The regular customer currently playing chess with this person actually has a boil on his buttocks, which developed because of the tea Serbados keeps recommending. Anyone who drinks this tea develops a boil on their left buttock. The regular customer always buys ointment for it, and Serbados sells that ointment.

Mental State: 'Even if I lose in chess, winning in trade means I have won the war despite losing the battle! I shiver with excitement at my own ingenuity....'

+

I smiled broadly.

And then I said to the regular customer.

"The reason you have a boil on your left buttock is because of the tea you're currently drinking. This fellow here deliberately plays chess with you and recommends the tea to keep fleecing

you."

"Serbadosssss!"

The regular jumped up and grabbed the street vendor by the collar.

"I knew something was off! Why would an antique store owner always come up with an ointment for the buttocks! It was your scheme all along!"

"Just wait a minute!? Misunderstanding! It's a misunderstanding! Do I look like a person who would do that to you?! Are you saying that some newcomer, whose origins we don't know, is more reliable than a friend I've known for decades!"

"Of course! Everyone who owns a store in Levanta is a scammer!"

"Even if everyone in the world is a scammer, I alone would be a true friend....!"

A commotion broke out in the store. Customers browsing the displays looked over, wondering what was happening.

But this was just the beginning.

'Snake.'

I pointed to another customer.

'Next.'

[Exposure.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth reveals a secret to you....]

Words wriggled before my eyes.

+

Name: Sackspeener Williamtell

Previous World: Ring World

Afterlife: Port City Levanta, Heaven of Gold

Secret: Regular customer of the general store. This person has long known that the store owner was poisoning the tea. Sackspeener turned drinking the poisoned tea into a kind of trade, making arrangements for an acquaintance to steal items from the store whenever he drank the tea. Even now, if you look behind, a red-haired man on the left is secretly stealing antiques.

Mental State: 'Sorry, friend. There's always someone above the one who's running, and I'm just holding back my tears to let you realize that truth one day....'

+

"In fact, this person knew you were up to no good and went one step further. Turn around now and look to the left, where a red-haired man is stealing antiques every time."

"Sackspeenerrrrr!"

The store owner jumped up and grabbed the regular by the collar.

"I knew it! Every time you came by, something would always go missing! You thief bastard!"

"And you're the one who put poison in the tea, yet you dare point fingers!?"

And so, a real mess began in the store, but I'm sorry to say that it was far from over. I pointed at each customer in the store one by one.

"This person pretends to collaborate with you, but in fact, they've written down all the transactions where you've been cheated and are just waiting for the right moment to report you."

"Dante Legggggggg!"

"The reason you got food poisoning from the double pork steak the day before yesterday is actually because of the pepper this person gifted you. This person soaks the pepper in their saliva, then dries it before gifting it to people. If they receive it for free and are happy about it, they think, 'Hehe, these idiots are happy with my saliva pepper!' and make a profit in the trade."

"Mandeok Cheeeeeeeon!"

"The toilet paper in this store's bathroom actually has a hemorrhoid-inducing agent applied to it. Every time you use the bathroom, this person gains a secret satisfaction."

"Serbadosssss!"

And so, a store in the port city exploded, but of course, my revenge was far from over.

[Exposure.]

[Exposure.]

[Exposure.]

I kindly revealed secrets in stores down the street in order. Soon, screams erupted, clothes were torn, and shouts and cries beautifully decorated the harbor town.

"Kill that scammer!"

"And you cheated me too!"

"Ah, ever tried doing business? The one who gets deceived is the one to blame!"

"Let's see how you like getting beaten up by a real scoundrel!"

"Save me! Somebody save me!"

I hummed a tune while setting one district of the city after another ablaze.

Not with physical fire, but with the flames of the heart.

The residents of the Heaven of Gold were inherently scammers and thieves. There was an endless flow of secrets to expose, sweet as honey.

[Exposure.]

[Exposure.]

[Exposure...]

It didn't take even half a day for those who had chased me calling me a popular spot to kneel and beg for mercy.

"Please, I beg of you...."

Before long, those who had their secrets exposed began to prostrate themselves before me.

Hundreds of them lay face down around the central fountain in the square, with the Mayor of the port city at the very front, pressing his forehead firmly to the ground.

By the way, it had been revealed that he had been tampering with taxes and had been thoroughly beaten by the residents. The Mayor's face had transitioned from flesh-colored to bruised a while ago.

The Mayor was quite the fashion icon. His sense of color was extraordinary, truly a trailblazer in fashion.

"I humbly and fully acknowledge that we were fools compared to you...."

However, the Mayor didn't seem interested in changing his current occupation to a fashionista. He pleaded sorrowfully, his tears soaking the stone pavement.

"In the future, for a hundred years, you will not feel hunger and instead, will feel satiated. On this occasion, we bow our heads and humbly admit defeat...."

"Hmm."

"Thus, we kindly request, oh plague of our lives, that you simply depart from our city....?"

I nodded gravely, like a benevolent conquering monarch.

"I grant it."

At that, the people of the harbor prostrated deeply in gratitude.

"Your grace is boundless...."

[The trade is completed.]

[The trade is completed.]

[The trade is completed.]

[The trade is completed...]

Hundreds of messages popped up in succession.

I had graciously decided to leave the city, and they had managed to send me away. Wasn't this also a splendid deal?

[The other parties are very dissatisfied with this trade.]

[You are very satisfied with this trade.]

[You alone have gained a tremendous advantage!]

Amidst the unending wave of messages, I raised my right hand. Hundreds of shoulders twitched simultaneously.

"Don't worry. I will keep my promise and leave. However, I am curious about one thing."

"What, what might that be?"

"I understand there are more cities than just this one here. As I will be visiting the next city, bring me a map."

The Mayor convulsed.

Thanks to the information revealed by the snake, I could clearly see what the Mayor was thinking. He had realized that I intended to visit every city in this world, setting fires everywhere, and trembled at the catastrophe.

"Of course. Please wait a moment, oh plague of our lives! I will present it to you immediately!"

Of course, it was a thrill of joy.

How could he be the only one to face ruin?

He was eager to personally ensure that other cities in this world were also doomed. The Mayor mobilized all the servants of the mansion to gather all the maps they could find.

"I have brought the newest and most accurate maps available in this city, hoping they will meet the approval of the plague of our lives!"

"Not bad."

"May glory accompany you on your journey! Long live the plague! Long live the ruler who will set this world ablaze, please travel the world and raise the average temperature of the entire world!"

The citizens followed with cries of "Long live! Long live!", their faces streaming with tears, their eyes filled with the glory of meeting a messiah, their voices bidding farewell to a savior, or more precisely, relieved that they were not the only ones left in the gutter.

"Huh."

I tucked the maps under my arm and turned around.

My long coat fluttered, kicking up a cloud of dust, like a gunman exiting a western film. And to ensure hundreds of citizens could hear, I snapped my fingers as if tipping an unseen hat.

"—Adieu."

At that moment, messages exploded.

[The other parties are even more dissatisfied with this trade!]

[The other parties are even more dissatisfied with this trade!]

[The other parties are even more dissatisfied with this trade!]

[The other parties are even more dissatisfied with this trade!]

[The other parties are even more dissatisfied with this trade!]

A radiant sense of fulfillment drenched my being. It was a magnificent sight, a breathtaking scene. The pleasure of a high-quality steak melting on the tongue filled me to the brim. The sky turned red, as if reflecting the juice flowing in my mouth.

-Poor things....

The Guardian Spirit looked at the citizens with pity.

-Why did they have to mess with such an absolute lunatic....

I walked out of the city and strolled leisurely into the wilderness.

Unfolding the map, I saw that the world was vast and the sea even vaster. It was a world mostly comprised of water. But what difficulty would that pose? Having mastered the art of [Stepping Across Water], the sea waters could hardly stand in my way.

Wait for me.

This world ends by my hand.

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins urgently requests a conversation.]

At that moment, a Constellation sent a message. The Cat that Bites Gold Coins. The very constellation that ruled over this world, the Golden Heaven.

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins asks desperately:]

[What exactly is wrong with you??]

No.

What I truly wish to burn is this rotten world, nothing more.

Chapter 347: The Voyage of the Full Moon (4)

---

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins makes you an offer.]

While speaking to me, the Constellation had also shared details about what had been happening behind the scenes.

What was it? It was about the Countess specifically— the judge who would be watching from the 70th-floor lobby at this very moment.

The situation the Constellation described was quite surprising.

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins earnestly requests that you and your judge somewhat agree to a deal.]

As it turned out, the Countess, this gentlewoman, was bargaining with a Constellation!

Just as the Paladin had received a skill from the God of Snakes, the Countess had obtained a skill from the God of Commerce.

And that God of Commerce was the Constellation that governed the 72nd floor, the Heaven of Gold, known as 'The Cat that Bites Gold Coins.'

'Well, that figures.'

I found it easy to accept.

There were quite a few similarities between the skills held by the Countess and the laws of the Heaven of Gold which were too coincidental to be mere happenstance.

'The Countess can nearly summon any item through bargaining with her skill. The price is up to the trader. Moreover, when the [World Peace] item was purchased, the message [The world was originally peaceful!] appeared...'

In short, a skill that irritates the Countess.

The more the Countess is dissatisfied, the more The Cat that Bites Gold Coins is satisfied. Haven't we seen this scenario quite often? Teasing and provoking like this is actually the essence of the skill.

Meaning...

"...It seems the Countess is quite angry with you."

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins begs you to do something about it!]

For a long time, a very long and enduring period, the Countess had been using the skills of the God of Commerce.

Each time, she must have been mocked and thoroughly provoked.

Just like when I arrived in the port city of Levanta and faced humiliation right away. No, she must have been subjected to similar antics for years on end.

In short, the current mental state of the Countess wasn't 'Oh, how thankful I am to you, whoever and wherever you may be, for bestowing such a skill upon me.' Rather, it was quite far from it.

Instead, it was closer to 'I didn't know where you lived all this time, but now that I do, it's really good!'

In other words, she had finally encountered her sworn enemy!

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins weeps since the judge seems ready to extract every last bit of marrow from its bones.]

Of course, the Countess had no intention of letting such an opportunity slip by.

First, the Countess sought a means to contact the God of Commerce. Thanks to the skill, she could purchase anything she desired. And upon searching, she found an item in the product list called [A Phone Call with the God of Commerce].

Bingo.

With an almost infinite array of items, she would never have found it without using the search function.

Oh, and by the way, [Product Search] is also a paid item. It's an essential item that you have to subscribe to on a monthly basis. You can imagine what kind of rip-off the Countess had been under all these years.

『Hello.』

The Countess spent a fortune to make the call.

『Hello. This is the Cat with a Grin General Store. May I ask who's calling?』

『I am a merchant known as the Countess from the World of the Lone Child. I received a skill in my youth and prospered, but now it seems you are the one who created it.』

The Countess had roughly guessed the situation the moment she was summoned as a judge. And right when I was being fooled, she grasped the entire truth. Her skill, the laws of the Heaven of Gold, the similarities between the two, and so on.

And so, she realized that her skill must have originated from the master of the Heaven of Gold.

『Is that so? What's the name of the skill?』

『Cat's General Store.』

『Ah, yes. That's a skill we developed and distributed.』

Her realization was correct.

『Currently, the customer who has called... Oh my, look at the points accumulated! Such a valuable customer. You've always used the services of the Cat with a Grin General Store. Are you calling to express your gratitude for our services?』

『Oh. Certainly. I feel a tremendous gratitude towards you.』

『No need to mention it! By the way, the phone call item you're currently using is charged by the minute. The first minute is free. After that, a separate call charge applies per minute. Please understand.』

The Countess warned leisurely.

『The King of Death has gone to the world you rule.』

『What?』

『I am the judge who will decide whether the King of Death passes or fails. In other words, whether the King of Death will be stuck in your world forever is entirely up to me.』

『Excuse me, but I'm not quite sure what you mean....』

『Oh, don't worry. You'll find out soon enough.』

Click.

The Countess hung up without a moment's hesitation.

At this point, I was wandering through alleys. Damply. Writhing in terrible hunger. Soon, I entered an antique shop and did what I could.

The Countess was lying on a sofa, munching on potato chips. It was around that time that a phone appeared out of thin air and rang.

『Countess speaking.』

『Hello, customer. We've verified the information you provided. We truly appreciate you informing us in advance before we could contact you.』

『It's what I paid for.』

『Ah, customer. We've decided to refund the cost incurred for purchasing the phone call item. We'll also cover any additional charges. We sincerely apologize for not being able to anticipate your needs in advance.』

In a short time, the God of Commerce's tone became quite polite.

『So, I assume you're calling because you want to negotiate about the stage clearance of this King of Death, correct?』

『You're getting to the point. That's good.』

『What would you like in return?』

『You're getting to the point, but it's not quite the tempo I want yet.』

『Excuse me?』

『Let's talk again a bit later.』

The Countess ended the call.

At this point, I was sweeping through the streets after devouring the antique shop. My elegant demeanor was akin to the Pied Piper leading a horde of tiny mice, the difference being that these mice were fighting among themselves instead of jumping into a river, and they were eagerly signing up for a thumping. This thumping quickly became a city-wide trend, jumping from street to street in no time.

Ring-ring!

『Countess speaking.』

『If we've ever upset you or been inadvertently rude while you were using our services, we sincerely apologize, customer.』

The representative's voice was urgent.

『We're currently looking for the manager as quickly as possible. The employee responsible for serving you will be immediately transferred, and we'll comply with any other requests you might have.』

『That's quite prompt of you. I appreciate it.』

In the brief interlude, the God of Commerce's manners improved significantly.

『However, the tempo isn't quite there yet.』

Click.

The trend of thumping that started in the city reached its peak at the Mayor's mansion. The guards, who were exposed for stealing from each other, caused chaos, and the Mayor, who rushed out in surprise, was struck by a betrayal from a loved one. Out of respect for the Mayor and his spouse, I won't divulge the secrets I exposed.

Ring-ring-ring!

The phone rang like mad.

『Countess speaking.』

『We were wrong. We're sorry. Please forgive us!』

『Now we're getting somewhere.』

『Currently, the entire staff of our store is prostrating! I'm calling you while bowing, customer! If you doubt it, we can immediately connect a video call!』

Unprompted, the phone call upgraded to a video call. In the hologram that unfolded before the Countess, indeed, dozens... no, scores of cats were bowing.

For a brief 0.5 seconds, even the Countess was at a loss for words at the adorable yet grotesque scene.

That's right. The God of Commerce was a cat. Not just one cat, but dozens! Dozens of cats working together at the 'Cat with a Grin General Store', that was The Cat that Bites Gold Coins.

However, the Countess wasn't generous enough to forget what these creatures had done even after being charmed by their cute appearances. Her life, tormented by this skill, had been too bitter, like 99.9% cocoa chocolate.

『What a sight. Truly a spectacle.』

『Meow! Meow! Meow!』

『By now, you must have realized that friend of ours is a lunatic. If a lunatic could achieve perfection, and be complete, then it would be very appropriate to call him a complete lunatic. Now, you all understand that whether this complete lunatic will be eternally trapped in the Heaven of Gold or not depends on my mood. If you don't want to rot there, cooperate.』

This cat...

『If you're going to cooperate anyway, do it with gusto. That's your specialty, isn't it? I've seen the lunacy you unleashed in the port city. But I'm confident your lunacy will cross rivers and seas to shake the world. I hope you continue doing what you've been doing until I achieve a 'satisfactory negotiation'.』

Holograms beyond holograms showed cats bowing. Colorful cats trembled.

『Didn't I say? You're a good friend.』

The Countess smiled nonchalantly.

『Let's make sure our friendship becomes a model example in history for half a millennium.』

The cats meowed out loudly.

Chapter 348: The Voyage of the Full Moon (5)

---

What I ended up doing was... Well, my friend told me to keep doing what I've been doing, right? For the sake of our friendship, I couldn't see why I shouldn't heed such a request.

To be more specific about what I was doing.

"We acknowledge our complete defeat..."

I was going around the world, making the mayors of cities kneel.

"Here, we offer these tribute items as a sign of our submission. Please, look upon our city with mercy..."

A hundred citizens offered me a deal at the same time. The deal? It was nothing much. I would not visit their city again for the next six months, and in return, the citizens would bow deeply to me.

[The port city of Batarran acknowledges its defeat to you.]

[With this, you have become a merchant who has made 6 cities kneel.]

[The citizens of the city are very dissatisfied with this trade!]

[You are very satisfied with this trade.]

[Once again, you alone have reaped tremendous benefits.]

Due to the irregular known as me, the Heaven of Gold was in ruins.

It was akin to a kind of famine.

The cities I visited would inevitably have their citizens' secrets exposed. Unable to endure it, the citizens would surrender unconditionally, experiencing a desperate hunger.

In essence, a year of famine had hit the city.

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins screams for you to stop!]

With me suddenly becoming a moving famine, The Cat that Bites Gold Coins was driven further into a corner.

6 port cities had already fallen. Regrettably, there was no one who could stop me.

There were times when those capable of fighting swarmed in droves, attracted by the bounty on me. A group of seven mercenaries, each flaunting a tiger fur cloak, made an offer.

[A medium-sized trading company 'Those Who Can Fight' requests a trade.]

[1. For 30 minutes starting now, both parties agree to exchange physical blows.]

[2. After 30 minutes, a total settlement will be conducted.]

[3. At the time of settlement, the amount of physical damage received from the opponent will be deemed as a loss.]

[4. The amount of physical damage dealt to the opponent will be considered as a gain...]

This is the Heaven of Gold. Even for a brawl, mutual consent is required, and a contract must outline that agreement.

The outcome?

Is there even a need to spell it out? I mean, on the other side of the hologram, the God of Commerce was still shedding tears, while the Countess continued to munch on potato chips. Could there be a clearer picture of who won and who lost?

『The sixth city has been smoothly conquered. What a joyous occasion.』

『Meow... Meow...』

『How many cities are left in that world now? Seven? Six? Even if six hundred remained, it's just a matter of time.』

For reference, this conversation wasn't a recorded one but a live video. With each city I swept through, the Countess would make a deal with the God of Commerce and 'pluck something' from it. This live conversation was also a product of looting.

Our tower's economic manager is quite thrifty, isn't she...

『It's about time to admit a complete defeat. Any further resistance will only ruin your paradise. Right now, the King of Death may generously accept a deep bow and leave, but who knows what will happen in the future? I don't even know."

『What have we ever done to you?!』

The cats exploded in outrage.

『We were merely continuing our small business! Meow! This is the tyranny and violence against a great Constellation! We won't stay silent! Meow! We will formally protest!』

『What did you do wrong, you ask? First off, you imposed a penalty where cat ears sprout on my head if I use the skill more than a set number of times a day.』

『What's the problem with that! Cat ears! Aren't they cute!』

『Also, there was a penalty where a cat tail would grow if I used the General Store too many times.』

『Cat tails are the epitome of perfect curves, both anatomically and evolutionarily! The fact that we've given even worthless humans a chance to taste such a divine creation should be grounds for gratitude!』

『Purchasing a product named World Peace only to be mocked by you.』

『Hey, any grown-up seriously buying a product named World Peace is already laughable. We added that phrase as a little joke, not to be taken too seriously. Meow. Isn't that also an experience and a lesson?』

The cats vigorously waved their arms in agreement.

『Exactly!』

『That's right, meow!』

『Countess or Count, what kind of customer is that? It's not even funny! We're more like their mentors!』

『Be thankful! Hurry up and thank us for our existence! Bow your head and thank us for bestowing the skill and for imposing penalties! It's a bow! Sincerely offer a deep bow!』

『Cats have their pride too!』

『Meow! Meow! Meow!』

The Countess nodded deeply.

『I believe you now fully understand why I want to punish these double cats, Kim Gong-Ja.』

Friend, you seem to have a lot built up...

"Hmm."

It was already night.

After subduing the seventh city, I unfolded the map.

Following the plan mentioned by the Countess, it would be easy to subjugate dozens, even hundreds of cities. It would be time-consuming, but not difficult to accomplish.

However,

"This is strange."

The Countess tilted her head curiously on the other side of the hologram.

『What do you mean?』

"The Cat that Bites Gold Coins... In other words, the God of Commerce, is nowhere to be seen. Even though it seems like I'm just wandering around, I've been heading to major cities. The seventh city I just conquered, the sixth port, was the most prosperous city in this world."

In the Heaven of Gold, there are only port cities.

To facilitate trade, the world was intentionally designed this way, or perhaps it's because most of the world is water. Small archipelagos were clustered together, and towns and cities were established along the coastlines.

There's no such thing as inland. There are mountains, but no villages are set upon them. Without exception, [all places where people live are adjacent to the sea].

"I thought I would see the God of Commerce in the largest city."

『See? What do you mean by see?』

"Exactly what it sounds like. The owner of the last stage was a tree. A World Tree large enough to cover an entire city and more. If it's heaven, wouldn't it make sense to always see the god?"

『Hmm...』

The Countess furrowed her brows as if it was a novel idea she had never considered and probably never would have in the future.

『That's an interesting perspective.』

"Yes, well. So, I thought the God of Commerce's headquarters would be in the largest city. But no matter how thoroughly I searched, there was nothing. Strange, isn't it?"

『Perhaps the last stage was special? Gods vary. These ones probably built a hideout far away and are snickering, watching humans ruin each other.』

"Is that so?"

『Absolutely, no doubt about it.』

I glanced at the hologram.

『What are you looking at?!』

The cats flinched.

『Looking at us won't scare us! We're not afraid of the likes of you!』

『 Really! We're not scared at all! 』

『 We're your meowsters! 』

『 Be grateful! Bow down and thank us for giving you the skill, for imposing penalties, thank us deeply, it's a bow! Bow sincerely! 』

『 Cats have their dignity! 』

『 Meow! Meow! Meow! 』

What would their rallying cry be like...

For now, although they look like cats, they are Constellations. Constellations powerful enough to govern the 70th floor area. I wondered if they might betray their composure, but of course, they made no such basic mistake.

" ....."

I carefully surveyed my surroundings. The waves lapped at the dock.

Come to think of it, when I first arrived at this stage, I was also at the dock. Although, back then, I turned my gaze towards the street instead of the sea. [Every village is a port]. Could there be a clue hidden in that statement?

'The Cat that Bites Gold Coins. The Cat that Bites Gold Coins. Gold coins...'

Lost in thought, I wandered along the shoreline when suddenly, I saw the moon rising in the night sky.

It was a full moon.

"....."

A thought flashed through my mind.

I carefully managed my expression, ensuring no emotions showed through, and casually said to the Countess.

"Nisha."

『Hm? It's the first time you're calling me by my real name. Well, you've been using Patricia's real name for a while now. It's about time, I suppose. With this, you are the only person who calls both Patricia and me by our real names. Usually, those close to me utterly despise Patricia, and those close to Patricia despise me, but you're quite unique.』

"It's a great honor. Anyway, Nisha. You're watching me like watching a movie over there, right? Can you do a [rewind] by any chance?"

『Hmm? Perhaps. Why not?』

The Countess turned her head and spoke.

Chatter. Although it didn't show on my hologram, she was obviously consulting with the [Staff of Time Immemorial] in some blind spot.

Soon, the Countess looked back at me.

『It's possible.』

"Then, although it might be a bit of a hassle, could you check the night skies of last night, the night before, three nights ago, and four nights ago for me? There's something I want to verify."

『That sounds more productive than munching on potato chips. Alright.』

The Countess waved her fan and scanned the air. Her eyes skimmed through the void.

Although invisible to me, the Countess was currently viewing several days' worth of footage.

"Are you watching?"

『I've got them all up.』

"Please check the moon."

The cats turned to me in unison.

But it was too late. Without any need to hide my emotions any longer, I immediately asked.

"Is there any change in the shape of the moon?"

『.....』

"By any chance, is it continuously a full moon without any change?"

The Countess slowly nodded.

『That's correct. Not a single movement. A pristine full moon.』

Then it's as I thought.

『Meow! Now that I think about it, negotiating might not be so bad after all...!』

『Perhaps there's really a condition to an unconditional surrender, right?』

『We will now seriously engage in surrender negotiations!』

The cats began to panic. The Countess tilted her head in confusion, not understanding the situation.

However, I paid no mind and enhanced my eyesight, infusing it with aura. With a vision that surpassed human limits, I gazed up at the full moon.

'Nothing.'

Regrettably, nothing could be found on the surface of the moon.

No, in fact, it wasn't even a real moon. Unlike Earth's moon, this one had a pristine surface. It wasn't even a sphere but a flat surface. It was merely something that took on the shape of the moon.

'That place isn't a hideout. There are no cats there. So, where...'

I quickly scanned the surroundings.

Based on my reasoning,

1. Each heaven has a sovereign constellation that rules over it.
2. Souls can always feel and see that constellation, wherever they are.
3. The souls here are invariably adjacent to the sea.
4. Therefore, the constellation might be residing in the sea.

If the sea itself were the constellation, all problems would be solved. However, the constellation of the 72nd floor is [Cats], not [the Sea]. Nor is it any creature related to the sea.

Could it be living in the deep sea? Maybe it built a deep-sea base in the depths of the ocean, or perhaps it's roaming around in a submarine. That could be possible. But in that case, souls wouldn't be able to feel or see the constellation at all times.

'A god that can be easily seen by just looking from the seaside.'

The sea waves crashed.

'Not in the deep sea, nor in some distant ocean.'

The dark night sea.

In the middle of the pitch-black surface, brightly.

'Just something that anyone living in a seaside village can easily see.'

The full moon.

The moon in the night sky was reflecting off the water, white and bright.

As if it were a round gold coin.

"Indeed."

I smiled.

"Found it."

And without hesitation, I stepped towards the sea. Splash! Ripples formed around me. The ripples didn't intensify beyond a gentle level. Splash! Splash! I trode across the surface towards the spot illuminated by the full moon.

『Customer! Madam Countess! VIP client! We'll offer a 50% discount on all items from now on! Isn't that enough? Would you please accept our surrender!?』

『60%! 70%! 80%!』

『Up to a 90% discount! Just please stop your friend...!』

『Meowwww?!!』

The cats chorused in alarm.

『No, no! Wait, a deal! Let's make a deal!』

As I dove towards the moonlit surface, surprisingly, it wasn't the cold seawater that greeted my face and body.

Only for a moment did I feel the touch of water on the surface.

Soon after, a gravity distinctly different from that of the water's embrace caught me.

『Meow, meow, meow, he's here?!』

I landed, thud, on solid ground.

There was no dragon palace under the sea. The moon reflected on the surface was a kind of portal, a gate. Passing through the moon on the water surface led directly to the abode where the God of Commerce reigned. The [Gold Coin] was the [Full Moon], and 'The Cat that Bites Gold Coins' was, in fact, 'The Cat that Lives on the Full Moon.'

『Emergency! Emergency!』

『What should we do...?』

『Don't panic, meow! A cat doesn't die only once!』

『It's all over now!』

In a pristine white space, cats gathered. The cats huddled close together, trembling and shivering. The colorful cats huddling and shivering together had a touch of poignancy, albeit not entirely so.

"Hmm."

I smiled. After all, I was visiting as our tower's premier lunatic.

"Good evening, brethren."

And a lunatic must maintain the decorum only a lunatic can.

"Do you perhaps know the way?"

Chapter 349: The Voyage of the Full Moon (6)

---

When I asked if they knew the way, the cats' reaction was simple. The cats who called themselves the God of Commerce, were trembling yet prostrated themselves without a moment's hesitation.

"We shall surrender!"

Indeed, they knew their place.

"However, if we were to fall completely, it wouldn't be just one or two beings left destitute on the streets! It's not just for our own survival that we struggle, but for all the faithful people across the worlds and the divine citizens of this world... Please, have mercy on us..."

"Please have mercy on us!"

The twenty-four cats simultaneously begged for forgiveness.

There was something deeply moving about the sight of the differently colored cats bowing their heads in unison.

But my heart had become far too sullied to live by sentiment alone.

"Is that the truth, you serpent?"

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth reveals their innermost thoughts in a single sentence.]

As the serpent hissed, text floated before my eyes.

+

Mental State: 'Followers and divine citizens be damned, we're about to die here, what do we care!'

+

I knew it would be like this.

I clicked my tongue in disapproval.

"You all are consistently petty...."

"Meow! Why should a serpent submit to a mere human?! Because of it, we can't deceive or negotiate! This is an outrageous abuse of power... it shouldn't be allowed!"

The cats were outraged. Being a Constellation that primarily dealt in deceit, they seemed to have a natural aversion to Hisimet Cretsu. Caught off guard by the insult, Hisimet Cretsu, now infuriated, raised its head and hissed loudly.

The cats jumped in shock.

"Meow!?"

"S-So scary!"

"It's terrifying...!"

"Ah, look at that dreadful green! Such a color and curve should not be tolerated in this universe! Its mere existence is an insult to all creation...!!"

"Hisss!"

"Meowww?! Spare us, spare us!"

"The green alien is trying to eat us! Help! Help-!"

What a mess this has become.

Or more accurately, a cat mess....

Since 'cat mess' is a bit weird, let's just call it a 'meow mess.' Isn't that cute?

"My friend seems to have fallen into some strange thoughts again. Proceed with the negotiation."

The Countess intervened just in time. Of course, she was watching the spectacle live through the hologram.

"While you do desire unconditional surrender, we have no intention of extorting more than what's reasonable from you. Anyway, that place is a kind of heaven, and you all are its administrators, right? It's only right to preserve that status."

"Meow. So, what do you desire...? A fair monetary compensation or periodic tribute?"

"No, what I desire is only one thing, and that is your utter humiliation."

The Countess showcased the character that made her the wealthiest in the tower without any reservation.

Let's just call it a 'character flaw.'

"Cu-Customer...?"

"I have no intention of ruining the economic structure of the Heaven of Gold. Nor do I plan on ruining other worlds. It wouldn't be fair for the administrators of heaven to favor our tower alone, wouldn't it? I'm saying, once again, I just wish you'd eat shit."

"Eek...!"

Shivering at the Countess's character flaw, I couldn't bring myself to sympathize with the cats, considering they were the ones who nurtured such a personality.

What goes around comes around. Karma. A meow punch. All these are among my top three favorite phrases.

"Come when I call you. Perform tricks if I ask you to, and if I command you to open a snack bag, then do it. Of course, you cannot lie to me and must always speak the truth. And that's not all. If I tell you to meow, you meow, and if I get sick of it and tell you to bark, then bark willingly."

The cats trembled.

"What outrageous demands!"

"To be born with a spine like a top and then to utter a dog's bark is the ultimate disgrace!"

"Indeed! Dogs are inferior beings that can't even stretch their backs! There are the Three Bonds and the Five Constant Virtues, we can't possibly use the language of dogs!"

So, these beings are a Constellation of deception, deriving pleasure from tricking others and looking down on dogs as an act of speciesism. At this point, calling them cats might be an insult to the cats of our world.

The Countess quietly listened to the cats' protests and then ended all arguments with just two sentences.

"If you don't like it, just let the King of Death expose all your secrets."

"From now on, we are your eternal dogs."

The twenty-four cats bowed deeply to the hologram.

"In fact, we have long admired the ways of dogs and have always wanted to say 'woof' instead of 'meow.'"

"Woof woof! This feels much more affectionate and fitting!"

"Having been bestowed with the ways of 'woof' and the teachings of 'bark' by your graciousness, we finally feel liberated from barbaric customs and embraced by the Great Way. Mrow!"

Indeed....

I'm not exactly sure what 'indeed' refers to, but it seems like the most appropriate word to describe the current situation....

[The 'Gold-Biting Cats' surrender to you.]

The negotiation between the Countess and the God of Commerce continued with various minor skirmishes. I didn't pay much attention to it.

It was just the process of refining the minutiae in the surrender document leaving no room for misunderstanding, and well, the Countess would handle it.

What was important to me was what came next. After over three hours of discussion, a perfect surrender document was finally drafted, and the Countess, beaming with a smile, looked my way.

"Good work, King of Death."

"It was nothing."

Unlike the joyous Countess, the cats were completely exhausted and lay sprawled on the floor.

"There was a demon among us...."

"We might need to reconsider our service levels to our customers...."

How much had they been fleeced to end up like this?

I was relieved that the Countess was on my side. If she were an enemy, the Paladin would be too, and not just the economic structure of the tower, but the security forces would be against me as well.

Game over. The detailed assassination plans and the capital to execute them would just be the icing on the cake. Truly sinister.

"Thanks to you, I've fulfilled a wish I never thought possible in my lifetime. They say 'what's the use of having friends,' but clearly, I'm enjoying luxury because of a friend."

"I enjoyed it too."

"And now, we must end these enjoyable times."

The Countess closed her fan and smiled.

"It's time to return, King of Death."

A message resounded in my head.

[The judge you've chosen has given you a passing mark!]

[You have gained the recognition of your judge!]

[You may declare Stage Clear at any time.]

There was no reason to hesitate.

I quietly declared Stage Clear in my mind, and in response, a yellow light enveloped me.

[You have subdued the 'Gold-Biting Cats.']

[Hidden Stage Cleared!]

[You will be transferred to the 70th floor.]

And then, I opened my eyes.

"Welcome back."

Upon opening my eyes, the first thing to greet me was still the Countess, languidly reclining on the sofa. She slowly waved her fan and said to me,

"I really wanted to say this face-to-face. Congratulations on your clear, Kim Gong-Ja."

We had broken through the 72nd floor.

The completion of the stage didn't mean the Countess immediately left.

Perhaps knowing that leaving here would erase her memories? The tower's laws dictate that all memories related to the Pillar, namely the [Staff of Time Immemorial], must be distorted. Perhaps that's why the Countess leisurely lounged around.

"I'm always in work mode because of the Merchants Union, 24/7. No rest for me."

The Countess said.

"Honestly, being here is like a free vacation. The flow of time is even different from Babylon, making it the ultimate vacation spot."

"What's the point of resting here if your memories are going to be erased anyway?"

"If it's going to be erased, I better enjoy myself more before that happens."

The Countess seemed serious. Well, I wasn't in a hurry either. I thought it might be a good opportunity to chat and get closer to the Countess.

".....?"

And during our conversation, we stumbled upon a quite astonishing fact.

"You knew about Patricia's assassination plans?!"

"Of course."

The Countess said it as if it was the most natural thing.

"Patricia and I have no secrets from each other. We don't needlessly blab about everything, but we never blur the line between what's necessary and unnecessary. We both have the intellect for that, and we've made that promise. The most important thing is the will to keep that promise. I trust Patricia's will."

The certainty in the Countess's expression was undeniable.

Honestly, I was taken aback.

"Uh... I don't know if I should say this, but Patricia probably also has, well, of course, it's just a plan, but a plan to assassinate Nisha too?"

"Of course. To take control of the entire tower on behalf of the Five Major Guilds, Patricia would first need to conquer the Sang-Ryun. And to do that, she'd need to start with me."

"Good heavens."

As I stammered, the Countess chuckled as if amused by my reaction.

"It's an old story. I was the one who told Patricia first. If she ever decided to become a dictator, she should start by taking my head before killing others."

"....."

"When would she have the courage to carry out a bloody purge without that kind of resolve? It was a kind of constraint. Honestly, without the chains I had placed, Patricia would have exploded long ago. Patricia is a deep thinker and may seem indecisive at first, but once she's determined, she goes straight ahead regardless of what happens."

I was momentarily lost for words.

My silence wasn't for no reason.

Neither the Paladin nor the Countess knew. Not a past event, but a secret buried in the cycle of time.

Only I remembered it.

'...The Countess was the first to die.'

The tragedy that unfolded on the 12th floor.

'When I first reached the 12th floor, the Paladin accepted the choice offered by the [Demon King of Autumn Rain]. She colluded with the Demon King. And we, the leaders of the Five Major Guilds, were hunted down by the Demon King one by one...'

When the Demon King swung his sword, red rays burned everything in their path. The first thing destroyed by that sword was the imperial audience hall of the Aegim Empire, and the person in that hall was the Countess.

The Paladin, Patricia, was the first to kill the Countess.

As promised.

"Hm? Your expression is odd. Is something bothering you?"

"...No, it's nothing."

It's okay.

In this timeline, it's nothing more than an event that hasn't happened.

The [Demon King of Autumn Rain] has become a Preta. I call the Paladin Patricia. The Countess can be called Nisha. And both of them call me Kim Gong-Ja.

Everything has changed.

'But...'

But what I once thought were mere coincidences, many events, now looking back, are understood in directions I never thought of before. They've become comprehensible.

It's... How should I say?

'A strange feeling.'

I realized anew. Eventually, coincidence is just a name I temporarily attach to the inevitabilities I don't know.

What I do, what I want to do, might just be the process of changing those many coincidences, one by one, bit by bit, sip by sip, into inevitabilities.

It must be so. I felt that this process was not at all different from turning each and every one into myself.

"Uh. Sorry to interrupt your enjoyable conversation."

A voice intruded beside us.

"This isn't a holiday resort."

The Pillar, hiding silver blades in its eyes.

The [Staff of Time Immemorial], holding a long staff, watched us.

"King of Death. It's time to ascend to the 73rd floor."

That's right.

Another heaven was waiting for me.

Volume 15 – Chapters 350-375

Chapter 350: The White Ending (1)

---

Although I grandly stated that it was time to ascend to another heaven, in reality, the 73rd and 74th floors were rather uneventful.

Literally, as soon as I set foot on the stage, I was deemed 'passed.'

"Ah, come on. I was just thoroughly defeated by you not long ago, and now I'm supposed to judge you? Just go on up already."

The examiner of the 73rd floor was Liǎofàn, the Celestial Martial Clan Master, Viper.

Viper was summoned by the [Staff of Time Immemorial] and tasked with the role of being my judge. With a grimace, he waved his hand dismissively.

"A loser must know his place. Having fought a life-or-death battle and still having my head intact, the least I can do is boost the winner's morale and make him happy! You don't even need my approval to pass."

Thus, the 73rd floor was cleared in about 2 seconds.

Ah, for reference, the 73rd floor was a place called the Heaven of Martial Arts. If everything in the Heaven of Gold revolved around trade, all matters here were settled through duels.

A kind of Valhalla. A resting place for souls who wished to wield their swords even in death. Perhaps it was the heaven for peculiar martial fanatics like the Sword Emperor when they died in the tower?

[The judge you've chosen has given you a passing mark!]

[You have gained the recognition of your judge!]

Thank you for the swift clearance.

"Doesn't it bother you that you'll lose the memory of being here?"

"Huh? How many memories do people forget in a lifetime? It doesn't matter, it doesn't matter."

Viper coolly departed, as if he truly had no regrets. Unlike the Countess, who hesitated to the very end, valuing her memories dearly, Viper's personality was starkly different.

Well, if I ever feel like fighting a strong opponent, I can always come back to the 73rd floor. Duels have been plentiful so far, so there's no immediate regret.

As for the next stage, the 74th floor...

"Ahaha! A heaven, you say! What an intriguing concept for a place!"

You could guess who it was just by the laughter; it was Bambolina, the Heretic Inquisitor. Upon hearing the whole story from the [Staff of Time Immemorial], Bambolina laughed heartily.

"However, if the stage clear condition solely depends on my approval, there's no need to waste time. Master, please proceed without delay!"

Even after meeting me and undergoing various changes, the Heretic Inquisitor still prioritized efficiency. He had no interest in [The hidden secrets of the stage] or [Quests that genuinely impress her]. Smiling brightly, he'd ask, 'That's great! And what benefits does it bring?'

The Heretic Inquisitor was more interested in practical aspects.

"It's remarkable how you've subdued several Constellations in such a short time! Perhaps it's time to change your alias from King of Death to the Salty Constellation Master?"

His eyes sparkled like shooting stars.

"Participating in the auction as [Goddess of Protection] is also commendable. What do you think, Master? Why not bestow one of the stages Hwiya owns to Hamusutra? Then the Constellations we can utilize in our tower would include [Goddess of Protection], [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth], [The Ruin-Harvesting Cow], [The Muscle Pig Dreaming of Parricide], [The Holed-Up Head Librarian], and so on. It would be a formidable force!"

"Uh... no, that's a bit difficult."

I thought to myself how Uburka's Constellation name was dreadful and replied.

"I want Hamusutra to experience human life. At least for several decades. It would be a great help if Hamusutra returned as [The Holed-Up Head Librarian], but that wouldn't benefit Hamusutra's growth. Unless he wants it himself."

"Hmm... Indeed. If that's Master's wish, then there's no helping it..."

Sensing my firm stance, the Heretic Inquisitor didn't press further and merely sighed.

Fundamentally, the Heretic Inquisitor respected my wishes absolutely. To put it extremely, if I ordered him to become a Constellation, he'd likely respond with, 'Understood! Just give me 30 years!'

The 74th floor, where the Heretic Inquisitor served as the judge, was the Heaven of Laws.

Unlike the Heaven of Martial Arts, where disputes were resolved through duels, this place was a bit more complex.

According to the information leaked by Hisimet Cretsu, the laws of the Heaven of Laws were as follows:

+

[Heaven of Laws]

Floor: 74th

Constellation: 'The Heretic Judge'

Difficulty: C~A+

Description (Lv.1): A world where everything is governed by laws. Every resident of this world can create a world law comparable to physical laws, but only once in their lifetime.

Here, everyone has the power to legislate once in their lifetime.

Someone might establish a law that 'fighting among each other is forever prohibited.' And then, it would indeed be prohibited! However, if someone else declares, 'I nullify the law that prohibits fighting among each other,' that law would be immediately invalidated.

Once invalidated, it's over! You can't legislate twice in a lifetime, so you must carefully consider how to use your one-time power.

Not just any law can be established. There are a few exceptions that are not allowed.

To give three examples of impossible laws:

-No tyrants allowed! Laws that negate others' legislative rights are not recognized. (e.g., 'Only I can create laws in this world.')

-No clever Aladdins allowed! Laws that indefinitely increase your one-time legislative power are also forbidden. (e.g., 'I can legislate 100 times.')

-No greedy ones allowed! It's allowed to invalidate another's law, but you cannot nullify more than two laws at once. (e.g., 'I remove all laws established so far.')

Excluding these exceptions, you can wish for anything!

Of course, that's only if others recognize your law. There's always someone who might use their once-in-a-lifetime authority just because they dislike you.

Choose wisely!

+

...Just reading the information made me realize what a tricky heaven this was.

'How on earth do I clear this when I can't even see a clear path?'

What kind of absurd laws might be lurking?

For example, there's bound to be a law like [The use of Aura is prohibited]. There are far more people who can't use Aura than those who can. It's a matter of simple majority. That means I'd lose my biggest weapon right from the start.

And that's not all. There's a high probability that a law like [The use of skills is prohibited] has been established.

It might not seem like it since I'm surrounded by monstrous hunters, but acquiring even a single skill is a rare event. Most people don't have skills.

Would people really tolerate the use of skills? Of course not. Even if they did, there'd at least be a law like [Skills cannot be used to harm others].

'It's best not to stay in such dangerous places for too long!'

As the saying goes, the wise man does not expose himself needlessly to danger.

Being a Confucian scholar, I should be especially cautious. What nonsense am I spouting? Anyway, I obediently accepted the Heretic Inquisitor's stamp of approval.

[The judge you've chosen has given you a passing mark!]

[You have gained the recognition of your judge!]

The Heretic Inquisitor vanished with a "Good luck! Ahaha!" leaving his laughter to echo in his absence. Following Viper, another lightning-fast clearance was achieved.

At this point, you might grasp the strategy I employed in the 70th-floor region.

Stay if interested. Deepen the exploration if necessary. But if there's no need, gladly skip.

Unless something particularly extraordinary happened, I intended to skip the 75th floor as well. So, it's easy to guess that something out of the ordinary did happen on the 75th floor.

Let me introduce the Hunter summoned as the judge of the 75th floor.

"Wh-where is this? Why was I suddenly summoned? Eek... Who are you!? Kidnapping me now won't affect the operation of the Alchemy Castle! I'm only in charge of developing potions; I don't deal with sales or distribution! I'm content just having my shop on the 20th floor... Why won't the world even consider my small wish!?"

The Hunter, upon being summoned, covered her head as if this wasn't her first time experiencing such a thing.

It might seem like an overreaction, but it was justified.

Not only I, but also the Countess and other Guild Masters acknowledged this Hunter's talent. Though she didn't wield a sword on the front lines, she contributed to the tower's conquest as much as anyone else. She was still contributing in real-time, and most importantly, played a crucial role in breaking through the [The Veritable Records of the Heavenly Demon].

"...Huh? Kim Gong-Ja?"

The Apothecary belatedly realized my presence and stared blankly.

"Where have I been brought to...?"

I greeted her with a broad smile.

"Welcome. This is the entrance to the afterlife."

The Apothecary's face turned pale.

Why? It's not exactly a lie, is it?

---

My little joke came back to me as a fierce backlash.

The Apothecary, not even considering the possibility that I was lying about this being the gateway to the afterlife, nearly fainted upon hearing it. Naturally, once she regained her senses and understood the situation, she was coldly furious with me.

Why say 'coldly' furious and not 'blazingly' furious? Well, because the Apothecary's anger went something like this:

"From now on, I will cease the supply of special potions to you."

"I apologize!"

The Apothecary looked down at me through her frosted glasses.

"I will remove the strawberry flavor from the potions provided specifically to you. How about mugwort flavor? Interested in spinach? Frog eye? Mosquito wing? Or shall I replicate the taste of nasal mucus on the fourth day of a flu?"

"Th-That fantasy flavor from the world's most famous fantasy novel!"

E/D note: Harry potter

"Sigh..."

The Apothecary shook his head in disapproval.

It felt like she was dealing with a mischievous kid next door. Considering I was actually curious about the nasal mucus potion, it wasn't entirely the wrong treatment.

Anything can be an experience. To put it fancily, it's an experience. Ex-perience. Doesn't it sound a bit like a magic spell?

"Anyway, I understand what I need to do. It's quite surprising that there are heavens, multiple ones at that, in the tower..."

Originally, the tower was a place of wonders. The Apothecary murmured softly.

Then, she brought up something no one summoned as a judge had mentioned before, but something that everyone must have thought about at some point.

"Kim Gong-Ja, will we be sent to one of these places when we die?"

"....."

"Will we be sent here, our memories cleared, forgetting our pasts like previous lives, scattered among the nine heavens based on our personalities and desires?"

I was momentarily at a loss for words.

The Apothecary's tone carried not so much a fear of death but a deeper sorrow at the thought of being scattered from the current world. Forgetfulness and farewells. After all, death is merely a combination of those two words.

"Ugh."

The Apothecary, lost in thought, shook her head.

"It's useless to think about such things. Alright, Kim Gong-Ja. Go ahead and ascend the stage without worry. If it seems dangerous, I'll immediately grant you a pass to return."

".....Okay. I'll be off then."

"Yes, take care. I won't say be careful because if you're still breathing, even if you're on the brink of death, I can save you... Just make sure your neck remains intact."

A small smile crept up on me. This person really knows my character well now.

After all, I've known the Apothecary for quite some time. She was the first person I tried to get close to immediately after my return. Without me, the Apothecary would have struggled for a while before finding success, and without the sensory amplification potion she provided, I would have had a hard time awakening my Aura. We were comrades who shared success together.

"Yep. I'll do my best."

I waved at the Apothecary and headed straight for the next floor.

The ground beneath me wobbled and swallowed me whole.

[You have entered the 75th stage.]

[You are stepping into a place where you should not be.]

I opened my eyes.

".....?"

And immediately upon opening my eyes, I noticed something odd.

In fact, it was something I couldn't help but notice.

"Huh?"

The entire world was black and white.

There was no color in the landscape before me. Only shades of gray, and even those were starkly divided into black and white.

If it were just the lack of colors, I wouldn't have been surprised. Haven't I encountered all sorts of bizarre landscapes before?

The problem was that the world was flat.

"Uh? .....Huh?"

And it was quite flat.

To put it bluntly, a [2D plane] was spread out before me.

I blinked. For some reason, the objects didn't appear in 3D. As I continued to blink, my brain slowly began to adapt to this new dimension, perceiving the world as if it were a side-scrolling RPG game screen.

In short, my field of view was confined to a third-person perspective.

"What... what is this?"

I instinctively moved my foot.

Squirm.

Then, something in the middle of the screen squirmed.

As 'that thing' in the middle moved, the screen also shifted along with it.

The view of this world was boxed in, but as 'that thing' moved, the view shifted, illuminating new scenery. Though it was still depicted as if a child had drawn on a canvas, with mountains represented by  $\triangle\triangle\triangle$  and clouds by  $OOO$ .

And 'that thing' placed in the middle of the screen, if described from top to bottom, had...

At the top, there was a ('-').

Below that, a horizontal line — was drawn. At both ends of the line were tridents, making it look like  $\ni - \in$  when drawn.

Then, for a while, there was a vertical line. The line split into two at the bottom, firmly standing on the ground of this side-scrolling world.

Astonishingly, when I moved my foot, the lower part of 'that thing' moved. When I moved my arm, the tridents moved.

Could it be?

Testing a hunch, I moved my mouth slightly.

('π')

Immediately, 'that thing's' expression changed.

"....."

We often come to unavoidable conclusions in life. In my case, at this moment, the harsh truth was all there was to it.

"...Is... is this me?"

Then, the stick figure in the middle of the 2D screen assumed what it probably thought was a sophisticated and dynamic expression.

$\Sigma(^{\circ}v^{\circ})!?!?$

No.

Why are you so unnecessarily cute...

---

Chapter 351: The White Ending (2)

---

The sudden transformation into a 2D stick figure left me bewildered, yet my confusion did nothing to alter the circumstances.

The world remained as flat as it could possibly be, and I was as much of a stick figure as one could imagine.

Idiot 「Oh, fascinating.」

Fortunately, or unfortunately, I wasn't the only one who was reduced to a stick figure. The Guardian Spirit had also become a dotted-line ghost.

If I was represented by solid lines, then perhaps the only difference was that the Guardian Spirit was depicted with dotted lines?

For reference, the Guardian Spirit was making expressions like this:

^(-▽-^)

Just looking at it was infuriating, a truly Guardian Spirit-like emoticon.

A speech bubble wafted above the Guardian Spirit's head.

Idiot 「To my eyes, this damn world looks like it's drawn on a piece of paper. Zombie, do you see it the same way?」

"Ah, yes..."

While I nodded, I was somewhat skeptical.

"Why are you speaking through speech bubbles? Can't you just talk?"

Idiot 「Huh? To me, it looks like you're the one talking through speech bubbles.」

Oh.

The Guardian Spirit genuinely seemed perplexed.

It didn't look like he was lying.

"Really?"

Idiot 「Yeah. Every time you talk, a speech bubble appears above your head. I can't hear any voice.」

"Ah... I see. Maybe in this world, only one's own voice can be heard."

I had grasped the situation.

So, this stage was devoid of sound. Everything said by people was represented in text instead of being heard. Just like in comics.

While one could hear their own voice, hearing others was impossible. Though I wasn't sure why this was the case, it was the rule of this world.

Fox God 「Peep.」

Snake 「Keeek.」

The Constellations were the same. Their cries were turned into speech bubbles, and next to the bubbles, names were written.

Instead of [A Music Box Just for You], it was Fox God, and instead of [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth], it was Snake, suggesting it wasn't the 'objective names' that were used but rather the names I found convenient.

'Wait a minute. Does that mean the Guardian Spirit is labeled as an idiot in the bubbles...?'

I looked back at the Guardian Spirit.

The Guardian Spirit tilted his head in confusion.

Idiot 「Hmm? What are you staring at?」

"...No, it's nothing. I just thought you matched well with the speech bubbles."

I bluntly changed the subject. After all, there are truths in the world that don't necessarily need to be shared. It's like scratching an itch.

Idiot 「Is that so? Well, I am a rather cool guy no matter what I do.」

"So, what should we do here?"

Ignoring the Guardian Spirit, I surveyed the surroundings. Instead of looking in all directions, I could only look left and right. Unlike the real world, I could only move in those two directions here.

The scene that met my eyes could be simply depicted as:

.,,... C;^;^;;,D

...'.....

!!
,,.....,,

" " "
.... ..

,,..... ,,,

-----

To the left, there were mountains. Floating vaguely in the distance were clouds. Below the mountains and clouds, the baseline stretching horizontally represented the horizon. In essence, the ground.

How should I put it? Quite a simple world.

Idiot 「Either left or right. We have no choice but to move forward, right? 」

The fool who knew nothing but martial arts spoke.

Idiot 「This is the afterlife, after all. So the souls must be present and living their lives somewhere, right? Though, what kind of life one must have led to consider this place heaven is beyond me.」

"Okay. Let's move."

I walked forward. No, to the right.

Of course, there was no sound of footsteps. When I stepped forward with my right foot, the word 「Step」 appeared as if it were a sound effect in a comic.

"Wow. Even the sound of footsteps appears like this..."

I tried stomping my foot heavily, and 「Step!!」 appeared in bold letters, with a grand and fierce font.

Conversely, when I tiptoed, 「Tip-toe... Tip-toe...」 appeared in small letters, with a gentle font.

"Impressive."

Literally, everything in this heaven was represented on a flat surface.

Villager A 「 Oh. I haven't seen your face around here before. Are you a traveler? 」

After walking for a while, I encountered someone.

It was the first time I had met a local of this world.

The villager was depicted just like me, as a stick figure, and was hammering something into the ground.

What the villager was holding was... a sword? A trident? No, considering he was digging the ground, it was likely a hoe. He was hoeing the field.

"Ah, yes. Hello."

I bowed my head in greeting.

"But can you distinguish my face?"

Villager A 「 Hmm? Face? 」

"Yes. You said we hadn't met before as soon as you saw me. I was wondering how you could easily tell me apart from others."

Villager A 「 Huh? Of course, I can tell. You're quite distinct from others. You're asking strange questions. 」

The farmer replied as if it was obvious.

(—□—)?

And looked at me strangely.

However, the one truly enveloped in an odd sensation was me. No matter how closely I examined the farmer's face, I couldn't distinguish it from my stick-figure face. My goodness, can the people here recognize everything just by looking at sticks?

Villager A 「 Anyway, if you wish to enter our village, there are a few procedures you must follow. 」

"Procedures?"

Villager A 「Nothing difficult. You just need to answer a few questions I have. Are you here to harm anyone in our village?」

I immediately shook my head. The sound effect "Shake, shake" appeared.

"No, that's not the case."

Villager A 「Good.」

The farmer cheerfully responded as if my answer had cleared all suspicions, as if there was no need for further interrogation.

Villager A 「I have more questions. Do you plan to cause trouble in our village? Will you create discord among the villagers?」

"Eek. No, I have no such intentions. Unless someone attacks me first..."

Villager A 「 Good. If an unwanted incident occurs, can you swear to faithfully participate in the investigation and trial according to our village customs and laws? 」

"Of course."

Villager A 「 Oh, what an admirable traveler! 」

The farmer smiled widely, seeming very satisfied. He patted my shoulder with a thump, thump.

Villager A 「 Even if you're an outsider, I can trust someone like you. Come on in! Our village welcomes you! 」

"Uh..."

I was a bit taken aback.

It was nice to be welcomed, but I didn't understand.

How could they trust me so easily?

We had only exchanged a few questions and answers. There was no further interrogation.

Such a simple Q&A couldn't possibly reveal what kind of person I am. They couldn't even tell if my answers were sincere. Why then?

Snake 「 Keeek. 」

At that moment, the snake reacted, seemingly understanding my puzzled mind and knowing the answer.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its authority.]

[Exposure.]

[Information about this stage has been disclosed to you.]

[Hidden information has been unveiled!]

A window popped up on one side of the screen. It was a Description window. Neatly squared, the letters began to inscribe themselves into it.

+

[Heaven of Truth]

Floor: 75th

Constellation: 'The Faceless Conductor'

Difficulty: B~A

Description (Lv.1): A flat world made up of pictures and characters.

Description (Lv.2): This is one of the afterlives prepared in the Tower.

Description (Lv.3): Heaven of Truth. This name refers to the afterlife where souls tired of falsehood and hypocrisy end up. Those who are weary of seeking truth in others' words, those drained by the constant need to discern truth from lies in every human encounter, and those who have grown to despise the complex human world, settle here after death.

In Heaven of Truth, you can never 'lie'!

+

Ah.

So that was it.

My questions were instantly resolved, the description window wasn't finished yet. I continued to read the information revealed by the Snake.

+

Once you step into this heaven, you need not worry about what others might be hiding or doubt their intentions.

Just ask.

You will be met with an honest answer.

Others cannot distort their intentions with subtle expressions or refined words here. In this place, any expression or tone of voice is 'blatantly' displayed.

Here, even your appearance and that of others are indistinguishable.

Rest assured. You don't need to exert yourself by acting out expressions. There's no place for smooth talk in this land.

This heaven was created for those who are tired of being human, tired of the acts of humanity, yet still wish to be among humans.

May you find peace here.

+

Villager A 「If you encounter any trouble, feel free to seek me out!」

The farmer slung his hoe over his shoulder and walked away. Step, step. Soon, the farmer exited the screen and was no longer in my view.

"...I see."

I understood all of the farmer's strange behaviors. After sharing the information I gained with the Guardian Spirit, I said.

"Just exchanging words with me is enough in this world. After all, everything I say is the truth. There's no reason to be wary of me just because I'm an outsider, as long as I assure them I have no intention of causing trouble."

Idiot 「Indeed. A world where lies are impossible...」

The martial arts fool crossed his arms and nodded gravely.

Idiot 「Most hunters are cunning by nature. For many, the condition of being unable to lie would be excruciating. Of course, for someone like me, who has a heart as clear as a stream and always speaks sincerely, no matter where or when, this stage is not difficult at all...」

"Excuse me?"

Idiot 「 Huh? 」

As we conversed, we walked into the village.

Idiot 「 Zombie, try saying what I tell you to. 」

"What are you going to make me say this time?"

Idiot 「 Say, "I secretly admire the Sword Emperor so much that I can't help it." Go on, say it. 」

This guy must be crazy.

Idiot 「 Oh, come on! Just do it! Hurry up. Right now. Right now! 」

The Guardian Spirit urged me insistently. His urging was sincere. I sighed.

"Sword Empe..."

As soon as I opened my mouth, a massive shock ran through my body.

[Prohibited!]

[You cannot violate the rules of this world.]

[You cannot utter a lie!]

"....."

My mouth immediately closed. Not by my own will, but because I was forced to. I tried again, but my mouth merely moved silently. The sentence the Guardian Spirit begged me to say just wouldn't come out.

Idiot 「Hey, Kim Zombie.」

The Guardian Spirit looked at me with eyes that had cooled off considerably.

Idiot 「 You... Don't tell me. It's not that you stumbled on "so much," nor on "I can't help it," but you couldn't even get past "Sword Emperor"? 」

Damn it.

Idiot 「 You can't even add "Emperor" to me?! Just calling the Sword Emperor a "Emperor" is already a false sentiment to you!? Huh!? 」

"Of course. How could I possibly call you an Emperor? Huh? Did your conscience swim across the Pacific to Hawaii?"

Idiot 「 My god. Are you even human? After all I've taught and given you, how little do you think of me in your heart to not even be able to call me "Emperor"!? 」

"Wait... Hold on. Look at you. You just called me 'Kim Zombie'! You're sincerely treating me as a zombie in your heart! How could you do that to me!?"

Idiot 「 I can do that, but you can't! 」

"Get lost!"

By the way, we were passing through the village. What I mean is, the villagers got a free show of our bickering. They looked at us with various expressions, each making its own statement.

( ' □ ' ? ) ' ^ ' ) / " ); , ( @ ~ ) , ( ° ∫ ° )

I don't know about the others, but the last villager really pissed me off...

Even their speech bubble was marked with a 「 ㅎ ㅎ 」 . What's this? Are they picking a fight with me?

Villager F 「 Hey, you there! 」

We were just about to leave the village when one of the villagers who had been standing at a distance shouted— or rather, enlarged their speech bubbles dramatically— and rushed over in a fluster.

"Yes?"

Villager F 「 Don't go any further! 」

The villager, sweating profusely (;;;), stopped me. Then, pointing towards the right side of the screen, he warned:

Villager F 「A madman lives over there!」

Chapter 352: The White Ending (3)

---

I tilted my head in confusion.

"A madman?"

Villager F 「Yes, that's right. If you keep going that way, you'll encounter a very dangerous madman. You must not approach him! ...Of course, you mumbling to yourself in the middle of the road as if talking to thin air makes you seem quite mad yourself...」

This stick figure?!

Villager F 「Even if you're a strange madman, the one living over there is extremely dangerous. He slashes at anyone who approaches!」

"Heh."

Villager F 「Among us, he's called the [Mad Warrior]. Since he settled there, not a single person has been able to cross to the other side... All communication was completely cut off. 」

I grasped the situation.

Here, the world only extends left and right. When a madman appears and blocks the path, transportation is severed from that day forward.

"Is there no way to bypass him?"

Villager F 「There used to be... But it's been a long time since the madman appeared. Over a hundred years, perhaps. That madman destroyed all the detours around the place he blocked. Even if we forcefully create a detour, he smashes it as soon as he sees it. There's no way to cope with it. 」

Truly a madman.

Normally, even if a path was blocked, one could dig tunnels or build sky bridges to bypass it. "Tunnels" are literally paths dug underground. "Sky bridges" are created by erecting pillars and laying bridges. However, the [Mad Warrior] smashed all such detours.

"Is he that powerful? This Mad Warrior."

Villager F 「Haven't I said it? It's been such a long time, and still, the situation remains the same. Countless warriors who challenged the madman lost their heads. Now, nobody dares to confront him. As a result, the trade between the east and west was completely ruined!」

The villager made a sullen expression (・ω・). The faces of other villagers listening to our conversation weren't much different. Or rather, they were exactly the same. Thus, several villagers simultaneously made (・ω・) (・ω・) (・ω・) (・ω・) expressions.

All looking at me.

That's kind of scary...

Villager F 「I don't know how far you plan to travel, but it might be best to make a U-turn at this village.」

The villager advised me with a resigned look (; -Д-) on his face.

Villager F 「Beyond here is practically off-limits. Rest up for a day and then head back. 」

I gratefully accepted the hospitality and stayed at a villager's house for the night.

Though a few more questions were exchanged to ascertain whether I was a dangerous traveler, it seemed the villagers ultimately deemed me completely harmless. They treated me with great courtesy as their guest.

"I just need to take care of that Mad Warrior and then I can leave."

I said to the Guardian Spirit while lying in the bed provided by the villagers.

"Clearing the stage can be done anytime. But that madman is, in a sense, a monster. A monster of this world. Who knows when another hunter will come up to the 75th floor again? If I just ignore him and move on, it might be decades before anything changes."

Idiot 「Doesn't really matter, does it? It's up to you. 」

The Guardian Spirit spoke indifferently.

However, the Guardian Spirit was inherently an honest person. He was nothing but a corpse without his honesty. Especially in this world where expressions are blatantly revealed. When the Guardian Spirit made a bothered expression (;¬_¬), it was impossible not to notice, even if I didn't want to.

"Why so? You look like a complete idiot."

Idiot 「No... Hmm. I suppose it's because that Mad Warrior or whatever is said to be the strongest in this world. And although I don't remember, I definitely cleared the 75th floor.」

"Yes, I guess so."

Idiot 「So, it's been bothering me. I would have undoubtedly taken down anyone who held the title of the world's strongest, right? How could such a person still be alive and well?」

"Hoh."

It was a valid point, but since it wasn't impossible, I easily provided an answer.

"He must have appeared after you cleared this place. What's so strange about that?"

Idiot 「Is that so...?」

The Guardian Spirit looked uneasy but couldn't argue against my point. It was the most plausible explanation. We decided not to dwell on it any further and had a good night's rest.

The next day, we headed towards the location where the madman was said to be lurking.

Villager F 「I told you not to go there, young man!」

Even though I was an outsider, spending the night without any issues seemed to make a significant difference. The villagers were noticeably friendlier than yesterday, and yet, they were more frantic in trying to stop me.

Villager F 「I knew it when I saw that young man mumbling to himself. He's gone mad!」

This villager's face was like this: (o□㐔□o);;

Villager D 「Right. There's madness that harms others, and then there's madness that harms oneself. This fellow is the latter. Tsk tsk.」

This villager was (・̀・).

Villager C 「Maybe he came here looking for a place to die... His beloved must have left him. But he didn't have the courage to end it himself, so he came to this village looking for someone to do it for him... Ah, it must be so...!」

And there was someone like this ♪(。>~<。)/'.

A variety of expressions saw me off.

As I left the village, a sign that read [Danger! No Trespassing] blocked the path. I lightly jumped over it. Unlike the well-maintained village, the further I stepped out, the more desolate the path became.

On the other side of the path, the [Mad Warrior], who had instilled fear in the residents of this world, sat quietly.

Madman 「 ..... 」

The warrior was expressionless (=_=). It was hard to tell if his eyes were open or closed. However, as soon as my right foot crunched a weed, making a rustling sound, a speech bubble appeared above the warrior's head.

Madman 「 It's been a while since we've had a visitor. 」

In this world, the ground was fundamentally represented by _____. Although there were bushes and underbrush, the base was —.

However, for some reason, the area around where the warrior sat was depicted as ⊥⊥⊥⊥. At first, I thought they were large weeds, then reeds taller than weeds.

Unfortunately, they were neither.

Madman 「 Are you a challenger? 」

Those were all 'swords' stuck in the ground.

Madman 「If you've wandered off the path and ended up here by mistake, I'll grant you one last act of mercy. Turn back. But if you've come to challenge me, I'll gladly entertain you.」

"....."

Madman 「No. Perhaps I was foolish to even utter such words, considering I focused on the sound of your footsteps as you approached. The consistency of your footsteps was astonishing. The stride of your tens of steps was frightfully the same. It's impossible to think that someone with such a realm and experience would stupidly stray off the path and end up here.」

The warrior slowly stood up.

Madman 「Let me ask. Are you a hunter?」

I blinked.

"Are you a hunter too? Did you climb the Tower and end up trapped in this stage forever?"

Madman 「No. I am not one of your kind. I am a pure and innocent native, born and raised in this world. But that too is a foolish statement. According to your claim, I wasn't born in this world but died in the other world, and thus I'm merely living in the afterlife.」

Swish.

The warrior pulled one of the countless swords stuck in the ground around him. It seemed all the swords scattered around were his blades.

Madman 「But I do have some connections with the humans you call 'hunters'.」

Throughout the drawing of the sword, the warrior maintained an expressionless (=_=) face. Perhaps not expressionless, but indifferent. It was difficult to seriously gauge his realm in a world barely represented by stick figures.

"Connections?"

Madman 「Sword Emperor.」

Then, the warrior inscribed an unexpected name in his speech bubble.

Madman 「I am waiting for the day the Sword Emperor returns, having been defeated by him.」

From that moment, the story the warrior shared was straightforward.

Madman 「According to the Sword Emperor, I was someone who died in the same world as he was born and brought up in. In other words, I was once a hunter.」

"....."

Madman 「It's a story I can't remember, but here, in this world, the Sword Emperor certainly said so. Therefore, it cannot be a lie. At least, he believed without a doubt that I was 'an old warrior who lived and died in the same world as him'. In other words, the Sword Emperor and I were acquaintances.」

"...Did the Sword Emperor tell you what name you had in life?"

Madman 「 He did. 」

The warrior recited the alias he couldn't remember.

I turned to look at the Guardian Spirit.

"Is that correct?"

Idiot 「 Yeah. Right. And every time his speech bubble appears, the name displayed is also the one I know. What he's saying is probably true. 」

The Guardian Spirit confirmed the facts.

Madman 「 To think the world I lived in was actually the afterlife. It was surprising, but there's no need to subjectively be surprised by something objectively surprising. I dueled with the Sword Emperor and lost. However, the Sword Emperor said, 'I have no hobby of killing an old fellow countryman who's already dead,' and did not take my life. 」

"....."

Madman 「It was indeed a humiliating act. Even if it was a past life, it's a life I can't remember. To tell me to live, no, to die forever defeated? Then, I'd rather he accept another duel later.」

The Guardian Spirit casually accepted the request for a rematch.

Promising to return and fight after breaking through the 100th floor.

Madman 「Time passed.」

And he forgot.

It was inevitable. Events related to the pillars were all meant to be forgotten. That was the law of the tower.

Unlike me, the Guardian Spirit did not secure immunity to memory loss. And the [Staff of Time Immemorial] was not as kind as to teach everything to the Guardian Spirit as it did for me.

Upon reaching the 80th floor, the Guardian Spirit's memories from the 70th to the 79th floor would have been completely distorted.

Madman 「 Well, I think the Sword Emperor is dead. 」

"....."

Madman 「 No. Maybe he just can't find where I am. The world is quite vast. I settled here and threatened anyone who came, fearing he might not find me. Thanks to that, my notoriety spread. Enough to reach the entire world. In other words, there's no way he can't find me now. 」

I sighed.

In the end, the Guardian Spirit's reckless promises were the cause of all misdeeds.

"You're really causing trouble..."

Idiot 「 No, no. Wait. I might not know about other things, but this time, I'm unfairly accused. I really don't remember, you know? 」

"That's the problem, that very fact that you don't remember. Really."

Idiot 「Grr...」

Just like on the 50th floor, there are many issues left unresolved because this guy failed to conquer the 100th floor.

I'm unintentionally cleaning up the messes the Guardian Spirit made while climbing the tower.

Madman 「It seems you know quite a bit about the Sword Emperor.」

"Yes. It's too complicated to explain in detail, but... You can roughly consider me a disciple of the Sword Emperor. And I doubt the Sword Emperor will ever return to duel with you."

Madman 「Is that so.」

The warrior's indifferent expression (= _ =) remained unchanged.

Madman 「Then I must capture you instead of the Sword Emperor.」

"Ah... So it comes to this, huh?"

Madman 「Of course. If I retreat now, it means I've wasted a long time for nothing. If the Sword Emperor is dead, that's all there is to it, and it's my own anxiety. But if the disciple of the Sword Emperor has appeared, it's a different story. You might see it as an irrelevant venting, but I want to alleviate my frustration by defeating you. No. It's definitely venting. I'll take out my frustration on you.」

"Straightforward, aren't you?"

Madman 「Is that so? I wouldn't know. I'm unfamiliar with the concept opposite to honesty.」

Well, fine.

I came here intending to defeat him anyway, so it doesn't matter.

It's not just about hunting a madman, but also about cleaning up the Guardian Spirit's mess, which has its own significance.

Madman 「Then, let's have a fair fight.」

Thump!

Stepping on the ground and marking it with large fonts, the warrior charged at me. I, too, drew my holy sword. As i waited for an opportunity, watching the warrior swing his sword wide—

'Wait?'

I realized a fatal flaw at that moment.

'Huh? What?'

I extended my perception of time with aura. In the elongated timeline, the warrior was raising his sword high. If it had been a normal situation, I would have also raised my sword to block. That was the standard.

The problem was.

'...Where exactly is he swinging his sword?'

From my perspective, accustomed to three-dimensional fights, the warrior's two-dimensional sword swings were completely unfamiliar!

'Upper right? Lower left? Or just straightforward? So should I also raise my sword straight to block? Wait, how do I deflect the sword to the side? Is deflecting even possible here? This is just a flat plane!'

In a hurry, I tried various stances. A stance to block the upper right. A stance to block the upper left.

But the stick figure representation in [this world] was pathetic. I couldn't be certain what stance I was taking, how to completely block the opponent's attack, or even which [path] the opponent was attacking from!

As a result, I could only make a dumbfounded expression!

(;;●Д●) !!?

Madman 「Prepare yourself.」

While I fumbled around, the stick figure warrior didn't seem to care and continued his charge.

"Wait! Just, just a moment! Hold on! Something's strange..."

Swoosh!

The stick figure warrior swung his sword at me. Thus, I was faced with two choices— block the upper part or the lower part.

Chapter 353: The White Ending (4)

---

“Eeek!? Save me, sir!”

In a situation where I didn't know which side to defend, the conclusion I reached was just a single one.

I rolled over.

This technique of rolling on the ground to exquisitely dodge the enemy's fierce attacks is known as the Lazy Donkey Roll, but in more simple terms...

It was just rolling on the ground 〵 (:3/ 〵) /.

Why? What? I have to survive first!

Madman 「To soil your back with dirt. How unsightly.」

The warrior raised one eyebrow.

In other words, his facial expression was, um, should we stop this now?

There are always old-timers in every field. Compared to other fields, martial arts had a particularly high proportion of such old-timers. According to old-timer studies, the Lazy Donkey Roll was considered a disgrace for a martial artist. They would say something like "that guy is a master yet he used the Lazy Donkey Roll!" and would ridicule the person for 12 years straight. It was typical of martial artists who uphold form over substance.

"Anyway, there's no one looking, so what does it matter! Plus, I'm from the Demonic Cult!"

Madman 「I don't know what the Demonic Cult is, but my excitement has cooled down. No, on the contrary, it might be more accurate to say that my excitement has risen. After seeing your evasion just now, the last bit of obsession in my heart has cooled down. Like a fisherman trying to catch a fish with a harpoon, I'll just cut you down with the sole intention of slaughtering you.」

"This fight is unfair!"

Whooosh! Swaaash!

Every time the warrior swung his sword, sound effects were drawn in sleek fonts. Left? Right? I couldn't tell where the blade was aiming.

Let's say I can distinguish between left and right to some extent. But even if it's [left], including up and down, it's a whopping 180 degrees! Whether the sword was coming down from the 11 o'clock direction or slicing from the 11:30 direction, it was almost impossible to detect such a minute difference!

"Damn it! It's do or die!"

I prefer using delicate and precise swordsmanship. But now, I couldn't precisely identify the enemy's attack path, nor could I strike accurately myself. What to do?! I had no choice but to push through with force!

+

Demonic Heavenly God Art.

The Eighth Form.

Sword of Scorching Death.

+

I leaped from the ground and immediately unfolded the Demonic Heavenly God Art. Sword of Scorching Death. As the technique is a 'Sword Combo', it's a martial art that involves swinging the sword consecutively. And I just slammed Aura into the sword groove instead of a blade.

Brutally!

Madman 「.....!」

The warrior hurriedly wielded his sword to block my attack.

Clang! Claaang!

Sword grooves attacked simultaneously, constricting the warrior. It was a mass attack! If I couldn't precisely hit the target, I might as well bombard it savagely!

Out of the seven attacks that plunged in, four completely missed, two were perfectly blocked by the warrior's sword, but the last one pressed down right in the center of the warrior's sword, just as I aimed.

Chaaaaeeng!

The sword held by the warrior shattered into pieces. No matter how great the sword he was wielding, once pushed back by the pressure of Aura, it was no more than a piece of iron.

The warrior raised both his eyebrows, showing a surprised expression, albeit it was hard to recognize and wasn't particularly desirable to recognize.

Madman 「.....To have a connection with the Sword Emperor. It seems it wasn't just a vague connection. Such a ferocious sword energy is truly something I haven't seen in a long time. No, it would be correct to say it's the first since the Sword Emperor.」

The warrior seemed to have reevaluated me internally.

Madman 「At least, you can't be treated as a mere rabble who resorts to the Lazy Donkey Roll.」

"Well, now that you acknowledge me, that's enough...."

From my perspective, it was nerve-wracking.

The recent exchange was purely violence of Aura. It's like swinging your arms wildly, blinded, trying to block an attack whose path you don't know. It was truly reckless.

Sure, if we fight, I will win. But the very act of fighting like this is stressful! The act of exchanging swords on a 2D plane is too unfamiliar!

"Well, you've seen it. I am the one who is expected to conquer the top after the Sword Emperor. In other words, I'm the King of Death. It's not at all shameful for you to surrender. Now, just raise the white flag quietly...."

Madman 「 However, I still have 712 swords left. 」

"What?"

As I mentioned before, the horizon of this world was marked with —. But the base of the 'Mad Warrior' mentioned by the terrified villagers here, just around this area, had lines

Ssshhhing.

One of the swords, waiting in the ground just to fulfill its purpose, was drawn.

The scabbard was still half-buried in the ground, but the blade was now freed in the warrior's hand.

Madman 「It's 712 bouts from now on.」

"....."

Madman 「You have to defeat me within 712 bouts, Hunter.」

Before the word 'Hunter' even finished, I had already sprung into action.

Taat!

I stomped on the ground. The warrior raised his eyes again. Had he not expected me to counterattack without saying anything? Perhaps he was somewhat reassured by my frivolous actions and words.

But whether it was the Lazy Donkey Roll or a surprise attack, in the end, it's all about the determination to win. Frivolity and pettiness, there's no difference to me. Now that I've confirmed the opponent has no intention of surrendering, all that's left is to fight.

+

Demonic Heavenly God Art.

The First Form.

Sword of Starving Death.

+

Sword of Starving Death is a flowing sword.

The attack flows like water, and the entire blade, from tip to hilt, is controlled, making it the Sword of Starving Death. I concentrate all sensations of the blade in my palm. I control the flow. To put it plainly, I ensure the sword doesn't go off course.

I swung the aura-charged blade broadly from side to side.

Madman 「 Hmm! 」

My sword strike, filled with aura, flew horizontally to the right, continuously to the right, and in the process, it cut through any obstructing swords.

Like an invisible hand, swiftly cutting through rice stalks during harvest.

Thud-thud-thud-thud-

Like rice heads falling, the swords cut by my aura soared into the air.

Madman 「 Indeed, 」

The warrior too, threw his sword. Chaang! A sharp metallic sound echoed in the air. My sword aura and the warrior's blade collided in mid-air, nullifying each other.

It seemed like an equal match. A draw. But out of the 711 swords planted in the ground, 11 had been cut already.

It was a painful loss for the warrior.

Madman 「 So you're coming at me like that! 」

"Yes. Well, I'm coming at you like this."

I can always back off, recharge my aura, and come back.

But what about the warrior? In this land, where east-west trade has been cut off and all residents are afraid to approach, who would come with swords?

The 11 swords the warrior just lost cannot be replenished anytime soon.

Madman 「 Despicable! Petty! 」

"In other words, you're saying the player plays the game shittily, but that's a compliment. Anyway, now you're left with 700 swords. If we consume 10 swords per bout, it doesn't seem like it will be a long battle."

Madman 「 As you wish! 」

The warrior drew another sword.

Madman 「 I'll end it quickly! 」

And he charged at me. Whoosh! Wind sound effects were inscribed in the white world. The pressure was tremendous. Is this what it feels like to be rushed at full speed?

"No."

Towards the opponent charging at me as if he was burning his entire body, I neither showed respect nor screamed in harmony. I just swiftly leaped back.

Madman 「What!」

"I won't fall for such shallow tricks."

The warrior pursued me. During the chase, he launched swords at me. Chaang! Kaang! Chaang, six metallic sounds rang out in an instant.

There was no seventh sword flying towards me.

Madman 「.....!」

The warrior hesitated and stopped his pursuit.

"You didn't just set up shop here and defeat everyone passing by merely because you were considerate of the Sword Emperor possibly getting lost."

The place where the warrior stopped.

It was a swordless zone, where the swords' graveyard ended, and the flat horizon continued; it was a safe area.

"By taking away the swords of everyone passing through here and laying them in the ground, you turned this area into your territory. In other words, a trap. To lure the Sword Emperor, who might revisit this place someday, into the sword hell."

I spoke leisurely.

"But conversely, it also means you can't leave the sword graveyard. The moment you step out, you lose the card to counter my aura. Hmm. The term 'self-inflicted trap' is used here."

Madman 「You...」

"You deliberately used harsh words to provoke me, right? Like saying, [I'll end it quickly as you wish]. You schemed to stir up my fighting spirit. Sorry, but although I'm often called a fool, I'm also known for annoyingly distinguishing between fighting spirit and foolishness."

I infused my sword with aura.

"And now, I'm going to do something even more regrettable to you."

Madman 「What...」

"Like this."

Unsheathing the sword...

Madman 「.....! Kuh!」

I used the Sword of Starving Death again.

The warrior blocked the aura I fired with the sword he was holding.

It couldn't be helped. If left alone, dozens of swords would fly away. If I shoot aura horizontally, the warrior has no choice but to use one sword to defend each time.

"Are there 693 swords left now?"

He couldn't rush at me with a sword either. As mentioned earlier, this is a safe area. A safe place for me is a dead end for the warrior.

"Let's end this quickly."

In the end, the warrior had to keep blocking my aura attacks at the edge of the sword graveyard.

Retreat? My aura would harvest the swords like autumn rice.

Charge forward? After one exchange, the sword would break, and he would lose. There are no swords in the safe area for the warrior to replenish.

He was caught between a rock and a hard place.

I'm sorry to repeat, but the warrior has no other option but to wither away while blocking my aura's continuous attacks.

Literally, a slow death. Slowly. From 600 swords to 300, from 300 to 100, and finally, from 100 to 0.

Madman 「Isn't it shameful! With your level, your swordsmanship must be outstanding. No, swordsmanship should be your true skill. Then, shouldn't we be exchanging sword strikes here to determine the winner!」

"Ah, yes. But that's only good when I win, right? Or when there's a 90% chance I'll win. I'm already uncomfortable in this world, so losing not because of skill but because of stage gimmicks is... How should I put it? Not really... Oh, now there are 690 swords."

Madman 「Kuh!」

"689 swords."

I continued to unleash the Sword of Starving Death. Maybe my aura will run out halfway. So what? If it runs out, I'll go back to the village, rest well, and then come back with a new mindset to crush the warrior's swords.

A perfect plan.

"685 swords."

Madman 「Damn...!」

"680 swords."

Madman 「 This is absurd...! 」

With each sword that broke, the warrior took a step back.

⊥ ⊥ ⊥ turned into — ⊥ ⊥, and then into —— ⊥.

Perhaps the entire sword graveyard will flatten into —— someday.

It's just a matter of time.

Madman 「 This cannot be. My efforts, my sweat and blood, they cannot end in such a petty manner! 」

"Isn't setting up camp here and making a fortress a petty act?"

Madman 「 That was a legitimate preparation! 」

"Then this is a legitimate response!"

The sword graveyard quickly shrank. The original 700 swords were reduced to 500, and the warrior, breathing heavily, glared at me.

Madman 「Huff... Huff, huff...」

It wasn't because he was physically exhausted.

There's no way out. No clever strategy. Being pushed towards the end according to my scheme brings a sense of resignation, causing the warrior to feel fatigued.

And eventually, an explosion occurred.

Madman 「Uoooooh!!」

The Madman stomped his foot. That stomp made the swords surrounding the Madman fly towards me. Like arrows tearing through the air alone.

No, they were actually countless arrows flying horizontally.

"Haah!"

I raised my sword vertically and then brought it down again. Repeating this, I layered aura over aura to create a massive wall.

■

■

■

Towards the wall I created, the stick figure, that is, the warrior, charged in.

The barrage created by throwing swords, followed by the warrior's sword, exploded.

Boom...!

A flurry of attacks ensued.

Boom...! Boom, booom...!

The warrior didn't just use his sword. He used punches, kicks, elbow strikes, knee strikes, headbutts, and hand-chops, literally every type of violence a stick figure could demonstrate, he threw everything at the wall that I created. He spewed it out.

He poured it all out.

And then, he was depleted.

Madman 「 Kuh... 」

Finally, the Madman knelt down.

The wall I created did not break.

■

■

■ OTL

"The match is over."

I said. Probably the speed at which my speech bubble appeared was significantly slower compared to before. As if the message speed was set to the lowest.

Maintaining the wall had also taken a toll on my stamina. But anyway, I was standing, and the warrior was kneeling. The winner and loser were clear.

Madman 「Damn it! Damn...」

The warrior did not object. He just cursed.

Then, it was time for the victor's rights.

I said,

"From now on, you'll have to answer my questions."

Chapter 354: The White Ending (5)

---

The "Madman" who was defeated by the Sword Emperor a long time ago, faced humiliation again after being defeated by me. However, at least the Madman knew to accept humiliation and defeat as they were.

I demanded the rights of the victor. After hearing my demands, the Madman raised an eyebrow.

Madman 「You want me to assume whatever position you desire?」

"Yes, that's correct."

By the way, the 'Madman's' real name was Mad Warrior. He was literally a mad warrior.

He used to have a different name. However, when he met the Sword Emperor in the past and heard, "Hey, your original nickname was Mad Warrior before you died," he reclaimed the title he had during his lifetime. It was a peculiar fate in many ways.

"I'm still unfamiliar with the principles of this world. Honestly, the martial arts I've practiced until now are almost useless here because this world is too different from the one I lived in."

Mad Warrior 「So you defeated me with martial arts that have almost become useless.」

"Yes, that's right."

Mad Warrior 「...Don't people usually deny it or at least pretend to deny it in such situations?」

The Madman made a face of disbelief. Hmm, I've become accustomed to this Heaven, so I can quickly interpret the expressions of others.

But more than reading expressions, I sought a much more challenging realm.

"My world is different from here. Not only does it have front and back, but it also has right and left. Even if you swing a sword from top to bottom, the upper right is different from the upper left."

Mad Warrior 「I've heard such talk from the Sword Emperor as well. From my perspective, it's utter nonsense... No, if that's how it is for you, then so be it.」

"Well. I intend to comply with a fair duel, as you wish."

The Madman blinked.

Mad Warrior 「Really?」

"Yes. But that's after I become familiar with the laws of this world."

This was exactly what I demanded from the Madman as the victor's right.

"I need to know how the upper left of my world is expressed here, and how a waist cut from my world appears here. Please demonstrate every movement I can make, as a resident of this world."

Mad Warrior 「I don't understand what you're saying. I'm a born warrior. Speak plainly.」

"Please step forward."

The Madman moved as I instructed.

I observed closely and with all my concentration how 'martial arts movements' were represented on a 2-dimensional plane.

"Good. Now, please take the upper position."

Mad Warrior 「...I'll comply with your request since I lost, but is there any point to this?」

"The decision of its meaning is also the right of the victor, isn't it? Please do it."

Mad Warrior 「Hmph...」

Although the Madman was skeptical, he assumed every posture I asked for.

The postures were neat. Despite his defeats to the Sword Emperor and me, the Madman was at the very least, a contender for the strongest in this world. My Aura was overwhelmingly less than his, which meant that he was a martial artist who didn't rely much on Aura.

To firmly understand [2D martial arts movements], there couldn't be a better specimen than this. I kept making demands.

"Next, please take the lower position."

"What does my current posture look like to you? What movements should you make to counter my posture?"

"I'm not asking you to show me secret techniques, just the basic movements. If you're a swordsman, any basic cutting movements will suffice."

Initially, the Madman complied with my requests with a disgruntled face, but as time passed, he began to understand the intent behind my demands.

Mad Warrior 「...I see.」

The Madman smirked. It was the first smile he had shown in front of me.

Mad Warrior 「You're translating my postures into your own terms, I see.」

"That's right."

Mad Warrior 「By now, you must be busy dissecting and transforming my postures into something of your own in your mind.」

Although a beat late, the Madman had read my intentions.

Ultimately, the reason I couldn't display precise swordsmanship in this 2D world was that I wasn't familiar with how my postures were represented here and what movements of the Madman corresponded to in my terms.

Thus, I requested the Madman to perform basic movements, while I rearranged every gesture, foot movement, and action according to the martial arts of my world.

Mad Warrior 「How long do you think it will take for you to become accustomed to 'our world'? 」

"I'm not sure."

At the moment, I was reproducing various movements in my mind.

Imagination is like a muscle. It can be trained, and with training, it becomes clearer. Aura is the muscle of the mind. As I became proficient with Aura, my mental images became more precise, and now I could run various simulations in my mind.

"About half a day? I should be fairly accustomed by then."

Mad Warrior 「After you've become accustomed, do you intend to challenge me to a duel again? 」

"Yes, since you desire a fair and square duel."

Mad Warrior 「...So, I'm currently making my enemy stronger in real-time, am I not? 」

The Madman sighed heavily.

Mad Warrior 「 But that is precisely the battle I desired, so I cannot refuse. Perhaps, I will lose to you in the second duel as well. Knowing I will lose, yet unable to stop myself. Caught between a rock and a hard place, over and over again. 」

With those words, the Madman ceased his lament. Silently moving his feet and swinging his sword, he simply repeated postures to help me become accustomed to fighting in 2D.

Half a day passed.

.,,.. C;^·^;;,D

... '' ' .....

''
,,.....,,

'' ''
.... ..... ..

,,..... .....,,

---

I sat cross-legged, immersing myself in my thoughts for hours.

As the saying goes, "When in Rome, do as the Romans do," I had to become familiar with this world first if I wanted to defeat the strongest of the Heavenly World purely with the fighting methods of this place.

'The stick is not a stick, but a sword.'

Swoosh, swoosh. In my mind, the I-shaped stick swung by the opponent was perceived as a sharply honed sword. I struggled to perceive it as such.

'Not just swords, but everything must be seen this way.'

— is not a line but the ground.

▲ is not a triangle but a mountain.

⊂;^;^;, ⊃ is not a jest of dots and curves but a cloud.

This was the true appearance of this world, the form I had to genuinely accept.

"....."

I blinked.

As the sun set and the white sky gradually turned black, when I no longer considered the black sunset any less red than the red sunset, I unknowingly murmured softly.

"However, if that's the case, shouldn't my voice also not be heard like everyone else's?"

It was at that moment.

[You have shown respect for the laws of the Heaven of Truth!]

[The Constellation The Faceless Conductor permits you to stay in the Heaven of Truth.]

[A minor penalty has been applied.]

I blinked again.

Me 「What's changed?」

As soon as I spoke, I realized what had changed.

Me 「My voice isn't audible.」

What I thought appeared as a dotted speech bubble, and what I spoke out loud appeared as a solid speech bubble. Neither was a monologue.

Is this the [Penalty]?

But at least for me now, it didn't feel like a penalty.

Me 「 Hmm. 」

I slowly unraveled my cross-legged posture and stood up.

Me 「 You've waited long. 」

Mad Warrior 「 ..... 」

The Madman, who was repeating basic movements, paused. His pupils were pitch black. His eyes, resembling black wells, looked at me.

Mad Warrior 「 Have you really become accustomed to it? ...Already? 」

Me 「 If it were the Sword Emperor, he would've adapted in an instant. It took me half a day to barely get used to it, so it's not something to be praised for. 」

It was a strange sensation. Or should I say, a normal sensation?

In the Heaven of Music, I couldn't hear sounds either. But here, sound itself was absent. The senses needed to live in this world were much fewer and much fainter than in the original world.

Me 「It's comfortable.」

Mad Warrior 「...Ha.」

The Madman adjusted his posture. It wasn't a posture to show me as an example. It was a posture of aiming his sword tip at me, wanting to fight me once again.

Mad Warrior 「Indeed. That's why you lot lived, and I diad.」

After muttering something which wasn't directed to anyone in particular, the Madman spoke.

Mad Warrior 「I've already lost once. However, my spirit hasn't fully acknowledged the defeat. Shamelessly, I want to request a rematch. Will you accept?」

Me 「I'm embarrassed for making you wait so long.」

Unlike the first fight, both the Madman and I observed formalities this time.

Me 「I am the Vice-lord of the Demonic Cult, the King of Death.」

Mad Warrior 「King of Death, why do you indulge in my whims?」

Me 「I consider the Sword Emperor my master.」

The Guardian Spirit, who had been silently listening to our conversation, widened its eyes in shock. This is the Heaven of Truth. Lies and false flattery don't work here. Surprised by my unhesitant reference to 'master,' he reacted.

But it was too early to be surprised. I spoke freely.

Me 「My master is shameless and foolish, lacking the foresight to consider consequences, hastily making promises and oaths, leading many into despair. How is this any different from an animal that relies only on its strength? As a disciple, it's embarrassingly unbearable for me.」

Idiot 「 Hey!? 」

Me 「 But no matter how stupid and petty he is, he taught me the sword. Even if the shit he's stirred spreads over three thousand li[1], as an undutiful disciple, I have no choice but to shovel and spread the stench bit by bit. You are also a victim of the shit spread by my master. 」

Idiot 「 Hey! ...Hey!? Why does everything you're saying sound shockingly true from my perspective!? 」

Quiet, please.

Me 「 Therefore, I have a duty to restore the honor of my sect and settle the dishonor of my master. Even though you are a criminal who blocked the trade routes between the east and west, causing inconvenience and harm to many, if we think about it, my master is the one who committed a great crime. I will convert you and set things right. 」

Mad Warrior 「 Ha, ha! 」

The Madman burst into laughter.

Mad Warrior 「It's astonishing that all those words came from sincerity. But can you really convert me? No, it's impossible. Come!」

And so, I went.

Mad Warrior 「...!」

In one strike, the sword held by Mad Warrior shattered. It wasn't the result of launching Aura from a distance. My Holy Sword had struck down his sword from above.

It happened in an instant.

Mad Warrior 「Ha,」

Although hundreds of swords had been destroyed in the sword graveyard, hundreds more remained. Mad Warrior quickly picked up another sword stuck in the ground.

Mad Warrior 「In the end,」

I extended my front foot, no, my front leg, to strike the Madman's hand. Thwack! The Madman, who hadn't even managed to lift his sword yet, staggered.

Mad Warrior 「Is it my fate to lose no matter how I fight!」

Using the momentum from striking with my front leg, I kicked the Madman's body with my back leg. The Madman tried his best to block my attack with his arms. I put my whole body into the kick, losing my balance, and the Madman's stance was already broken, but I had a sword in my hand.

Me 「Yes.」

Thrust.

During the time the Madman had to grab and pull out the sword handle, all I had to do was lift and aim my Holy Sword. The Holy Sword was pointed right under the Madman's chin.

Mad Warrior 「.....」

Me 「If you're not satisfied, I'm willing to fight again as many times as you like.」

Mad Warrior 「 ...No. I've lost. 」

The Madman smiled weakly.

Mad Warrior 「 I lost to the Sword Emperor, and now to his disciple. It's a dismal outcome after such a long wait, but still, it's a result. ...Thank you. 」

Me 「 Not at all. 」

Now, the 'madman' blocking the passage between the east and west in this world will disappear.

I don't know where he'll go to train again or whether he'll travel around the villages he's troubled to make amends, but I had no intention of cutting the throat of this witness who remembers the Sword Emperor.

Me 「 Among the locals from the 70th to the 80th floor, you're probably the only one who remembers my master. I have something to ask you. 」

Mad Warrior 「 Ask anything you wish. 」

Me 「Between the Sword Emperor and me, who is stronger? 」

The Madman closed his eyes. After a long while, he opened his mouth.

Mad Warrior 「The Sword Emperor is half a step stronger than you. 」

Half a step, huh.

In that half step, there must be the Sword Essence.

[The judge you've chosen has given you a passing mark!]

Perhaps, the Apothecary was waiting for me to conclude any matter. As soon as the Madman openly declared his surrender, messages were etched into the black sky as if waiting for this moment.

[You have received the recognition of the judge.]

[You can declare Stage Clear at any time.]

I turned my back on the Madman.

[1]: Li, also known as the Chinese mile, is a traditional Chinese unit of distance. The li has varied considerably over time but was usually about one third of an English mile and now has a standardized length of a half-kilometer. This is then divided into 1,500 chi or "Chinese feet".

Chapter 355: The White Ending (6)

---

After wrapping up matters with the Madman, I found myself with some spare time. I glanced towards a corner of the world.

[You can declare a Stage Clear at any time.]

The words were floating there.

As I waved my hand, the letters dispersed like grains of sand. Standing in the middle of the land (since the world moves with me, I was always in the center), I was deep in thought.

Idiot 「What are you doing? Aren't you going back to the lobby?」

Me 「No. Suddenly, I thought that I might fail at the 99th floor too.」

Idiot 「.....」

Me 「I believe I've become quite strong. Perhaps, with my current strength, I could even compete with my master before her enlightenment. Stronger than me, and even stronger than my master, you were half a step ahead, Sword Emperor. Yet, even someone as powerful as you died at the 99th floor.」

I couldn't even begin to imagine what awaited at the 99th floor that led to the Sword Emperor's death. It was beyond my comprehension. From that point, anxiety grew like a poisonous mushroom.

I looked straight at the Guardian Spirit.

Me 「What's on the 99th floor? Can't you tell me yet?」

Idiot 「.....」

Me 「If you tell me, I can prepare. I can devise a strategy, right?」

Idiot 「Hmm. Well, that's a valid point, but it's only a point.」

Me 「What do you mean?」

Idiot 「I just don't want to tell you about the 99th floor.」

Me 「Are you really a child?」

Idiot 「Enough. Let's take a walk.」

Me 「Walk? You're a spirit, you can't even walk....」

Then, for the first time since meeting the Guardian Spirit, I witnessed something. Depending on the perspective, it was a remarkable sight or merely an ordinary scene.

The Guardian Spirit, who almost always floated gently in the air, was now walking on the ground, step by step.

Idiot 「Aren't you coming?」

Me 「But... you don't have a body. How can you...」

To my eyes, the Guardian Spirit truly appeared to be walking.

Me 「Did you gain a body? As I climb the tower, do you gradually gain a physical form? Something like that...」

Idiot 「Idiot. I'm just pretending to walk.」

Me 「What?」

Idiot 「Tsk, no use explaining. Just follow me.」

The Guardian Spirit turned and walked away. I, as if possessed by a ghost, followed.

.,.,. C;^;^;,D

... '' '.....

''
,,.....,,

.. " .. " ..

,,..... ,,,

_____

Mountains stretched on and clouds drifted by. The world was as silent as the Guardian Spirit. I silently followed the silent man.

Idiot 「The Madman said the difference between you and me is only half a step.」

After a long walk, the Guardian Spirit finally spoke.

Idiot 「Zombie, what do you think that half step difference is?」

Me 「I think it's the Sword Essence.」

Idiot 「Right. The Sword Essence. I can use it, and your master figured it out right before closing her eyes. So, how can one awaken and freely wield the Sword Essence? 」

Me 「 ..... 」

I instinctively felt that this conversation was extremely important. Yes, the Guardian Spirit was trying to teach me something, just like when I first awakened my Aura.

Me 「 The Sword Essence is the sword of the heart. If you imbue your heart into the sword, wouldn't that work? 」

Idiot 「 You've already reached the pinnacle of the Demonic Heavenly God Art. You've freely deciphered it and even devised formations. In the realm of imbuing the heart into the sword, there's hardly any meaningful difference between you and me. 」

Me 「 Then, is it a matter of the type of heart you imbue? 」

Idiot 「 That's bullshit. Dive deeper into it. 」

Step by step. I realized something as I followed the Guardian Spirit. It felt distant. More distant than before. The Guardian Spirit's back was slightly further away.

Me 「.....」

The stride hadn't changed. The way the Guardian Spirit walked remained the same. Yet, somehow, the pace, the speed at which the horizon was traversed, had changed.

I had to quicken my steps not to fall behind the Guardian Spirit.

Idiot 「Most martial artists will never even glimpse the Sword Essence in their lifetime. Not most, but 99.99% of them. But you, incredibly lucky, have witnessed the Sword Essence twice, haven't you? Then, you should grasp a hint of enlightenment from there.」

Me 「Twice...」

Idiot 「Yes. Let's set aside mine since it was just an illusion. But what about your master? Didn't she show you the Sword Essence for the last time before leaving the world?」

Step, step.

The Guardian Spirit's back grew even more distant.

However, the Guardian Spirit was just walking at a regular pace.

I, too, had to increase my speed.

Idiot 「Let me ask you. Did your master have any inner energy left then? 」

I recalled the last time I embraced my master's shoulders. The sensation of something that shouldn't die, dying in my arms. It was a painful memory, but remembering someone was always hard.

Me 「No. 」

Idiot 「Did she use up her true energy when she broke the seal? Was there any vital energy left? 」

Me 「...No. 」

Idiot 「Did she have any physical strength left? 」

Me 「 No. Master had absolutely no energy left. 」

Idiot 「 So, no inner energy, no true energy and no physical strength. Yet, how could your master use the Sword Essence? Why did the mountain split open? Did the mountain split open on its own out of respect for the Grand Master of the Demonic Sect? 」

Me 「 ..... 」

I clenched my teeth.

Not because I was deep in thought, but because the Guardian Spirit had become so fast that I had to run at full speed or he would disappear from sight in an instant, forcing me to bite down and use light-foot techniques.

Step! Step!

Idiot 「 There was nothing left in your master. So... 」

Me 「 She must have drawn from the outside. 」

The landscape flashed by at breakneck speed.

Me 「If there's no inner energy, then you must use external energy.」

Idiot 「Right. That's the logical conclusion.」

Clouds passed by, mountains and forests, countless villages.

Idiot 「What is external energy? Life... vitality, something like that?」

Me 「Oh, impressive. Using such abstract terms, you're quite adept at imitating Homo sapiens.」

Me 「This foolish spirit....」

Idiot 「Inner energy, or ki, is, in other words, Aura. It's the realization of your will. It's no different from writing down the images in your mind and engraving them on paper. If the paper is the world, then the characters are Aura. Then, what is external energy?」

Step.

Idiot 「What in this world could be called the will of the world?」

At that moment, my tongue moved instinctively.

Me 「Constellations.」

Idiot 「.....」

Me 「It's the Constellations. Constellations define the laws of the world. Or rather, there are Constellations that define the laws of the world. They are the masters of the stage, and if a stage is a world, then they are the masters of a world. If they will something, it's as if the world itself wills it.」

I realized as I spoke. Not because I understood and then spoke, but because I understood as I spoke. What would have remained vague if I had only thought about it became clear as I put it into words.

Me 「It can't just be nature. There must be Constellations in that place. Constellations that rule that place. Only in such a world can you draw external energy, and that external energy is the inner energy of the Constellations. The Sword Essence is about drawing the inner energy of Constellations.」

Idiot 「Right! To freely use the Sword Essence, one must become one with the Constellation that rules that world. Without Constellations, there's no will, and without will, there's no Sword Essence.」

The Guardian Spirit's laughter floated lightly.

Idiot 「In the world your master lived in, the Constellation 'The Golden Dragon of the Great River' reigned supreme. That Constellation, cursed to never die even with the sword of Constellation Killer embedded in its heart, defined the rules of that world with its resentment of 'not being able to die'. Thus, the humans living in that world became 'bodies that couldn't die', zombies, or gangshi.」

We sped past the last village and finally only mountains, forests, and clouds stretched on endlessly.

Idiot 「So how could one draw the inner energy of such a world's Constellation?」

Me 「...You have to become more of a Constellation than the Constellation itself.」

I felt like I knew the answer.

Me 「The Constellation suffered from the sword embedded in its heart, unable to die. But... my master suffered more. More than the agony of 'not being able to die', my master, without a doubt, suffered more than that Constellation.」

In other words.

Me 「If you want to freely use Mutia's power, you just have to be more obsessed with time than Mutia. If you desire return more fervently than Mutia, then you can freely wield the Sword Essence in Mutia's world.」

Becoming even more like your opponent.

Me 「To use the power of Hisimet Cretsu as if it were your own, not by commanding it but to freely use it, you have to be more obsessed with people's secrets than Hisimet Cretsu.」

That was the principle of the Sword Essence.

Me 「To kill winter, you have to become more like winter than winter itself.」

How far had we run?

C;^;^;;ヅ

-----

The mountains flattened to meet the horizon, and the forests dwindled to the ground. Only the sky managed to hold onto a few clouds. As the Guardian Spirit walked step by step, and I ran, the world gradually whitened.

Suddenly, I wondered if this world too had an end.

Me 「The Sword Essence isn't a panacea that can always be used. Only when you understand that world. Only when you feel that world more bitterly than the world itself, can you barely use it. But... if that's the case.」

I stopped.

The Guardian Spirit also stopped and turned to look at me.

Me 「How could you use the Sword Essence in my master's world?」

There, at the end of the world, even the clouds had vanished.

-----

Only the horizon could be seen.

No mountains or trees.

Only the bottom edge of the world stretched infinitely. A single line of black and a surrounding white. As Aura amplified my senses, as far as possible, my vision expanded. My view became ten, thirty, a hundred times broader than usual.

-----

Yet, the world remained white.

It was beautiful.

A pale vastness, silent and devoid of all sound, lay there. A boundary where even breathing seemed forbidden, a world of rest where everything... faded... away.

I thought someone might consider this place heaven. And this place deserved to be someone's heaven.

There, the Guardian Spirit's eyes were looking back at me.

Sword Emperor 「 Watch closely. 」

The Guardian Spirit raised his arm.

Sword Emperor 「 I'll show you for the third time. 」

His arm moved slowly.

Sword Emperor 「 The next time you see this, it will be when you and I fight. 」

And then...

-----

Something split silently.

-----

I blinked. In the blink of an eye, while my eyelids closed and opened, the silently split crevice quietly widened. It seemed as if the more the crevice widened, the more it consumed the time of this world, erasing it.

-----

The white crevice expanded uncontrollably. It wasn't that the world was collapsing, nor was it being destroyed. It simply vanished. Erased.

It was being cut by a sword.

[The Faceless Conductor notices an anomaly in the stage.]

The master of the cut world spoke.

[The Faceless Conductor urgently requests your departure.]

[The request for departure has been forwarded to The Staff of Time Immemorial.]

[Approved.]

Finally, my entire field of vision turned white.

[You are forcibly transported to the 70th floor.]

My vision swirled chaotically.

Black diluted, white intensified, and various colors swirled together. My mind began to feel nauseous. My senses, perfectly adapted to the 2D world, were forcibly dragged back to the original world.

"Such outrageous behavior...!!"

The voice of 'The Staff of Time Immemorial' thundered in my head like a clap of thunder.

"Are you aware of what almost happened!? If you cleared the stage, you should've quietly returned. Moreover, my goodness. How dare a non-challenger, an outsider, presume...!"

I struggled to open my eyes.

The face of the mage, stained with dismay and anger, was before me.

"You, the unparalleled troublemakers of this world!!"

"....."

Despite the nausea, I managed to speak.

Even in difficult times, there are moments when one must speak.

"That's not right. Since there are two of us, rather than being an unparalleled nuisance, we should be called a nuisance with only the two of us..."

Kang!

The mage swung his staff and hit me on the head.

---

Chapter 356:

Return to the Origin

(1)

---

The mage, The Staff of Time Immemorial, sighed.

"...I can't remember the last time I felt such astonishment, Sword Emperor. Though I can't see you nor have you spoken to me directly, I must tell you, there is a reason you failed to conquer the Zenith of Heaven."

The mage massaged his forehead, clearly exasperated.

It was unusual for her to show such strong emotions, given her normally stoic nature. The impact of the Sword Essence demonstrated by the Guardian Spirit must have been quite profound.

"Hmm. What exactly happened...?"

I shook my head, trying to clear it. The aftereffects of transitioning back from the flat world to the original world had not yet dissipated. A wave of nausea clung to my throat.

"What happened? Oh, something monumental."

At my question, the Staff of Time Immemorial frowned.

"The stage almost collapsed."

"Collapsed, you say...?"

"Literally. Some stages are Constellations in themselves. If a stage is destroyed, the Constellation suffers as well. The ghost you've been carting around... it nearly sliced through the stage."

"Excuse me? Mr. Gong-Ja has a ghost following him around?"

The Apothecary blinked in surprise, hearing this for the first time. However, the Staff of Time Immemorial seemed too irritated to address her confusion.

"Had we left it as is, the wound inflicted by your ghost would have widened, expanding rapidly. The Heaven of Truth would have been cut like paper! While there are several worlds that could substitute for the 75th floor, what a shock it must have been for the souls resting in the Heaven of Truth, akin to a bolt from the blue!"

The mage glared into the void, as if she would slap the Guardian Spirit if it were in front of him.

"I can't fathom what was going through your mind to do such a thing."

-Not at all. I was merely placing my trust in you.

The Guardian Spirit crossed its arms, chuckling.

-Even if the world were to crumble, I believed you would do your utmost to prevent it. Yes, you might say I trusted in your goodness. In fact, you should be thanking me for acknowledging your virtue, coming from someone like me.

"What's your ghost saying?"

"Ah."

Kim Gong-Ja, a moment of contemplation in a split second.

"It says it swung the sword thoughtlessly and apologizes."

"At least it knows shame, that's a relief."

The mage clicked his tongue.

Watching him, a twinge of guilt pricked at my conscience for having relayed the Guardian Spirit's nonsensical words and offloading the stress onto him... But, wait. Upon reflection, wasn't conveying the Guardian Spirit's absurdities directly, thus transferring the stress onto someone else, the epitome of a guilt-free conscience?

"....."

While we conversed, the Apothecary seemed lost in thought. Hearing about the existence of a ghost accompanying me might have plunged her into contemplation, so I inquired.

"What's the matter?"

"Ah, it's nothing, really. Hmm. Just wondering why I was selected as the judge for the 75th floor. It's been bothering me."

Fortunately, her concerns weren't related to the Guardian Spirit.

"By the way, Mr. Gong-Ja. Could you tell me about the judges before me and what their stages were like?"

It wasn't a difficult request, so I explained it to her in detail. Listening to my story, the Apothecary's eyes, even behind thick glasses, darkened noticeably.

"...As I thought."

The Apothecary murmured.

"Mr. Gong-Ja, if I were to die, I'd end up in the Heaven of Truth."

"Excuse me?"

"That's the criterion for the judges, the heaven they would go in the afterlife."

My eyes widened in surprise, while the Apothecary narrowed hers.

"Think about it. The world judged by the Paladin was the Heaven of Music, right?"

"Yes, that's correct, but..."

"The Paladin is, of course, an expert in music. So, it makes sense she was in charge of the Heaven of Music. Yes, but if that's the case, shouldn't I have been summoned to the Heaven of Medicine? After all, my expertise lies in medicine."

The Apothecary spoke in a hushed tone.

"But instead, I was summoned to the Heaven of Truth. Completely unrelated to my field of expertise. I'm certainly not known for [not lying] or having specialized knowledge in [2D planes]."

"....."

"So, who becomes a judge isn't determined by whether they're an expert or not. Absolutely not."

Indeed.

I found myself mimicking the Apothecary's narrowed gaze.

"If the Paladin were to die, she would be reborn in the Heaven of Music. If the Countess were to die, she'd go to the Heaven of Gold. If Viper dies, he'd go to the Heaven of Martial Arts, and if the Heretic Inquisitor dies, he'd end up in the Heaven of Laws. And..."

"Yes, if I were to die, I'd be in the Heaven of Truth."

The Apothecary nodded.

"While you were challenging the stage, Mr. Gong-Ja, I pondered what afterlife I'd desire if I were to die and reach the other side. It was hard to imagine, but... Hmm. I concluded I'd want to be in a world where [I wouldn't have to worry about what others truly thought]."

"...I see."

"Yes, that's what I thought. Therefore, the Heaven of Truth is the afterlife I desire."

I shifted my gaze. The Apothecary also looked in the direction I turned.

There, the Staff of Time Immemorial was silently enduring our stares.

"Is that true?"

"...Yes. Correct. You've hit the mark."

The mage responded rather refreshingly.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial acknowledges the accuracy of your interrogation.]

[You have unveiled a secret that The Staff of Time Immemorial had concealed.]

The message popped up, confirming it for me. How considerate.

"Originally, I planned to reveal [all the heavens you've experienced so far are such and such] when you reached the 79th floor, to give off a final boss vibe."

The mage looked as though she had lost a cherished hidden toy.

"But you figured it out much sooner than I expected. Ah. There goes the element of surprise."

"...Is the heaven I'd go to after dying also predetermined?"

"Hmm."

The mage smiled enigmatically.

"That's a question I can't recklessly answer. It's not up to me to decide. Anyway, Apothecary, was it? You've done well. You may go now."

With a tap of his staff on the ground, the Apothecary's feet began to undulate like a swamp. A forced summoning had begun. The Apothecary flailed as she sank into the ground.

"Ah! Go, Mr. Gong-Ja! Fighting! Though I heard I'd forget about this incident, you'll remember..."

"That's right."

I smiled and saw the Apothecary off.

"I look forward to the special potions you'll develop next."

Plonk-

In an instant, the Apothecary's figure vanished below the surface. Only a ripple remained where she had disappeared, quickly settling down.

After a moment's delay, the 70th-floor lobby was enveloped in a chilling white hue.

'Only I will remember these stages.'

It wasn't a new realization.

I shrugged and turned to the mage.

"Alright then. Who's the next judge? Anastasia? Sir Marcus? Considering only the top hunters have been summoned so far, the ranking must play a part in the selection criteria."

"More precisely, it's chosen among those deeply connected to you."

"Then is it Uburka? Or perhaps, Raviel?"

"Both are deeply connected to you, indeed. But neither desires an afterlife. King of Death."

The mage tapped the ground again with his staff.

"This time, the judge evaluating you might be a bit more troublesome."

Whoosh!

A light blossomed around the tip of his staff. If you looked closely, the blooming pattern resembled a lotus. As the neatly arranged lotus petals parted, a figure flickered through the beams of light.

"Uh— What's this?"

Like the previous judges, this newly summoned figure was all too familiar. Among the few people I hoped never to forget even in death, he was one.

And not in a good way.

"A summoning? Is this the famed summoning I've only heard about? What kind of unprincipled bastard summons a working man? The nerve! At least have the decency to greet me."

"....."

"What? Is something wrong? Have my eyes deceived me? It seems the very paragon of virtue, a name synonymous with the learned scholar, stands before me. Well, who else but you would summon me? I was naive to think otherwise. Why? What's your purpose this time? Shall I dance again?"

I muttered the name of the newly summoned judge, covering my forehead with my palm.

"Yoo Soo-Ha..."

"That is my name."

Of all people, why him?

My head throbbed.

He was indeed "deeply connected to me," making him a fitting choice.

"Why are you here...?"

"What? You're asking me? You summoned me."

Yoo Soo-Ha narrowed his eyes, his thin but pronounced brows furrowing elegantly.

"Wait a minute. Hey, I thought my days living in your shadow were over. Can I still be summoned by you? Is this even legal?"

Yoo Soo-Ha had long shed the status of a summoned ghoul from Ghoul Summoning. Through the skill Earth Bone Dragon's Skull I acquired from the Tower Master, he had obtained a new body.

He probably thought the days of being summoned at my whim, possibly to perform something as ludicrous as the Cossack dance, were over. The desperation in his voice as he explained his pitiable situation hinted at his fear of such an outcome.

"You bastard. Stop exploiting me. I'm trying to turn over a new leaf and live diligently! Don't you see what I'm wearing? This is my part-time uniform. I was working at the planetarium before you summoned me, part-timing!"

Yoo Soo-Ha seemed to think I had performed the summoning.

Perhaps he feared being ordered to perform another dance. He began to fervently explain his unfortunate circumstances.

"I have to rush to the Celestial Martial Guild after my shift! Because of you, I have to slog away as a disciple there, huh? Do you have any idea how much I'm suffering, you heartless..."

"Scared?"

"What?"

"Are you scared I'll make you do something weird?"

"That bastard..."

Yoo Soo-Ha's expression soured.

"Now that you're the 2nd ranked hunter, have a top hunter as a personal bodyguard, are friends with all the major guild leaders, and married the most beautiful person in the world, do you see me as just dogwater?"

"Yep."

"Damn it."

Yoo Soo-Ha seemed to reluctantly accept that he could indeed be seen as H<sub>2</sub>O.

"Anyway, I didn't summon you this time."

"Then who did?"

"It's a long story."

I delved into the lengthy explanation.

About how I'm currently trying to conquer floors 70 through 79. To advance, it's not enough for me to excel; approval from the chosen judge is necessary. And this time, unfortunately, it's him.

".....Hmm."

Yoo Soo-Ha crossed his arms.

Before hearing the story, a slight unease fluttered between his brows, but now it had vanished.

His dark eyes, inscrutable, scanned me from head to toe.

"So, to sum up. To move on to the next floor, I absolutely have to approve, right?"

"Correct."

"No matter if it takes ten years or a hundred, I can just sit here and watch you stumble through the stage."

"That's right."

"And the flow of time differs between the stage and here, so if I wish, I can speed through long periods swiftly?"

Yoo Soo-Ha's probing made me feel uneasy, but I couldn't lie when the Staff of Time Immemorial would just explain everything anyway.

"...Yes."

"Figures. I've got my answer."

Yoo Soo-Ha smirked.

It was a devilish smile.

"Let's start with a dance, Gong-Ja."

What?

"Of course, by dance, I mean the one I performed. That dance. The Cognac Dance or whatever... You know it best since you were the one who ordered it. Let's assess your dancing skills first. We can talk about the stage afterward."

Hold on.

"Why? Won't dance? If you don't want to, fine. Let's just start with a hundred years. Even a monster like you would eventually feel like dancing after being stuck on the same stage for a hundred or two hundred years, right?"

Hold on.

"Of course, I don't plan to stop at just one dance. That would be too lenient. Ah, we have so many unresolved feelings between us, don't we, Mr. Gong-Ja?"

You damn bastard.

Editor Note: The gender of 'The Staff of Time Immemorial' has been revealed to be female in the later chapters. We'll be making changes to the previous chapters shortly as well.

Chapter 357:

Return to the Origin

(2)

---

I shouted valiantly.

"How could you do this to me...!"

"There are hundreds of reasons why I can. You bastard."

Yoo Soo-Ha didn't even flutter an eyelash.

I shuddered. Could this guy truly lack blood, tears, and conscience?

In other words, was he indeed Yoo Soo-Ha?

"Yoo Soo-Ha. I secured you a job at the Café Planetarium..."

"Eh. I'm overwhelmed with gratitude, but it's not like I ever asked for it?"

"I gifted you a disciple position under the Celestial Martial Guild Master..."

"Thanks to you, every morning and night, all the muscles in my body joyously tear apart. Much appreciated."

"I gave you back your life...! Snap out of it! Open your eyes!"

"And if my memory hasn't deteriorated, you were the one who killed me in the first place. You fucking bastard. A person without blood, tears, or conscience. Right now, my mental state is crystal clear, and my eyes are bright and alert."

If we're counting, you were the one who tried to kill me first at the 2nd floor hunting ground! Before the regression, I was actually murdered! If we went to court, the judge, spectators, jurors, and even the news reporters would all stand to acknowledge my innocence and your ruthlessness!

"Change..."

I clasped my head with both hands and moaned towards the Staff of Time Immemorial.

"Please, change the judge...!"

"No."

Only a cold reply infiltrated my ears.

"That won't happen, King of Death. The fates of this tower favor you, but sometimes they wish to screw with you as well, even if I don't intend it. Think of it as the price for the chaos you caused on the 75th floor."

This can't be happening.

"There's no way Yoo Soo-Ha is the person most deeply connected to me! What about Uburka? Logically, it should be my son's turn first!"

"Didn't you know? [The Muscle Pig Dreaming of Parricide] doesn't want to go to an afterlife."

"Why not! Is it discrimination against the Earth Spirit Tribe!? Does the tower, which promises a second chance to everyone, even its founder, disregard and belittle our Earth Spirit children!"

"No... it's just that [Muscle Pig] thinks there's no need for an afterlife when you're dead..."

Damn it, Uburka!

Who raised you to become such a cool parricide! Uburka! Here I am, desperately calling out your name, and you can't even hear me!

"Then, Raviel. Yes, my love exists."

I pinned my last hope.

"It makes no sense for Raviel not to be the judge. This is invalid! Summon my Duchess right now!"

"[The Silver-Clad Heart]... Ah, was that title revoked? Anyway, [Duchess Ivansia] doesn't desire an afterlife unless it's with you. Memories with you are far more important than any afterlife."

Ah, Raviel! I feel the same!

Joy overwhelmed me!

But... thinking that the result of this joy is the psychopathic ponytail male brat flickering in and out of my sight within 2 meters, why does my heart ache so...!

"Are we done talking? So, when will you dance?"

Shut your damn mouth.

"...Fine. I'll concede to the judge selection as it is."

I lifted my head. My face was as hard as stone.

"But I will absolutely not dance. Never ever, Yoo Soo-Ha."

"Hah? Didn't you hear what I said? If you don't dance, I'll never stamp the approval. Never, as in forever."

"Don't stamp it."

"What?"

"Do as you like. You'll end up stamping it anyway."

Yoo Soo-Ha looked incredulous.

"Ha, this is a funny situation. Do you think you're so special that I'll stamp the approval just because of you?"

"Because initially, you'll watch me with the thought, 'Let's see how far he can go,' but soon you'll get bored and fast-forward through the boring parts. Still, seeing no change in me, your desire for revenge will be overshadowed by the boredom and tedium of the moment. Roughly 2 days later, you'll have an epiphany, 'What kind of idiotic thing am I doing, let's just go back,' and you'll cut ties, saying, 'Approved, approved, I don't care if you pass or mess up.'"

"Uh...."

Yoo Soo-Ha blinked.

"...That's totally me."

"Exactly. So, there's no chance I'll dance. Wake up from your dream."

"Wait. How do you know what's in my heart so well?"

"Who knows? Maybe because I've once thoroughly stirred up your insides. In a sense, I know your inner thoughts better than you do."

"No fucking way."

Having no more business with the ponytail man who can't speak without swearing, I turned to the Staff of Time Immemorial.

"Please send me to the next stage immediately. I'll just bide my time there. You said this judge might be a bit tricky, right? You were wrong. I'll simply go to the 76th floor and slow down my sense of time. A week will feel like a second, a year like a minute. Before I know it, the stage will be cleared. How about that? Mage, my victory is now clear."

"Remarkable."

The mage truly marveled at me, as if astonished.

"You really are amazing..."

I'll take it as a compliment.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial sends you off.]

As the two lukewarm gazes saw me off, I was transported to the next floor.

[You have entered the 76th Stage.]

[You are stepping into a place where you should not be.]

What I said to the mage wasn't a lie, it was the truth.

As the white light faded and my feet touched the ground of the new stage, my first thought was to numb my sense of time. It was only natural, wasn't it? I knew what kind of person Yoo Soo-Ha was and how to safely navigate his temper.

"God of Snakes."

Before delving into time manipulation, I decided to see what kind of heaven this place was.

"Let's start with the information."

"Sss."

The faithful guide to my strategy manual, the God of Snakes, flicked its tongue.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests his authority.]

[Information about the current stage has been revealed to you.]

Words twirled before my eyes.

+

[Heaven of Vision]

Floor: 76th

Constellation: 'The Lotus Reflected on Water'

Difficulty: C+

Description (Lv.1): Everyone in this world sees you exactly as you wish to be seen!

You control all gazes. Want to appear as a charming beauty? You will be seen as such. Desire to be seen as a wealthy person? It shall be reflected so.

All you need is to wish how you want to be perceived by others. Beyond that, no effort is needed. You gain infinite freedom regarding yourself.

However, you gain not a speck of right over others. You cannot decide how to view others. You can only see them in the way they wish....

+

The text continued downwards.

I chuckled as I read the information.

"This would be a paradise for Yoo Soo-Ha."

That was my first thought. If there were a heaven that suited Yoo Soo-Ha, this place wouldn't be a bad choice.

"Okay, snake. Hurry and unveil the rest of the hidden details....."

But just as I was about to command Hisimet Cretsu, a completely different idea from my first thought crossed my mind, akin to a suspicion.

'—Wait a minute.'

I hesitated.

'A heaven? A heaven suited for Yoo Soo-Ha?'

Something bothered me. It felt as uncomfortable as biting into an eggshell in a well-eaten egg rice.

"Keeek?"

Hisimet Cretsu tilted its head, puzzled by my sudden pause in speech.

"....."

However, my lips remained sealed. While my mouth stopped and my tongue stilled, my doubts spun faster and faster.

The Apothecary's words before leaving the 70th floor came to mind.

「That's the criterion for the judges.」

「The heaven they would go to in the afterlife.」

That's correct.

Meaning, if Yoo Soo-Ha were to die, he would consider this world a heaven and reincarnate here, hence the role of the judge for this stage was given to Yoo Soo-Ha.

There's nothing strange so far. What exactly is bothering me? Why is my instinct uneasy?

「What about Uburka?」

「The Muscle Pig Dreaming of Parricide doesn't want to go to an afterlife.」

The conversation I had with the magician in jest just a moment ago caught in my mind.

「Why not?」

「 No... it's just that Muscle Pig thinks there's no need for an afterlife when you're dead... 」

I felt my eyes narrow. By reducing the width of my sight, I reduced external stimuli. As unnecessary information was blocked out, my thoughts soared.

「 It doesn't make sense for Raviel not to be the judge. 」

Suddenly.

「 Duchess Ivansia doesn't desire an afterlife unless it's with you. 」

I muttered unknowingly.

".....This can't be Yoo Soo-Ha's heaven."

"Kee?"

The serpent raised its chin, looking up at me, mistaking that I was speaking to it.

Instead of correcting Hisimet Cretsu's misunderstanding, I voiced out the conclusions flowing in my mind.

"According to the [Staff of Time Immemorial], not everyone is guided to heaven upon death. Like Uburka, who has no regrets about the afterlife, or Raviel, who refuses to let go of her current memories no matter what, they would simply embrace death instead of reincarnating in heaven."

The more I voiced out my thoughts, the firmer they became.

Was it because the inside of the mouth is warm and the outside is cold? Thoughts that were mushy and melting on my tongue solidified as they passed my lips, cooling down.

"Then, Yoo Soo-Ha must accept the concept of [the world after death] to eventually reach the heaven floor. Otherwise, like Uburka or Raviel, he would just be categorized as someone who accepts death when it comes, and wouldn't meet the criteria to be selected as the judge for the 76th floor."

"....."

The serpent looked at me. The fox turned its head to glance at me. The gaze of the Guardian Spirit also fell upon me.

There must be more eyes looking down at me now, unseen by me.

"That's exactly the problem."

I stated.

"Yoo Soo-Ha would never consider this place heaven."

With certainty.

"Because even if he dies, he would wish to be reborn in [the same world]."

Not because he likes the world he was born in.

It's the opposite.

"He doesn't like other worlds either. He doesn't even think that changing himself and the world would make him a better person. He just cherishes his own body, life, and memories that he has possessed so far. As long as he can protect those, it doesn't matter what the world turns into....."

I looked up at the sky.

The clear blue expanse.

"If he can't protect those, no world can satisfy him."

I spoke towards the [Staff of Time Immemorial], presumably observing my every move in the lobby.

"I hereby challenge your selection of the judge."

There was no response.

"If Uburka and Raviel were excluded from being judges, then by the same standard, Yoo Soo-Ha cannot be a judge either. Although the reasons differ, the result is the same: they absolutely do not accept the future of [losing their memories and reincarnating in heaven]. Don't you think?"

There was still no response.

"If I'm mistaken, please correct me. But you won't be able to refute it."

Silence persisted.

"After all, as Yoo Soo-Ha himself admitted, I know him better than he knows himself."

And then.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial closes her eyes.]

[The Staff of Time Immemorial fully accepts your objection.]

Whizz—

[The 76th floor stage has been forcibly terminated.]

The world of the blue sky split apart.

Chapter 358:

Return to the Origin

(3)

---

Let's delve into a bit of a throwback.

Back when the director was a kid, the preferred pastime for children was staring blankly at the television instead of using smartphones.

On TV, you couldn't just pick whatever video you wanted to watch. You had to watch whatever the broadcasting station decided to air.

And since broadcasting stations were operated by people, nothing would be aired during the times when most were off to dreamland.

It was just like a restaurant; they didn't operate 24/7. There was a time for rest, a time for closure, and during those times, their function came to a halt—a pause.

Zzzzzt—

When the television rests, it shows a strange screen. Black and white dots mingle chaotically, buzzing away. Blink, blink. It's as if the machine AIs are playing their own version of Go at an incredible speed, with the black and white dots chaotically intermingling. Dizzily. Dizzily, and dizzily.

Zzzt, zzzt—

That was the scene before me now.

[The 76th floor stage has been forcibly terminated.]

The once blue sky had suddenly split open. From the crevices, like the proliferation of mold, black and white vomit spilled and overflowed. The sky was devoured first, then the humans wandering below, and finally, the horizon was consumed.

Zzzzzt!

[The Sixth Pillar, The Staff of Time Immemorial, intervenes.]

[The Staff of Time Immemorial seeks to maintain control of the stage.]

In the midst of a world where black and white committed chaos, there stood a mage, leaning on a solitary staff.

One of the pillars operating this tower. It was the Staff of Time Immemorial.

"...Quite an interesting story you're telling, King of Death."

The mage looked at me.

"So, you're saying that my choice was a mistake? Who is suitable to be the judge of this heaven? Who willingly has the right to pass or fail you? Considering all that, I chose Yoo Soo-Ha as the judge, and you're saying my judgment, my decision, was wrong?"

"Yes."

"....."

The mage's eyes shimmered like silver water stained with a blade. I did not shy away from the silver blade-like gaze directed at me.

"Even if Yoo Soo-Ha were to face death, he would never wish to be reborn here."

The mage didn't respond immediately. After a significant pause, she finally gripped his staff tightly.

"...Maybe there's some merit to your words. But then, what about this place?"

The mage raised her lengthy staff high and slammed it down with all her might.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial manifests its authority.]

Whoosh!

Centered around the place where the staff struck, ripples emanated. The ripples were white. The white waves surged like torrents, driving away the blackness that had been devouring this world.

At the same time.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial is transporting you.]

The noisy world of static shifted.

[You have entered the 76th stage.]

[You are stepping into a place where you should not be.]

"This is the Heaven of Machines"

Was it magic cast by the Staff of Time Immemorial? We were floating in mid-air.

Far below our feet lay a dazzling city of the future. Skyscrapers rose smoothly without a single pillar or seam, and buildings were connected like neurons in the brain. The pathways draped like spider webs between the towers glowed ceaselessly.

"In this world, countless mechanical dolls live. In your terms, they are NPCs."

The futuristic city was bustling with numerous people.

If what the mage said was true, then the vast majority of these beings were NPCs. In other words, they were not hunters reborn with souls.

"The Constellation of this world, [God of Machinery], controls billions of these mechanical dolls. Of course, the humans reborn here are unaware of such facts. Even the NPCs believe they are just like any other human. Naturally. The dolls governed by [God of Machinery] are indistinguishable from real people. And..."

"And?"

"The dolls always lose to humans at [life's decisive moments]."

A boxing-like match was being broadcasted on the city's screens.

"Here, the reborn humans always win against the dolls. The defeats are so subtly orchestrated that they never realize they're being let to win. Or rather, they never suspect that those who lose to them are merely dolls."

Thud!

The boxer with red gloves knocked his opponent to the ground. Roars of cheers echoed from beyond the screen. The boxer with blue gloves staggered and was cornered, while the red boxer triumphantly pressed on.

"Those reborn here lead lives of unbroken success. Even when faced with seemingly insurmountable crises, they ultimately emerge victorious. The sweetness of victory, the confidence of having overcome life's challenges—all the joys are gifts prepared by [God of Machinery] solely for humans."

The red boxer's uppercut landed squarely.

Boom! The blue boxer couldn't withstand it and fell onto the ring. The referee rushed to separate the two, but the victorious gleam had already stained the red boxer's face, the joy of triumph glowing brightly.

"It's a game. A kind of play. A game where they're always treated to victory. But the suspicion that [I'm being treated] never arises. It's as if they believe they've earned every victory through their own merit."

"....."

"How about it, King of Death? Doesn't this place suit Yoo Soo-Ha as heaven?"

Woahhh!

The red boxer roared. The referee grabbed his wrist and raised it high. Drunk on his victory, the red boxer bellowed like a gorilla, and the crowd responded in kind. Their cheers lavished him with even greater acclaim.

"I acknowledge you know Yoo Soo-Ha well."

Amidst the cheers filling the sky, the mage spoke softly.

"Yes, perhaps I too made a mistake once. Sorry. It's the responsibility of an administrator. As an apology, I'll recognize that you've automatically cleared the 76th floor. So now, you should focus on conquering the 77th floor..."

"How long can you keep this up?"

"...What?"

I narrowed my eyes.

"Those who wish to abandon the outside world enter the tower. Those who wish to abandon the world of the tower head to one of the heavens arranged from the 71st to the 79th floor. Is that the end? What if the souls that arrive here wish to abandon the world once more?"

"....."

"Will you then create another heaven within heaven? Build a tower within the tower, and then another within that, stacking up to a hundred floors, a thousand, ten thousand, a hundred thousand, or a million floors, building a tower that ascends eternally?"

The mage bit her lip.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial is transporting you.]

The staff gripped by the mage trembled.

[You have entered the 78th stage.]

[[You are stepping into a place where you should not be.]

"...How about this place?"

The world changed again. A tranquil yet abundant seaside village unfolded. People were paired up, peacefully engaging in conversations or enjoying meals.

"This is the Heaven of Bonds. Here, everyone can find their destined soulmate. Even those who never encountered their fate in their previous life will surely meet here and be together forever..."

"There's no end to it."

I stated, deflecting the blade in the mage's eyes with the blade in my voice.

"Staff of Time Immemorial, I now understand your true nature. You are probably a judge of the underworld, similar to the King of the Underworld, deciding which heaven the souls that die in this tower should go to."

"....."

"The difference might be that you never sentence anyone to hell."

The tower's voice echoed in my head.

[You have discerned the true nature of The Staff of Time Immemorial!]

[The Staff of Time Immemorial's privileged rights as a pillar have been activated.]

[Your memories related to the pillar are being distorted.]

[Failure.]

[All actions attempting to distort your memories are unsuccessful!]

The goddess was wrapping around my neck like a scarf. I nodded and continued to glare at the mage before me, the judge who distributes all the souls that die within the tower.

"You've made two mistakes."

"...Mistakes, what do you mean?"

"The tower never forces people from the outside world to come here. That's a decision for individuals to make. Whether the world of the tower suits them... Whether they really want to abandon the outside world once and for all. The hunters living here made that decision on their own."

I emphasized my words.

"But you didn't ask for their consent. You didn't ask the Paladin if she would choose this heaven if she were to die. You just decided on your own that the best heaven for the Paladin would be the Heaven of Music. The same goes for the Countess, the Viper, the Heretic Inquisitor, the Apothecary, and Yoo Soo-Ha; you summoned them all without [asking anything]."

"....."

"But the worst mistake is something else."

That is,

"The people who go to the heavens you manage lose all memories of their previous lives."

"...So what? They are souls who abandoned the world and went to a heaven that would make them happy. They don't need to remember the unpleasant memories, the things related to the world they have left behind."

"We didn't choose to be born into the outside world."

However,

"But the tower is a world we chose."

"....."

"A world we decided to be born into. A world we resolved to come to. Unlike the outside world where we just happened to fall into without knowing anything, we chose this place. That's what gives the tower its meaning!"

I took a step forward.

Did the mage's magic wear off?

Suddenly, I lost my footing in the air and nearly fell. But I quickly mobilized my aura to create invisible stepping stones. I used the Aerial Movement Technique. The sky could no longer signify a fall for me.

"And you made them lose the memories of [the choices they made themselves]!"

".....ugh."

"You've obliterated the meaning the tower barely managed to establish. It's the same. You've just recreated a world identical to the outside world within the tower."

Standing in the sky, I declared,

"You are not fit to be the judge of heaven."

The Staff of Time Immemorial gnashed her teeth.

"Just because you have a mouth, doesn't mean you can spout nonsense...!"

"Yeah, and it's not over yet."

I looked up at the heavens.

"Yoo Soo-Ha!"

Zzzt—

"You must be listening! You decide! Whether among the 76th, 77th, and 78th floors, there exists a heaven that you willingly wish to enter, as judged by [The Staff of Time Immemorial]! And thus, whether [The Staff of Time Immemorial] is qualified to be a judge! Or..."

The sky zzzted and split open.

"Or tell it to disappear! Whether the world of the living, where I live, the World of the Lone Child, is your world! If you were to die, tell us if that's where you'd want to be reborn! And decide who is right between [The Staff of Time Immemorial] and me!"

『What's in it for me?』

Through the gap in the sky, the same noise as before peeked through. The white and black dots flickered noisily. From there, Yoo Soo-Ha's voice flowed out.

『It's a bit unreasonable to ask me to choose without offering anything. I'm not sure, but it seems you're competing with that pillar or whatever. You're asking me to side with you, right? Then this is a transaction. Tell me, what will you give me?』

"This realistic son of a bitch..."

『Ever since I got killed by this kid, I've started to look after reality too.』

I clenched my teeth, but instead of a grinding sound, laughter seeped through the spaces between my teeth.

"Crazy bastard."

I laughed.

"You've been like this even before you died to me, you bastard."

Yoo Soo-Ha, that's the kind of man you are.

A man who prefers the living world even if he rolls in a pile of shit, and even if the living world is shit, as long as his memories remain intact, he's the kind of man who'd flip the world off. A man who wouldn't go to heaven even if he could. A man who would tell the afterlife or whatever to fuck off if it doesn't bring him the pleasures that make his current life joyful.

"I'll dance the Cossack dance for you!"

I let out a cursed laugh and shouted.

"It doesn't matter if it's for a day, two days, or a week! I'll show you my dance moves until you tell me to stop! I'll dance 10, 20 times longer than the time you danced, you shitty bastard! Tell heaven to fuck off and keep living in my world!"

『 Hmm... 』

The sky fell silent for a moment.

『 That doesn't sound like a bad world to be in, huh? 』

Before the Staff of Time Immemorial could contort its expression, the judge raised a hand in my favor.

『 Deal. 』

Warning tones embroidered my consciousness.

[The 76th stage floor is being forcibly terminated.]

[The 77th stage floor is being forcibly terminated.]

[The 78th stage floor is being forcibly terminated.]

"Seriously,"

As the Staff of Time Immemorial cursed while holding its forehead,

"These damn brats—"

The tower's proclamation fell.

[An objection has been raised against The Staff of Time Immemorial for being unfit as a pillar.]

[Requesting approval from Zuraqua.]

[Unable to confirm.]

[The question exceeds the authority of the tower.]

It had been a while since such a declaration was heard.

[The tower reconfirms the question.]

[Approved. The current issue raised is valid.]

[The tower officially recognizes the King of Death's issue as a formal agenda.]

And then,

[The tower requests a majority vote meeting from the Six Pillars of All Lives.]

White and black sands covered my view once again.

Chapter 359: The Heaven that Gathers Wails (1)

---

This wasn't my first time.

I had met with the Pillars several times before and attended meetings where the Pillars were present. So when the tower whispered, [a majority vote meeting from the Six Pillars of All Lives], I wasn't particularly startled.

"Please rise, King of Death."

I thought I would wake up in the dark Netherworld again.

That's what I was thinking.

"Do you intend to lie down like this? I advise you to get up promptly. I wish for you to regain your consciousness and show proper etiquette first. Until then, I have no intention of inviting the Duke here."

A familiar voice resonated in my ear.

"....."

I blinked my eyelids. Little by little, my vision cleared. Just like a car's windshield smeared with yellow dust being wiped clean by a wiper.

There stood a black-haired beauty with elegant eyebrows.

"Have you finally opened your eyes?"

She was undeniably a beautiful person.

She looked down at me with her head bowed. Distinctive eyes. Indifferent pupils. Lips that held no stubbornness, no obsession and no self-display. They were simply closed shut. As if rejecting all that was whitened and grayed in this world, she was clad in pure black.

Somewhere.

I had definitely seen that attire, those lips, and those pupils somewhere before.

I paused for a moment, trying to recall the name of this darkness.

".....Gu Won-Ha..... advisor?"

She nodded her head.

"Yes, that is my alias."

Her chin movement made no sound. Perhaps that's why it seemed as if, around her moving chin, gravity and even air were absent for a brief moment.

"It wouldn't be right to greet you as if it's our first meeting, would it? King of Death. I am aware that you had, albeit briefly, possessed my body, as informed by the Duke."

"Ah....."

Right.

I had been to a kingdom in the world of Tower Master Jaa Soo-Jeong. Although it was during a visit within a trauma.

At that time and place, I possessed someone. It was the woman standing before me, hands neatly folded in front, Baron Gu Won-Ha.

I had become her. That's why, upon seeing this woman of darkness, I felt déjà vu.

"The Duke owes you a debt of gratitude."

Baron Gu Won-Ha bowed.

The person Gu Won-Ha refers to as 'the Duke' must be 'Kaleidoscope Duke'. Another alias for the Tower Master.

"Ah, yes. No, not at all...."

I felt a strange sensation.

To be faced head-on with a face that was once [me].

"But why are you... um, I'll call you the Baron. Why is the Baron welcoming me? I was summoned for a meeting of the Pillars."

".....I have heard that you are an exceptionally quick-witted person."

Baron Gu Won-Ha straightened up and tilted her head slightly.

"Don't you recall anything upon hearing my voice?"

"Huh?"

Oh.

"I did think that I've heard this voice somewhere before. Somehow, it felt familiar."

"Is that so? Perhaps it would be clearer if I played it for you directly."

Baron Gu Won-Ha looked at me quietly.

That moment came.

[Test.]

[Playing the voice.]

[This message does not carry any particular meaning beyond playing the voice.]

I was taken aback. My mouth fell open.

"Wha? Wha-wha-wha-wha?!"

"Let me introduce myself properly once again."

Unaffected by my astonishment, Baron Gu Won-Ha bowed.

"I am the second advisor of the Kaleidoscope Ducal House, a subordinate and a noble who received the eleventh cup from the Sun King, Baron Gu Won-Ha. My true name is Miya. Please, call me Baron Gu Won-Ha."

The voice that flowed from underneath the bowed head was identical to the voice I had heard countless times while climbing the tower, the so-called [Voice of the Tower].

"Wait, just a moment....."

I stuttered, lost for words. I had heard a lengthy self-introduction from Baron Gu Won-Ha, but frankly, there was only one thought in my mind.

"The voices that come from the Tower..... aren't automatic responses by some system but you...?"

"Yes. It's all done manually."

"What?!"

I was astounded!

"Manually... All of it? But I'm not the only Hunter who hears the Tower's voice. There are countless others! Every time Hunters learn a skill or ascend a stage, they hear a voice, and that's..."

"All done manually."

"That's impossible!!"

"But, as a matter of fact, it is possible."

Baron Gu Won-Ha remained expressionless throughout.

"The flow of time in your world and here is different. From your perspective, time here is virtually at a standstill, King of Death. Even if events occur simultaneously for you, for me, it's merely a task that I can address one by one."

"But... you'd have to respond to Hunters thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of times a day...!?"

"That is correct."

The Baron tilted her head as if it was nothing out of the ordinary.

"Is there a problem?"

There were nothing but problems.

"The epitome of inefficiency....."

"Inefficiency arises only when time and space are limited. Here, time can be manipulated at will, and as many different worlds as desired can be observed. The concept of inefficiency does not exist."

"Don't you get tired...?"

"It's for the Duke. There's no reason to be weary."

It seemed sincere. My goodness.

"The important matter at hand is not my work, King of Death. First, please dress properly."

Only then did I take a proper look around.

Just as Baron Gu Won-Ha's face was familiar to me, the place where I had awakened was incredibly familiar. The grand council hall of the kingdom where all the nobles gathered for discussions. The very place I had visited when I was possessing Baron Gu Won-Ha.

"Why here....."

Weren't the Pillars supposed to meet in the dark Netherworld?

"An explanation will follow shortly. For now, please organize your attire. Even if you personally know the Duke, in my presence, etiquette must be observed. I cannot allow you to meet the Duke in your current state."

"M-My appearance? What's wrong with my clothes?"

"They are crude."

"....."

Baron Gu Won-Ha scrutinized me from head to toe. Naturally, my current outfit was Anastasia fashion. In other words, I was wearing a black leather outfit.

I couldn't bring myself to argue, so I averted my gaze.

".....But this outfit was quite expensive."

"How much?"

"Huh?"

"You said it was expensive. May I ask how much, if you don't mind?"

I mentioned the price Anastasia had told me.

Baron Gu Won-Ha heard the cost and lightly nodded. Then, she picked up one of the garments laid out on the desk and handed it to me.

I awkwardly accepted the clothes.

"What's this for?"

"It's at least 120 times more expensive than that."

"....."

"Please get dressed."

I obediently changed.

"This is the control room that oversees all the towers."

While I was changing, Baron Gu Won-Ha spoke softly, her back turned to me.

"It was modeled after the kingdom's grand council hall. Although it looks the same, it's an entirely different space. From your perspective... Let's see. This is the [Basement Floor 1] of the tower."

Basement Floor 1.

While slipping my left foot into my pants, I asked,

"Is there a Basement Floor 2?"

"There isn't. Rest assured, even if you clear the 100th floor, there won't be an event like [In fact, there are 100 basement floors from Basement Floor 1 to Basement Floor 100, and our true adventure starts now - The King of Death Saga Part 2 Begins (Celebration)]. Please, be at ease."

I had never even considered such a terrifying possibility, but somehow, it sounded plausible.... How terrifying would that be...? It would be a disaster for my soul and the whole world.

"Are you fully dressed?"

"Ah, yes. I've finished changing."

"My apologies."

Baron Gu Won-Ha turned around. She carefully examined me, now dressed in royal attire fitting the kingdom.

"Hunters, or even Constellations for that matter, can never set foot here in Basement Floor 1. Even if by a one in a million chance someone does gain access, without the proper qualifications, they would only see utter darkness."

"Interesting."

"Yes. Previously, King of Death, you too would have only seen darkness here. However, you have now temporarily obtained the qualifications. This is the first time such a thing has happened since the tower was established."

Baron Gu Won-Ha glanced at the serpent wrapped around my wrist.

"I apologize, but the qualification is exclusive to you. Activities of [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth], [A Music Box Just for You], [Goddess of Protection], and [Sword Emperor] have been suspended. It's for security reasons, so your understanding would be appreciated."

"....."

So that's why everyone has been quiet since I arrived here.

"Fortunately, the clothes suit you well."

Was the dress check complete?

Baron Gu Won-Ha took a step back, looked me over once more, and nodded.

"This should be sufficient for meeting the Duke."

"I heard rumors that I can pull off any fashion, you know....."

"Then, let us commence the meeting."

Baron Gu Won-Ha didn't give me a chance to enter nonsense time and clapped her hands with a smack.

Creeeak—

The grand council hall's main door opened.

As if they had been waiting by the door, figures walked in.

"Confirming participants."

[Confirming participants.]

The same voice overlapped twice. Baron Gu Won-Ha, with her chin held high, directly faced the newcomers entering through the main door and called them out one by one.

"The 5th Pillar, 'The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages,' has joined."

[The 5th Pillar, 'The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages,' has joined.]

The first to enter was the Princess.

The Pillar most amicable towards me.

Her hair, a mix of golden and white as if gold conceded half of itself to white, fluttered as the Princess smiled broadly and waved excitedly at me.

If I were to liken her to an animal, it would perhaps be a chick.

"Hello, King of Death! Long time no see! How have you been —"

"I'm sorry but, Miss, please maintain your decorum."

"Oh, Miya, the advisor. You're too harsh....."

The Princess pouted her lips.

Baron Gu Won-Ha remained expressionless and continued to announce the next arrivals.

"The 4th Pillar, 'The Moon Contemplating Blindness,' has joined."

[The 4th Pillar, 'The Moon Contemplating Blindness,' has joined.]

A Pillar with a face that seemed annoyed by everything from the beginning to the end of the universe, with an expression that seemed perpetually bored, entered the hall.

If likened to an animal, perhaps an otter.

"The 3rd Pillar, 'Legislator of the Beginning,' has joined."

[The 3rd Pillar, 'Legislator of the Beginning,' has joined.]

A Pillar who seemed to have tasted every flavor of life, from bitter to sweet to spicy, and now just wanted to play, entered with a sluggish gait.

An animal comparison? Maybe a hedgehog.

"The 2nd Pillar, 'The God Who Dances in Emptiness,' has joined."

[The 2nd Pillar, 'The God Who Dances in Emptiness,' has joined.]

A Pillar who couldn't care less about the creation or destruction of worlds, focused only on their own interests, entered not with normal steps but... actually dancing ballet... no, literally performing a ballet dance as they entered... and continued to dance even after entering.

What's going on?

Seriously, what is this...?

If I had to choose an animal, undoubtedly an African flamingo.

"The 6th Pillar, 'Staff of Time Immemorial,' has joined."

[The 6th Pillar, 'Staff of Time Immemorial,' has joined.]

A mage who seemed like they would sigh upon being born and sigh again at death, as if they could only respond to life's various events with sighs, glanced at me briefly as they entered.

Compared to an animal? Perhaps an old lion.

"....."

And then.

Thud, footsteps echoed.

"Welcome, Duke."

Unlike the indifferent reception given to the other five Pillars, Baron Gu Won-Ha bowed deeply as the last figure entered. She bent her waist. She lowered her head.

"I apologize for summoning you amidst your busy schedule."

It was a distinctly different attitude. Unlike when greeting the other Pillars, Baron Gu Won-Ha didn't use 'the Voice of the Tower' this time. She didn't send a message. She used only her own voice to directly, respectfully welcome the newcomer.

"The meeting has been convened according to the regulations you previously commanded, but the legitimacy of the convening is entirely up to you, Duke."

"It's fine. It looks perfectly legitimate, doesn't it? As always, you're reliable, my advisor."

"Thank you."

The Tower Master.

A person who could assume any expression, mimic any voice, known in this world by the alias Kaleidoscope Duke, and familiar to me as Jaa Soo-Jeong, smiled radiantly at me with platinum blonde hair.

And the owner of the Tower, the Duke of this realm, greeted me—

"Hai, King of Death."

"....."

"Hewwo."

"....."

"Ah? You seem a bit underwhelmed. I heard this was the latest greeting method. Wasn't it? Hihi? Hiiii. Hiya? Um. Hellohello?"

No.....

You, no, you.....

From all around, sighs filled the air. Baron Gu Won-Ha sighed, the Staff of Time Immemorial had been sighing from the start, and the other Pillars joined the sighing ensemble, seemingly expecting this. A bountiful harvest of sighs.

"Mom! That's not it!"

Only the Princess, instead of sighing, scrunched her face and spoke up firmly.

"It's Hi UwU!"

"Ah, yes. Thank you, my daughter."

"Yep. I'll gladly accept Mom's thanks. From now on, make sure to use what I taught you without mixing it up."

Tower Master Jaa Soo-Jeong turned to look at me.

And greeted me with an extremely elegant gesture.

"Let me greet you again, King of Death. Hi UwU."

Your final boss aura, where did you sell it off to?

And that's definitely not the latest greeting method, just so you know....

Chapter 360: The Heaven that Gathers Wails (2)

---

I earnestly explained why "Hi UwU" wasn't considered a modern greeting.

So, I ended up having a session explaining this abomination, "Hi UwU," to the owner of the tower. Never in my life, or the Tower Master's for that matter, did we imagine that such a moment would come... Anyway, no one knew. How could they?

"I knew, King of Death. Did you think I didn't know? I threw that joke to ease your tension, out of consideration for you."

"Ahaha. That was a truly nice, genuinely high-quality joke, Chief."

"It's Tower Master, not chief."

With that, the Tower Master narrowed her eyes.

"Since an objection has been raised, it must be addressed."

Her amethyst eyes flicked between me and the mage.

"King of Death and the Staff of Time Immemorial, please step forward."

"....."

The mage, holding her staff, walked to the front.

The spot in the grand council chamber where the king used to sit and preside over meetings— the throne. The Tower Master was sitting at the base of the chair, casually leaning her head against the throne's armrest.

And there, the Staff of Time Immemorial and I, stood across each other with the throne between us.

"The proposer is The Heaven that Gathers Wails. The agenda is the no-confidence in the Staff of Time Immemorial. Is this correct?"

"It is."

I nodded.

The Tower Master hummed, resting her chin on her hand.

"It's not just a [complaint] or a [suggestion], but a [no-confidence], you say."

A smile curved like an inverted crescent moon formed on her lips.

"Interesting!"

The Tower Master exclaimed cheerfully.

Before I could even hesitate, she continued.

"Firstly, the Pillars should not take this situation negatively."

The Tower Master looked around at the Pillars as she spoke.

"I know many here are not fond of the King of Death."

Though the Pillars remained silent, the Tower Master continued as if she knew what was on their minds.

"Arrogant."

"Presumptuous."

"A mere fledgling Constellation dares to object to the Pillars' actions."

"And to declare no-confidence, no less!"

"I've had my doubts ever since he started playing with the rules."

"He's been flattered too much, and now he dares to cross the line."

Even now, the Tower Master's words sounded like the hissing of a serpent to me.

"We have always limited our actions."

"Despite having the power to do as we please, we exercise restraint."

"Even that is a grace we extend."

"Yet, he fails to see."

"Impudent."

"Taking care of your world and creating conditions for you to shine, King of Death. Is this how you repay us?"

The Pillars remained motionless, not a single facial muscle twitched.

But the Tower Master's voice swirled around them, wriggling like sinews beneath a layer of skin.

"And above all."

"How dare."

"How dare he challenge the Tower Master."

"Before even reaching the 50th floor."

"Before even earning a Constellation's name."

"Impertinent."

"As if he's ripe for trouble—"

Bang! A sound like a balloon popping dispersed the drowsy air.

The Tower Master had clapped her hands.

"—they say."

The Tower Master once again scanned the Pillars.

"I know some of you must be thinking this."

"....."

"Please, don't."

Her voice was as clear and pure as a crystal newly formed by the earth.

"Because, everyone. The very [arrogance], [presumption], and [immaturity] that the King of Death is displaying right now are exactly what I myself did before I stood here."

And it was transparent.

"Raising a no-confidence, not just a simple complaint or suggestion. Shouting that what you're doing is fundamentally wrong, not just something that can be fixed with a little tweaking. That's exactly what I did in all sorts of ways before I established the tower, and what turned me into an extreme lunatic, something that all the Pillars gathered here should recognize."

For the first time, someone spoke up.

It was the Legislator of the Beginning.

"The Tower Master and the King of Death are not the same."

The Legislator of the Beginning spoke with a calm but firm voice.

"The Tower Master didn't just shout about something being wrong. She proposed a better [alternative]. She didn't stop at raising a no-confidence. She said she would [take over] and she did."

The Legislator of the Beginning looked at me. His eyes were lifeless.

"It's easy to point fingers. It's not hard to criticize. Calling something wrong is convenient. Mocking is fun, and condemning is always a pleasure."

"....."

"Many just stop there. They don't go any further. They don't propose concrete alternatives, they don't say they can do better, and they don't take on the responsibility that comes with it. I understand that, but... Well, isn't it natural to not consider that a fair attitude?"

"That's unfair to the King of Death."

The Tower Master immediately responded.

The Legislator of the Beginning hesitated. The Tower Master leaned her chin on her hand, looking at him.

"Everyone here knows the journey the King of Death has taken so far."

"....."

"He gathered the ceaseless autumn rain and bloomed peonies in the eternal frost. He melted the gilding of hearts and returned the self to a lost puppet. He faced every single bit of criticism and condemnation head-on, instead of avoiding them."

The Tower Master concluded quietly.

"So it's unfair to judge the King of Death like that. I wanted to make that clear."

"....."

"But on the other hand."

The Tower Master turned to me.

"This is the crux of the issue, King of Death."

I didn't speak. I just listened quietly.

The Tower Master continued.

"Let me remind you of something you already know, King of Death. Declaring no-confidence in someone never ends with a mere objection. You have to take their place, do everything they did, and more."

"Yeah."

And finally, I spoke.

"Of course."

"Good."

Bang! The Tower Master clapped her hands again.

"The premise is clear, so what we need to do is simple."

The Tower Master spread her arms.

"As always, King of Death. Prove yourself."

The Tower Master declared the rules to us.

"If the King of Death proves he has the skills and will to match, the vote of no confidence in the Staff of Time Immemorial shall pass. The Staff will step down from its pillar position. In other words, the King of Death will take over the [Netherworld] of this tower on behalf of the Staff."

"On the other hand, should he fail to do so, he must be prepared to face the consequences."

The Tower Master did not specify what those consequences would be.

She simply added with her characteristic smile, "At the very least, it goes without saying that you will no longer be qualified to challenge me."

I clenched my fists tightly.

"Understood."

"Good."

The Tower Master's smile deepened, this time directed at the mage.

"How about you, Staff of Time Immemorial?"

"...No problem."

The Staff responded, as if carefully holding onto a red autumn leaf, like a branch in fall.

The other pillars sat in a circle at a distance from us. Although the audience was lesser, this place was no different from a colosseum.

The stakes of the duel were no less significant than any gladiatorial arena.

[Announcing the current vote status.]

[King of Death: 0 votes, Abstentions: 2 votes, Staff of Time Immemorial: 3 votes.]

As expected, the start was not in my favor.

I had committed the crime of being troublesome numerous times. Even if the Tower Master said to disregard that, it was impossible not to be influenced. Moreover, the Staff of Time Immemorial had been a colleague, working as a pillar for a long time.

But looking at it from another angle, there were still 2 abstentions among the pillars. Two of them were taking a neutral stance towards me. It wasn't a bad situation for me.

"I should start by saying how deeply disappointed I am in this situation."

The mage was the first to speak.

"King of Death, I have favored you. While maintaining my role as an administrator, I went as far as possible to accommodate you within the bounds of fairness. And this is how you repay that favor? I intended to support you, the first divinity to appear since the Sword Emperor. I could have been your patron. Trying to displace me from my pillar position is like cutting off your own fingers."

"....."

"It's not too late even now."

The mage discussed my interests, reminding me of the favors she had granted and what she could offer in the future. She highlighted how much she could help me with her position and power.

It was the simplest yet most powerful method of persuasion.

"Right, I might have made a mistake in appointing Yoo Soo-Ha as the judge. You were right to point that out. I admit it and apologize. But even pillars can make mistakes. To condemn me for a single mistake, isn't that arrogance?"

Next, the mage emphasized his humanity. She pretended to step back, only to disparage me for making him do so.

This too was an effective attack. The mage knew well that the outcome of this duel would be decided by a majority vote. Convincing the pillars was more important than convincing me.

"Let's assume you succeed in removing me."

The mage sighed lightly and continued.

"Since the tower's inception, there have been many discussions on what to do with the [Netherworld]. Among them, my view prevailed, and I was given control of the design from the 70th to the 79th floor."

The history of the tower.

"Don't think this is the first time a vote of no confidence against a pillar has been declared. Since the tower was established, many constellations have coveted the position of a pillar. And as a pillar in charge of a sensitive issue, I've been attacked just as much, but..."

Despite that, the mage, who has maintained his position as a pillar, lightly bit the tip of her staff.

As if holding a pipe in her mouth.

"In the end, the same issue that the Legislator of the Beginning spoke of obstructed them."

"....."

"It's easy to say I'm wrong. Anyone can point out flaws, but what about responsibility? Do you, King of Death, have an alternative to my heavens?"

Finally, the mage argued why he must win. He claimed he was competent and I was incompetent. Although it was merely a relative issue, it could be decided by a majority vote.

"I am making the souls happy. It's the happiness they wished for, the happiness they wanted to enjoy, and the happiness I can give. If you can't give them as much as I can, King of Death, you will never defeat me."

The logic, sharp as a sword, struck me in three ways.

It wasn't an attack that would end if I blocked just one; I had to deflect all three directions to keep myself intact.

"Let's hear your response."

"Hmm."

I gently rubbed a handkerchief with my index finger.

Right. If you're going to dig someone else's grave, you should first prepare your own. And I always keep a few graves dug in my heart.

"You did favor me. That's true, mage."

There is no rush.

Start with the easiest sword to deflect.

"You said I was the first divinity to appear after the Sword Emperor and that you intended to support me. But why did you want to support me in the first place? Surely it wasn't because you had a personal liking for me and just wanted to support me for that reason alone."

"....."

"You don't even think highly of the Sword Emperor. You consider him a troublemaker."

I saw your reaction after I cleared the Heaven of Truth.

「 You, the biggest troublemakers under the heavens! 」

「 Sword Emperor. There's a reason you failed to conquer the Zenith of the Heaven. 」

It was by no means a favorable response.

"So, just because I'm a hunter challenging the 100th floor doesn't mean you'll blindly support me. You must have judged that there's something only I can do, right?"

"....."

"You must have your own hidden reasons for supporting me. Whether those reasons are related to the Tower Master or the secrets of the 100th floor, I don't know. But you were just using me for your own purposes, not for my benefit."

"Everyone does. Are you going to consider me a materialist then?"

The mage's expression remained calm.

My words seemed neither painful nor irritating to her.

I looked towards Baron Gu Won-Ha.

[King of Death: 0 votes, Abstentions: 2 votes, Staff of Time Immemorial: 3 votes.]

The vote status was magically engraved above the Baron's head. The score had yet to change.

I reorganized my stance.

"No, and I'm not condemning you just because you made one mistake."

"That's unfortunate. To my eyes, it seems inevitable."

"A mistake is an error committed unintentionally. But what if it was intentional? What if you knew it would happen and merely ignored it? If you knew it was bound to happen, and it was clear it would, but you merely stood by, would that still be a mistake?"

"As if you're saying I deliberately chose the wrong judge."

"Is Yoo Soo-Ha the first?"

"What?"

"I mean, is Yoo Soo-Ha truly your first and only mistake?"

"....."

For the first time, the mage hesitated.

"Hunters decide where they will be assigned in heaven when they die. You make that decision. And you misjudged that Yoo Soo-Ha would want heaven. Luckily, I noticed the mistake and could point it out this time. But were other hunters given the same opportunity?"

"....."

"Even if you make a mistake, no one can notice. No one could point it out. So it seems like the only mistake, just appearing to be a mere accident. Can you imagine how many mistakes have been hidden over time?"

I could feel the Pillars looking at me.

I didn't even need to amplify my senses with Aura. Their gaze clung to my facial skin, tingling. Yet, I didn't stop.

"There were six heavens during my time breaking through from the 71st to the 76th floor. Out of six, you made a mistake once. Yes, maybe this was just a coincidental mistake. But what if there was one mistake out of 60 times? Or even one out of 600 times? What if there have always been souls sent to the wrong heaven due to your misjudgment or mistake?"

"....."

"Would you still call that a mistake?"

The mage's grip on the staff tightened.

".....There might be. Yes, there might. But so what? I do my best, King of Death. Can you judge better than I can? Who should go to which heaven? Who can be happier? Can you judge it better than I, the Staff of Time Immemorial?"

You cannot.

It was a question filled with certainty.

The Staff of Time Immemorial must have delivered judgment to countless souls. She would have reached this point through countless errors in judgment and trials and errors. She must have built her own experience, know-how, and tips through infinite time and countless tears.

I couldn't deny that.

"Yes. I cannot know better than you."

But that was only true for me.

"So, let's ask directly."

"Ask what?"

"The deceased. The ones who come before you after death, waiting for judgment, why not ask them directly?"

That is the only answer.

"Hunters came to the tower of their own volition. It's their right to decide where to go. If you make judgments on your own without even asking them, the same mistakes will continue to happen. Ask them where they want to go."

".....Ha. Ask them?"

The mage scoffed, clearly mocking me with her tone.

"Fine. Let's see you try asking them! If you can, that is!"

Thud.

As the mage tapped the floor with her staff, white ripples spread through the air.

And from beneath the ripples, black fingers emerged.

-Uuuuuh....

They were human hands.

No, to be precise, shadows flickering in human form.

-Uuuuh, uuuuh....

-Uuuuugh!

Fingers, palms, wrists, all were dyed black. There was no light or shadow, only blackness. Swirling black noise was all that defined their existence.

The vast assembly hall was quickly covered with hundreds of wails.

"....."

Baron Gu Won-Ha clapped lightly.

Clatter, clank, clank!

Chains burst from the ground. The chains swiftly bound each noise.

-Uuuuuuh!

-Ugh.... Grrrrr....

The wails growled in their restraints, truly ferocious in nature. It seemed as if they would attack us at any moment if they were freed from the chains.

"See! This is what you call souls, the ones who have died in the tower!"

The mage shouted.

"Only the emotions from their living moments remain, knowing nothing but screams. They are not wounded but are nothing more than rags with nothing but wounds! These are the lives that have ended, the shattered stones! Essentially, no different from that!"

"....."

"Go ahead, ask them. Ask for me. Where do they want to go? After being abandoned by the world once, only to be abandoned again, where must they go to finally find satisfaction? King of Death, I would be really grateful if you could ask them and let me know."

The mage seemed to be mocking someone,

Not just me, certainly.

"They have no memories. They're dead. They don't know why they're hurt, but the cause is gone, leaving only their pain to torment them. No, their torment is them. The only response you can get from them is the scream of 'it hurts.' That might not even be a response. You can't call the noise made by crumbling stones a response. I wonder. What can I-, what can I ask them?"

Crackle,

A faint image appeared in the ripples spread by the mage.

It was a moving picture.

"I can only watch."

Images played from all around.

A summary of the lives the wails had led before they were consumed by the dark whirlpool.

Their faces and laughter from when they were alive were reproduced in the images before being devoured.

"I have no choice but to carefully observe and then make a judgment. That's all. Everything. Yes. Watching alone isn't enough. There are times I don't know. But what more can I do? Apart from [watching], what more can I do here."

Indeed.

So that was it.

I slowly looked around.

-Uoooooooo.

-Ugh, uuuuh...!

The wails couldn't meet my gaze. They had no eyes. They could no longer see or reflect anything. Only deaths that could be observed from the outside or shattered. Countless deaths.

"....."

Death.

".....There is something."

More familiar to me than anything else.

"There is something more we can do here."

We can still do something more.

I turned my face to look at the Staff of Time Immemorial.

"What?"

"There is more we can do beyond just watching and observing their lives, mage. There is still something."

"What are you talking about?"

The mage looked confused.

But to me, everything was clear.

What I can do. What I want to do. If I were to become a Constellation, what Constellation I could be, it all suddenly became clear.

"People tend to do what they have always done."

With that clarity, I acted.

"Come."

Slowly walking forward, I stood in front of the deceased and spread my arms wide.

"Kill me."

Before the mage could understand my words.

The deceased tore at my throat.

[You have died.]

The Staff of Time Immemorial widened her eyes in horror. The instant stretched out like slow motion. Before the mage could fully comprehend the meaning of my actions, had one of the Pillars grasped my intent?

A voice resounded.

[The status of the majority vote is being announced.]

[King of Death: 1 vote, Abstentions: 1 vote, Staff of Time
Immemorial: 3 votes.]

And then.

[The level of penalty is High.]

[Human Realm.]

[Re-enacting the trauma of your killer.]

Let's do more than just watching.

Chapter 361: The Heaven that Gathers Wails (3)

---

Before the world was enveloped in darkness for the last time, the final sight that caught my eye was the Staff of Time Immemorial, standing aghast with her mouth agape.

Perhaps the mage screamed something.

"---, -----!?"

But I couldn't perceive the mage's outcry. My throat had been torn by the wails, and I hadn't even mobilized my aura to postpone my death. Death was swift. It was slow.

[Re-enacting the trauma of your killer.]

She was a fisherwoman born long ago. Thus, I was a fisherwoman born long ago. Within the tautology, she was me, and I was her.

Just as when I became Raviel. Just as when I became the Master.

Amidst the trauma of the human realm, she, no, I gazed at the wine-colored sea.

『The waves are weeping.』

The waves were rough. A harsh scent was in the air.

The fisherwoman knew that even water had a scent.

On calm sunny days, the water was clean. But when waves surged from afar, the water sweated. It was the smell of salt. When the smell of saliva lingered, whirlpools formed at the straits. It was the stench of decay.

And now, the waves were shedding tears.

『We must escape. The waves are weeping.』

She merely muttered out of instinct.

It was an era when humanity had not yet shed its bestial origins.

They said there was a towering golden temple in the vast desert to the south, where everyone was a shaman or magician, capable of trapping all human voices in bizarre drawings.

I knew that the golden temple resembled a 'pyramid' and that their sorcery was 'writing.' She did not know. In an age when only a minuscule fraction of humanity enjoyed the blessing of writing, a woman was sailing, fishing.

『We must hurry away...』

Kururururu-!

Turning the boat, the woman glanced back. A volcano was erupting in the distance. Hot lava gurgled at the mountaintop. Dark clouds. Lightning. Mud rain. The volcano bellowed as if proclaiming the end of the world.

『 ..... 』

Instinctively, the woman slowed her boat. She steered only where the tears of the waves were faintly detectable. It took more than half a day to return to her home, her village by the sea, which would have been quickly reachable under normal circumstances.

The village had vanished.

『 ..... 』

Only a few pieces of wood remained on the water's surface. With each slap of the waves against the cliffs, the wood trapped against the rocks gently swayed.

There were no survivors.

She looked up at the sky.

Clouds were rolling in. These were not clouds from the sky but clouds that had burped from the ground. The clouds rising from the earth were much denser and had a much stronger scent than those in the sky.

The entire sea was weeping in black.

『...We must escape.』

She steered the boat.

Not only had her homeland disappeared, the neighboring village had disappeared too. And the village neighboring that village. The neighbor of that neighboring village had disappeared too. Clinging to the coastline like clumps of barnacles, barely clinging to a sliver of life, all the villages were gone.

『Did anyone survive?』

Every vanished village left behind at least one survivor. Just like herself.

『I survived.』

『The waves are weeping. They continue to weep.』

The survivors were like me, able to smell the scent of the waves. I, she, nodded.

『I know. I too can feel the tears of the waves.』

『Many have perished. The gods are enraged. Must we also die?』

『We must escape. Quickly. Quickly, we must escape. Follow me.』

『Where to?』

『To the largest village.』

She steered the boat.

One became two. Two became three, four, five, sixteen. They were all survivors. The sixteen survivors represented the death of sixteen villages. Only those most acquainted with the waves from those villages could survive.

『Everyone is dead.』

There were no survivors in the largest village.

『Nothing. No one. Nothing at all.』

『.....』

She looked back.

Unbeknownst to her, the number of boatmen had swelled to thirty.

Crossing one village to the next, and to the next of the next, the survivors' languages changed from mine.

『Where are we going now?』

The first survivor I met sounded exactly like me. Everything was understandable.

『Are we ■ destined to die?』

From the sixth village onward, the sounds began to diverge. Not everything was understandable. Still, there was no problem in mixing sounds and sounds.

『■ It is a divine punishment■. The wrath of ■ gods.』

Passing the twelfth village, the sounds began to howl bizarrely. My ears buzzed. It was difficult, but if I narrowed my eyebrows and listened carefully, I could understand.

『■■ is weeping ■ inside ■■.』

After the twenty-fourth village, she couldn't understand the sounds. Nothing was understandable.

Only the ability to feel the tears of the waves.

That was the only commonality.

『.....』

She looked up at the sky.

For many days, the world had been dark.

It was cold. The fisherfolk huddled. They covered their flesh with whatever straw they could gather, but their teeth chattered. Click, even now, someone's teeth clacked. Click. Click. She, I, quietly listened to the sound of the teeth.

『We must escape.』

『To ■where?』

『Somewhere.』

It was the Little Ice Age.

An era that had provided humanity with comfortable rain and waves for thousands of years was now coming to an end. The volcano had merely hastened the end. I knew this as knowledge, and she knew it as instinct.

To the south. Along the coast to the south. Following the washed-away villages and abandoned ruins, to the south, to the south.

『■■■■!』

How many villages had we passed?

『■■■■ ■■■■! ■■■!』

Before long, the number of boatmen following her had exceeded sixty. They finally succeeded in reaching a 'surviving village,' but she couldn't understand a word the 'villagers' shouted. Not in the slightest.

The villagers were holding spears for some reason. They threw stones. A spear thrown by them pierced a 'survivor's' chest, and a rock shattered someone's head. Splash. Splash. The boats capsized, and bodies fell.

The man from the first village looked this way.

『Are we to die?』

A question always asked.

And for the first time, she opened her lips to answer.

『No.』

A massacre ensued.

The boatmen drew stone knives and killed the 'villagers.' Including her, all the survivors were the most skilled helmsmen. Killing people was always easier than steering boats.

『What are these people saying?』

After the battle, she called the survivor from the forty-eighth village and asked. He was a fisherman who had lived relatively close to here. He should still be able to hear the sounds of this place.

『■■.....■■■■■■■■■■.....!』

『 It seems they're saying we'll receive divine punishment. 』

The forty-eighth survivor interpreted. He said he wasn't entirely sure.

『 And they called us pirates. 』

『 Pirates? What does that mean? 』

『 It seems to refer to seafolk. 』

From that village onward, the survivors were no longer called 'fishermen' but 'pirates.'

The sixty pirates grew to ninety. More. More. More. More. Like the remnants of shipwrecks gathering and surging like waves, like young animals rubbing their skins together on a cold day, all the survivors of the destroyed seaside villages came to her.

『 ■■■is ■■■. 』

『The world has ended.』

One boatman filtered the words of another boatman.

『■■■ ■■ing.』

『Everyone is dead.』

『■■do ■■■ ■■■?』

『Must we also die?』

A hundred fishermen looked at her.

And she now knew what she had to say, what she could say, and what she wanted to say. It was as clear as the scent of the waves.

『No.』

Even in front of two hundred.

『No.』

Even in front of three hundred.

『No.』

She answered the same.

『We must escape. Follow me.』

Five hundred boats followed her.

『■■■■!』

Fights broke out wherever they went. They didn't know why they had to fight. But what they could gain from fighting was clear. 'Unruined villages' hid grains. There were clothes. There were sharp stone knives.

There was no reason to refuse a fight.

『■■■■! ■■. ■■■■ ■■■■■.....!』

To the south. Along the coast to the south. Sweeping through villages and discarding ruins, to the south. To the south.

『■■■■■■■■!』

The world was cold.

The world was dark.

Just like the white seashells clinging to the sea cliffs, merely clinging on with their fingernails, holding onto life, the world wouldn't end as long as they clung here.

『■■■.....』

Splash.

Beneath the burning 'large village,' she swung her sword.

『■■■■.....』

『■■, ■■■ ■■■■■.....!』

『■■ ■■■■■.....』

The 'large villagers' shed tears.

Looking at the bodies, and at the 'large villagers' who weren't bodies yet but would soon be, she suddenly said.

『What are these people saying?』

『.....』

She called the survivor from the twelfth village. The twelfth survivor called the thirty-second. The thirty-second called the fifty-first, the fifty-first called the hundredth, the hundredth called the hundred and seventieth, and the hundred and seventieth called the two hundred and fifty-second.

『Why are you trying to listen to what these people are saying?』

Eventually, the five hundred and eighty-first asked. To exchange a question and an answer with the five hundred and eighty-first, dozens of interpreters were needed. Dozens of people chattered away.

Like waves.

Like waves, like waves, like waves. Overlapping dozens of times, the fishermen whispered to each other.

『These 'large villagers' are shamans.』

She too whispered.

『They know a magic that traps sounds.』

She picked up a clay tablet and showed it to the fishermen. There were pictures on it. She didn't know how to read or write it.

But magic is always like that.

『With their magic, we can also leave behind our sounds.』

『Why do we want to leave our sounds behind? The wave is a wave only when it crashes. Sounds disappear. That is the way of the wave, and we follow the way of the wave.』

『This is the 'somewhere' we can escape to.』

She pointed to the clay tablet. One by one, she spoke while making eye contact with each fisherman. She wanted them to look here, at this place.

『We must escape. Here. The place I told you to follow me to is here. We've arrived. We're here. Tell me.』

『.....』

『What are these people saying?』

The waves stopped.

『I don't know.』

The five hundred and eighty-first wave said.

『I don't know.』

『.....』

『I don't know what they're saying.』

Then the two hundred and fifty-second wave said they didn't know. The hundred and seventieth wave, the hundredth wave, the fifty-first wave, the thirty-second wave, and the twelfth wave, softly, said they didn't know. As the waves receded, making sounds,

『No one knows.』

The wave lapped at her feet for the last time and gently rippled.

『.....』

And the sound of the wave disappeared.

『.....』

Only the waves were shedding tears.

『.....』

The scent of tears was perceptible. Very close by. And she knew why the scent never ceased. Maybe she knew it would come to this.

Towards the burning flames, she threw the clay tablet.

『Where should we go now?』

『I'm sorry.』

Thud.

『Whe■. Where should we ■o?』

『I'm sorry.』

The flames blazed.

『■■ where should ■■ go■■?』

『I'm sorry.』

Thud, the fire blazed. Thud. Thud.

『■■ ■■■ ■■■■■■■■■?』

『I'm sorry.』

Quietly.

[Trauma re-enactment complete.]

[The target's ego has remained intact.]

[Penalty Finalized.]

Somewhere, I think I heard the sound of waves.

"What the hell are you thinking!?"

I staggered to my feet.

The procedure to regress 24 hours had not been activated.

This was the first basement floor. Was it said that the flow of time here differs from other floors? Or did the Pillars, the administrators, arbitrarily apply a brake on the skill? Now that the fox isn't by my side, does my timeline no longer hold absolute priority?

Either way, it doesn't matter.

-Grrrr...

Before me stood the wails.

Life that had become wails.

Something that could no longer make any sound, merely growling, whatever it had been. Clank! It thrashed as if it was about to pounce on me, chained.

"So, by using trauma, you can live the life of the dead? And so, you can make a more accurate judgment than me, who can only watch? Is that your answer? Ha."

I drew my sword.

"Yeah. Maybe. But didn't you insist that you have to ask the soul directly? Even if you witness the trauma, no matter how close you get, it's not the soul speaking direct--"

And I cut through the wails.

"-----What?"

The mage had no chance to stop me with words. My blade sliced through the wails. The wails didn't scream, perhaps already screaming in its state, and were lightly severed.

The wails dissipated like ash.

"Y-You. What have you done....."

Skill card open.

[Activating the skill.]

That was the gold card I had earned long ago.

+

[Ghoul Reincarnation]

Rank: SSS

Effect: You summon those you've personally killed. The deceased do not inherit their abilities from life. However, if you wish, they can inherit their memories and appearances from when they were alive. If you do not wish it, they will only be summoned as monsters.

+

I lived the life of the wails.

Thus, I identified the [coordinates] of the wails.

I became the wails, and I cut through the crying wails.

Thus, I could [summon] the wails.

Therefore.

[Ghoul Reincarnation has been activated.]

All conditions were met.

The ash that vanished into the air turned into black liquid ash from below and rose. The black water gradually took shape.

Eyes I recognized, a face I knew.

With the movements that were once mine.

"....."

The one with eyes as blue as the sea blinked, looking at me.

Silence surrounded us.

The Staff of Time Immemorial was silently watching us. The other Pillars remained silent too.

At this moment, only she and I were permitted to speak.

"....."

She opened her mouth.

"Who are you?"

Somewhere.

I think I heard the sound of waves.

"Hello."

I said.

Not in the first language I learned, not in the language automatically translated by the tower, but in the language I learned through living her life, through her ears and mouth. Rough and rugged. Carrying the scent of the sea. Just as it had briefly rushed from the distant sea, crashed against the cliffs, and vanished, white and white. In the sound of the waves.

I could say her name.

"The First Wave."

And what I would become for her.

"I am your Last Wave."

I will become somewhere for you all.

Chapter 362: The Heaven that Gathers Wails (4)

---

"The last wave?"

"Yes."

"What does the last wave mean?"

She looked at me. Her eyes were bright blue, more akin to those of a beast than a human. They did not distinguish much between humans and animals, and they made no distinction between humans and the sea.

I said,

"I can understand all your sounds."

"....."

"From the second wave to the five hundred and eighty-first wave, all of them. The sounds you make, I can hear them."

It meant 'I can interpret all the languages of the warriors you command.' Yes, I could have said that. But I spoke in her words. I wanted to speak that way.

With pronunciations and words that left no trace, like a village that had been obliterated by a tsunami long ago, leaving not even ruins behind. I spoke in sounds that only two people in the world could exchange now, reminiscing about destruction.

"You don't need to wander from village to village. You don't have to go to a large village. I am your last wave, and this is the last village in the world."

"....."

She looked at me. Her bright blue eyes were rippleless. Suspicion, doubt, consternation and confusion filled them. Usually, anyone's emotions would imprint on their eyes like fingerprints. Her eyes bore no such marks.

"Are you a god?"

"I wish to be your god."

From a distance, the Staff of Time Immemorial could be heard taking a breath. However, she did not turn her gaze. Nor did I avert my eyes from hers.

"Tell me your wish."

"Wish?"

"Yes. You can go anywhere. Which village would you like to visit? This is a very large village. Every village is here. I will take you to wherever you wish to go."

"....."

She blinked. Once. Twice. Thrice. Like waves that rush to the gentle shore only to recede again, her eyelids fluttered.

"Teach me the spell to trap sounds."

"Okay."

I turned my head.

"Could you bring me some ink?"

"....."

The Staff of Time Immemorial bit her lip. The greatest mage in the tower, versed in all spells; her eyebrows were trembling. Instead of her, the Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages brought the ink bottle.

"Here."

"Thank you."

"But why ink, King of Death?"

The princess looked up at my face attentively.

"Wouldn't it be easier with paper and a pen?"

"Pens would be unfamiliar to her. Someone who has never held a pencil before would find it hard to write. However, if you write with your hands, you'll get used to it quickly. So it's easier to just dip your fingertips in ink and write on the ground."

The princess listened to all I said. Slowly, after listening, she nodded once.

"That makes sense."

Once more.

"It does."

Her voice echoed softly.

[The current status of the majority vote is being announced.]

[King of Death: 2 votes, Abstentions: 0 votes, Staff of Time

Immemorial: 3 votes.]

I think I heard the sound of waves from somewhere.

"What's this?"

"Ink. It's black water."

"Does it hurt?"

"It doesn't hurt. I'll teach you the spell with this."

I crouched down on the floor. She hunched her body too. The pillars surrounded us silently, watching. We ignored them, turning the white stone floor into our canvas.

A, E, I, O, U.

"This way, you can trap sounds."

I wrote on the floor. My fingertips turned black. Black strokes were drawn on the floor. She watched clearly as black waves were drawn across the white sea.

"Try it too."

"Okay."

Her fingertips turned black.

Half a day passed.

A whole day passed.

A day went by.

Her fingernails turned black, her fingers turned black, her palms turned black. Strokes were drawn and redrawn on the floor, endlessly bringing black waves to the white sea. The pillars watched us without moving.

The conference hall was vast. The canvas was almost infinite. In a crouched position, we slowly shifted spots, spreading the black waves inch by inch.

Every wave she drew was distinctly marked with fingerprints.

Three days passed, or maybe four. In the timeless depths of the underground, only the expanding sea marks around us testified to time.

Upon closer inspection, the words were all pieces of wood. Shipwreck debris fluttered here and there on the sea. She was writing letters. Splash. Being a ferryman who knew the black sea's waterways, she rowed with her fingers, splash, splash.

"Do you understand now?"

"Yes."

So, I am listening to the sound of waves.

"I understand."

I asked the princess for clay tablets. They were still soft, their surface squishy.

"....."

Looking at the clay tablet before her, she blinked. It was her tension. This was her 'somewhere.' After her hometown was submerged and many villages drowned, this was the island she had searched for.

Facing the small island.

She rowed.

『I love the sea.』

The waves crashed.

『We love the sea.』

The ripples surged.

『The waves shed tears.』

Fingerprints.

『We also shed tears.』

Gradually.

『Still, I love the sea.』

Blue eyes looked up at me.

"Did I die?"

I nodded, letting her know she had reached the island village.

"Yes. Do you want to live?"

"People."

She said,

"I killed many people."

"I can't live anymore. Too many people have died. I'm sorry. I can't live anymore."

She looked at me.

Waves surged in her sea-like eyes.

"Thank you."

I think I heard the sound of waves from somewhere.

"Thank you."

[You have acquired a follower.]

[The first wave has become your follower.]

And then...

The wave subsided.

"....."

Only black writing remained on the floor. Just like her hometown that sank into the sea, the drowned people submerged and were unseen. For the first time, she could stop breathing in the sea she loved.

"....."

The pillars remained silent.

".....Why."

Only after a while, or perhaps just for a moment, the Staff of Time Immemorial opened her lips, her voice squeezed through clenched teeth.

"Why didn't you assign her to a heaven?"

"I don't assign heavens. I only listen to where they want to go. Heaven is a place people want to go. The wave went to the island it wished for."

I lifted the clay tablet with both hands.

Holding the place that had become someone's small island tightly to my chest.

And I wrapped it in aura, before my water could overflow and wet the fine beaches of the island village.

Hoping that people would not burn people.

If I were to be a flame, let it be one that only burns the voices of people.

"So, it's done."

"....."

The Staff of Time Immemorial bit her lip.

[The current status of the majority vote is being announced.]

[King of Death: 2 votes, Abstentions: 1 vote, Staff of Time
Immemorial: 2 votes.]

There was still much noise.

Hundreds.

The wails summoned by the mage filled the vast conference hall.

I stayed amidst the wails, giving my body to each of them.

The wails tore at my life.

[The current status of the majority vote is announced.]

[King of Death: 2 votes, Abstentions: 2 votes, Staff of Time
Immemorial: 1 vote.]

They gnawed at my life, and I cut theirs, calling their lives here just as I did for the first wave.

And I said,

"Where, where is this? Where am I?"

Someone was confused.

A merchant who had lived selling furs all his life.

He was attacked by a nomadic tribe on his trade route and killed. The merchant felt it was unfair. He was willing to pay the price for his life. Taking his life would not have helped the nomadic tribe much. But the foolish people did not understand even this simple principle.

Why a blade instead of money? Why not trade with him?

Why is the world so cruel?

".....Who are you?"

Someone was wary.

A paladin who had been on battlefields all his life.

He died hoping for the appearance of a god until the very end. The knight screamed. If there was a god in this world, it would descend in the most horrific and miserable places. The knight had only traversed the most horrific and miserable battlefields. If the god did not appear, he moved to a more horrific place, and if still not, to an even more horrific place, believing that one day it would appear, into the hell of hells.

Is it still not enough? Is it still not miserable enough for a god to extend a hand?

Why can't the world be saved?

"I don't want to die! Please..... Save me. I can't die yet!"

Someone pleaded.

Many did.

The one who starved to death in a drought, the one who suffocated in a fire, the one who set the village on fire after eating human flesh due to famine following a bad year, and the one who suddenly felt a noose around their neck when their sight was obscured and they saw the adult from the next house looking down at them.

Why,

And people silenced their voices.

Why is the world so.

"It's okay."

I said that to those who had an island they wanted to go to.

"You can abandon the world if you want. It's okay."

It really was okay.

"You can go to another world that you can't abandon."

I asked them directly.

"Where do you want to go?"

The merchant wanted to go to the Heaven of Gold. He wished to breathe in a world known for its golden radiance. The merchant did not want a life where rationality was stifled under foolish blades.

The knight wanted to go to the Heaven of Music. He thought that if everything from a handful of wheat to a single leaf sang, everything would have a god. He cried while saying he wanted to laugh in a world where he didn't have to search for a god.

[The current status of the majority vote is being announced.]

[King of Death: 3 votes, Abstentions: 1 vote, Staff of Time Immemorial: 1 vote.]

As the final procedure.

[Activating Skill.]

I shared my gold with them.

+

[Earth Bone Dragon's Skull]

Rank: SSS+

Effect: Stores the memories of the living. Stored memories are kept in a 'box.' This box can only be destroyed by the owner of this skill.

As long as the box remains intact, you can repeatedly produce bodies of individuals inheriting the same memories. The bodies can roam the world, accumulating new experiences, which can then be 'updated' into the box. Of course, only if you permit it!

Even if the body of the individual is destroyed, the box remains unharmed. Bestow the privilege of immortality on those around you.

+

That was how I resurrected ghouls.

Like when I breathed life into Silvia Evanair and Ester, the Four Demon Lords, the children of Demonic Heaven, and Yoo Soo-Ha.

[The box of the Earth Bone Dragon has been activated.]

[The box of the Earth Bone Dragon has been completed.]

I provided bodies for the noises that had become my ghouls.

"You have now chosen the world you will live in."

Returner's Winding Clock.

I lived through their traumas and gathered their memories.

Ghoul Reincarnation.

I gathered their memories and called them forth.

Earth Bone Dragon's Skull.

If they wished, I gave them memories and bodies.

"You were allowed to live in the world because you wanted to live."

The conference hall was silent.

There were no more rumbling noise.

Hundreds of gazes, hundreds of breaths watched me.

Looking around at the people watching me, and watching them in return, I said,

"Please live in a world you can love."

"....."

"If you want to abandon it, tell me. I will listen. If you want to go somewhere, tell me. I will listen. But now, all your choices, all your words, all your contempt, and all your love are yours. Take life and be responsible for what you loved. Then, I will take responsibility for the inevitable deaths."

I said,

"May fortune be with you all."

White light enveloped them.

Everyone left for the island they wished to go to.

[The current status of the majority vote is being announced.]

[King of Death: 4 votes, Abstentions: 1 vote, Staff of Time Immemorial: 0 votes.]

The conference hall fell silent.

"....."

The Staff of Time Immemorial hung her head. She did not lift her bowed head. The pillars simply turned their gaze quietly, without a word, to their master.

Thud.

The Tower Master stood up and walked towards me.

"Kim Gong-Ja."

The tower master took my left hand and caressed the back of it.

"King of Death."

"Yes."

"You will gain authority. You will be able to bestow blessings. Irrefutably, you will become a complete Constellation."

Her amethyst eyes looked up at me.

"From this moment on, you will be known only as 'The Heaven that Gathers Wails.'"

A voice was heard.

[The current status of the majority vote is being announced.]

[King of Death: 5 votes, Abstentions: 0 votes, Staff of Time Immemorial: 0 votes.]

[The Master of All Lives wishes blessings upon The Heaven that Gathers Wails.]

From now on, that was my name.

---

Chapter 363: The Heaven that Gathers Wails (5)

---

The duel had been concluded. The Staff of Time Immemorial was defeated, and I emerged victorious.

It was a unanimous decision, so all that remained was the aftermath.

"King of Death... No. Are you planning to establish [The Heaven that Gathers Wails] as a new Pillar, Duke?"

Baron Gu Won-Ha inquired. However, the Tower Master lightly shook her head.

"No. Wailing Heaven currently does not wish to become a Pillar."

"Wailing Heaven?"

I tilted my head in confusion.

"Are you referring to me?"

"Yes. [The Heaven that Gathers Wails] is a bit lengthy, isn't it? Since it involves wails, hence Wailing Heaven. Gathering people's memories equates to collecting their names, leading to a Wailing Heaven (名天). Giving back a lifetime to those souls leads to a Wailing Heaven (命天). Lastly, as the heaven that rules over the netherworld, the dark realm of the dead, that's the Wailing Heaven (莫天)."

"You have a knack for naming."

"I have many children, you see. It was a necessary skill."

For some reason, there was a moment when not the Tower Master but the princess boasted proudly.

"So, do you wish to become a Pillar right now, Wailing Heaven?"

I looked around.

"Becoming a Pillar now would mean..."

"Your ascension would end here."

The Tower Master continued.

"A Constellation controls a single floor, but a Pillar manages the entire tower. Just as a Constellation cannot achieve feats by merely frolicking within its own governed floor, it's incongruent for a Pillar to climb the tower."

I pondered deeply.

And then, I responded.

"I wish to reach the 100th floor first."

This statement seemed to have surprised the Pillars.

But the Tower Master nodded, as if she had anticipated this response.

"Okay. In that case, let's conclude by making you a perfect Constellation for now, Kim Wailing Heaven[\[a\]](#)."

"I'd rather not be renamed like that..."

"Kim Weirdiot[\[b\]](#)."

"That's going too far!? Did you just come up with a plausible set of reasons just so you could name me that?!"

"To be reborn as a true Constellation, there's a condition."

A condition.

"You might call it a procedure. Once you complete this procedure, you will be able to bestow blessings upon your followers."

"What is it?"

"Once you become a complete Constellation, you can never erase a skill again."

"....."

"Let's see."

The Tower Master snapped her fingers.

Immediately, rectangular shapes materialized and floated leisurely in the air.

Adorned in gold, silver, and bronze, they were none other than my skill cards.

"[I Want to Become Just Like You (S+)], [Returner's Winding Clock (EX)], [Sword Constellation (A+)], [Ghoul Reincarnation (SSS)], [Goblin High Society (F)], [Demonic Heavenly God Art (A+)], [The Torn Goddess's Salvation (A+)], [Demonic Formations Art (S)], [Earth Bone Dragon's Skull (SSS+)]..."

The Tower Master looked at me with an incredulous expression.

"Really. You have the cream of the crop. Don't you feel a bit guilty?"

"To say I only have top-tier skills, there's [Goblin High Society (F)], you know?"

"What are you talking about? That's precisely your identity. Even if you give up all other cards, you must protect the Goblin High at all costs."

"Your eye for quality is indeed high."

As expected, the Tower Master understood me.

"So, what opportunity will you give me, the Wailing Heaven?"

"An opportunity, you say..."

"It's simple. Previously, Wailing Heaven upgraded [Ghoul Summoning (SS)] to [Ghoul Reincarnation (SSS)] as a reward for clearing floors 11 to 19, right? The same reward. In other words, an opportunity to consolidate your skills."

A comprehensive consolidation of skills.

"When a baron ascends to a duke, it's like reorganizing one's titles and fiefs at once. Gathering scattered lands to form a [Dukedom], trimming and weeding out as necessary."

The Tower Master, being a noble of some kingdom, naturally used a noble analogy.

".....Can I manipulate the skills as I wish?"

"That is correct. Though you'll need to convince me."

The Tower Master chuckled behind her hand. Flap. Her long sleeves, unlike any Earthly fashion, fluttered, revealing her amethyst eyes.

"But this isn't just a reward, Wailing Heaven. As you know, this solidifies what kind of Constellation you will become."

"....."

"A god must be clear. Intuitive. Because a god is a helper, and only when it's clear who can be helped, can the followers seek assistance. Look at Mutia. 'I can regress your life.' How clear is that? On the other hand..."

"Taotie wasn't clear about what kind of Constellation it was. Indeed. The power of a Constellation lies in the intuitiveness of its abilities."

"Yes, yes. Exactly. In short, 'Get your skill set right.' Simple, right?"

I rested my chin on my hand and gazed downward, lost in thought.

'What can I do for people?'

In other words, what is my power?

'For whom can I provide?'

In other words, what is my domain?

'.....What do I need to remain myself?'

In other words, what is my pillar?

The deliberation was lengthy. I came up with some answers on my own. Then, I realized the Tower Master was quietly watching and waiting for me.

'Baron Gu Won-Ha could have taken care of things and left. The duel is over, and this is just the aftermath. Why stay?'

Sure, the Tower Master was showing me favor. She might prefer to reward me personally rather than delegating it to a subordinate.

But I reached a different conclusion.

".....I can ask you. I can seek your advice on what would be best for me."

The Tower Master smiled broadly.

"Correct."

Indeed.

I felt a weight lifting from my heart. The Tower Master is the god of this tower. The central Pillar, the star pinned to the highest night sky.

If I wished to grow stronger as a Constellation, where else would I find a better advisor?

'Nowhere. Absolutely nowhere. This is an incredible opportunity.'

The Tower Master's words were infallible. She was offering me an [opportunity]. Not just to consolidate skills, but to utilize the Tower Master. To not use such a chance would indeed make me Kim Weiridiot.

"Thank you."

"No need for thanks. Rewarding effort is the most basic virtue a noble should have."

"Then, I'll ask straight away. How do you never tire?"

I could feel the remaining Pillars in the assembly hall staring at me. Their gazes were charged with emotion, not bothering to hide it, allowing me to immediately grasp the nature of their feelings.

Jealousy. Envy.

The Tower Master was their master. Given her life and temperament, she was likely the sole recipient of their affection. And naturally, those monopolized desire to monopolize in return.

'I'm truly competing with the Pillars now.'

Knowing I was utterly devoted to Raviel, they still felt this way?

'Probably.'

Just the fact that I occupied the Tower Master's time at this moment was enough to make them envious.

Not because I was receiving the Tower Master's favor.

But because the Tower Master was bestowing her favor upon me, they were envious.

From now on, they would likely try to hinder my ascent to the 100th floor. They wouldn't cheat; that would risk losing the Tower Master's favor. They would compete with me fairly, adhering strictly to the game's rules.

The Staff of Time Immemorial had already been defeated. They would never underestimate me.

It was going to be a tough battle, which is why the Tower Master granted me such an [opportunity] now.

Fight well. Stay strong.

Therefore, I must make the most of this opportunity.

"Hmm. How do I not tire, you ask?"

"Yes. I'm not tired yet, but things might change once I become a Constellation."

I thought of many people.

"The fox was tired. The first time I met Ester, she was tired because of me, but even before that, she was already festering inside."

How could it be just them?

Most of the Constellations I met, including Hamusutra, were tired of themselves, not anyone else.

Living a long life is like that.

"So, I'd like to hear about the Tower Master's case."

"Love."

The Tower Master answered simply, like a priest revealing the truth.

"I surround myself with loved ones. No, I make those around me love me. If I'm troubled, my lovers are even more troubled."

If I'm happy, my lovers are happier. That makes life enjoyable."

".....Wouldn't it be torturous for the lovers?"

"Indeed."

The Tower Master affirmed just as simply.

"But I can make my lovers the happiest."

"....."

"Only I can gift the utmost happiness to my lovers. If they're in pain, I understand why better than they do. I feel more pain. I'm happier. Therefore, even if my lovers suffer because of me, it doesn't matter. After all, there's no one who can make them happier than me."

With a madness that could be deemed conviction, the Tower Master spoke.

"When I can feel my lovers' pain and happiness, I truly feel alive. Vividly. Tangibly. How do I not tire? It's simple. As long as life feels real, I don't tire."

Indeed.

It wasn't a life I'd cling to even in death, but it was a tactic worth considering.

I made up my mind.

"Grant me a skill."

"Hmm? If it's a minor adjustment, maybe, but giving you a completely new one is a bit..."

"It's fine. It's not entirely new. In fact, it's almost like I already have it."

"If that's the case, I see no reason not to. What is it?"

"[A Certain Returner's Love]."

The Tower Master's eyes widened.

"Oh?"

"As you know, it's a skill Raviel possesses. A skill that connects Raviel's time and mine. I want the same skill as Raviel."

"Technically, having it on one side is enough for the effect. I could grant it, but don't you think it's a waste? You're running out of skill slots."

"Our Tower Master lacks sense."

I smiled.

"Aren't wedding rings supposed to be held by both parties? Please, give it to me."

Hearing my words, the Tower Master burst into laughter. It seemed the analogy of a wedding ring amused her greatly. Embroidering the air with laughter that sounded like tearing silk, she tapped the void.

[Supreme Love and Pure Longing.]

[The Master of All Lives acknowledges your love and gifts you a skill.]

A golden card materialized before my eyes.

+

[A Certain Returner's Love]

Rank: EX

Effect: For a returner, love is like poison. No matter how much they struggle, they can't share time with the one they love. Thus, a certain returner had a burning desire, 'Let my beloved keep her memories.' This desire reached the tower and was granted.

You share a timeline with your beloved. If your lover goes back a day, you go back a day. If you go back a day, so does your lover. This is the vow of a ring. This is a marriage of time.

May fortune be with both of you.

*However, it only activates when you and your lover mutually love each other.

+

The same as what Raviel had.

If I were a constellation, I would be the brightest star at the forefront.

"Alright. Shall I be generous? I'll throw in a service, Wailing Heaven."

Sararak—

The golden card descended onto the back of my hand, melting away.

Literally melting and disappearing.

As the card vanished, it infused my left ring finger with golden light. Naturally, the wedding ring I had matched with Raviel was on my finger.

"I linked [A Certain Returner's Love] with the wedding ring. Unless the skill card is torn, the wedding ring won't be destroyed either. Oh, but now that Wailing Heaven is a complete Constellation, you can't get rid of skill cards, right?"

"It's practically an indestructible equipment item now."

"That's right. Now it's truly a wedding ring. Congratulations."

The Tower Master beamed with a smile.

The Pillars around us intensified their stares, but neither of us cared. Of course, there was a difference. I thought I had to bear it anyway, while the Tower Master was deliberately ignoring it.

"What other skill would you like to revise?"

"Remove the penalty from [Ghoul Reincarnation]."

I immediately requested.

"Being able to use the skill only once a week is too harsh. Sure, if I used it to summon ghouls for a mob attack, it would be an overpowered skill, but I don't do that. I just want to return memories to the souls I've collected. Please remove the penalty."

"Well. You have a point."

"And there are three, four, five points."

"Five?"

"Quack quack."

After the most absurd exchange, the Tower Master acquiesced to my request.

[Skill Revision.]

[The penalty on Ghoul Reincarnation has been removed.]

[Ghoul Reincarnation (SSS) transforms into Ghoul Reincarnation (SSS+)!]

"Again? Consider this your last chance. Don't come to me with regrets later. Speak up now while you have the chance."

"Revise [The Torn Goddess's Salvation] for me. She's not a torn goddess anymore, right? She's the [Goddess of Protection]. It's only right that I'm granted full access to Hwiya's power."

"That makes sense."

"Five?"

"I have no idea what you're saying... Mr. Kim Gong-Ja, do you like such jokes...? I'm starting to feel embarrassed being here....."

"Damn it!"

[Skill Revision.]

[The Torn Goddess's Salvation has been consolidated.]

[The Torn Goddess's Salvation (A+) transforms into Protection of the Goddess (S)!]

"As for [Goblin High Society]..."

"No. I won't change it. Go back."

[Skill Non-Revision.]

[Goblin High Society has been preserved.]

[It's absurd to even think about erasing it!]

"The fox has sworn to be with me for eternity. If I'm tied to the same timeline as Raviel, the fox is the sentinel ensuring that timeline remains unbroken. I wish her presence to be acknowledged."

"As you say, so it shall be."

[Eternal Alliance of Time.]

[The Master of All Lives acknowledges your skill.]

[You obtain A Music Box Just for You (EX).]

"What about Hisimet Cretsu and Mutia, Wailing Heaven?"

"They were merely under my command for a while, not eternal allies I will be with. They wouldn't want that anyway."

"You're right and wise. Those subjugated by force, not heart, will rebel when weakened or faced with a stronger force."

"Yes. So, while I might borrow their powers occasionally, they are not my powers. However, please consolidate [Demonic Heavenly God Art] and [Demonic Formations Art]."

I spoke emphatically.

"They're both skills that paint the heavens of Demonic Heaven."

"That too is a reasonable request."

The Tower Master nodded.

"Let's name it Demonic Heaven."

[Skill Revision.]

[Demonic Heavenly God Art (A+) and Demonic Formations Art (S) have been consolidated.]

[The skills merge into Demonic Heaven (SSS)!]

And so.

My skill set was complete.

+

Name: Kim Gong-Ja

Rank: S-Class

Skills (10/10)

1. A Certain Returner's Love (EX)
2. Returner's Winding Clock (EX)
3. I Want to Become Just Like You (S+)
4. Ghoul Reincarnation (SSS+)
5. Earth Bone Dragon's Skull (SSS+)
6. Sword Constellation (A+)
7. Protection of the Goddess (S)
8. A Music Box Just for You (EX)

9. Goblin High Society (F)

10. Demonic Heaven (SSS)

+

Skill 1, [A Certain Returner's Love], is the foundation that allows me to be myself. It's the wick that keeps the candle burning.

Skills 2 to 5, from [Returner's Winding Clock] to [Earth Bone Dragon's Skull], are my powers. They allow me to see others' traumas, summon them as ghouls, and give them physical forms.

Skills 6 to 8, from [Sword Constellation] to [A Music Box Just for You], represent my allies. More than just being together, our souls are intertwined.

Skill 9, [Goblin High Society], is... well, Goblin High Society. Does it need an explanation?

Skill 10, [Demonic Heaven], is my force. My sword. My source. It's the hilt I grip to not be devoured by this world, and the blade I wield to cut through this world.

"Mr. Kim Gong-Ja."

After all the work was done.

The Tower Master looked up at me quietly.

"Just nod, and the process to become a complete Constellation will be finished."

"Alright."

"From now on, you can't erase a skill."

"Okay."

"From now on, you can't die."

"....."

"Until now, you could always tear up [Returner's Winding Clock] if you wished. You could return to a life that ends with death. But once you nod, you can never go back to how things were before."

That's what it means to not be able to tear up a skill.

"Even in death, you'll just go back a day. Even if you wanted to return to childhood through death, skills only work within [the world inside the tower]. You can't return to the past before you set foot in the tower, to the outside world."

Once more, the Tower Master asked.

"Do you truly accept eternity?"

"Yeah."

Despite knowing the weight of the word, I nodded.

I had walked this far just to bear that weight.

"I will remain the heaven that gathers the screams of people forever."

"....."

And the Tower Master, having walked all this way just to deliver these words to someone, spoke.

"May fortune be with you."

Tick-tock.

The halted time began to flow again.

[You have cleared the 76th floor stage.]

[You have cleared the 77th floor stage.]

[You have cleared the 78th floor stage.]

[You have cleared the 79th floor stage.]

With the defeat of the Staff of Time Immemorial, the stages she managed were all instantly cleared.

What happened to Yoo Soo-Ha, who had been the judge?

Perhaps, I would know soon enough.

Light seeped from beneath my feet, obscuring my vision.

[You have leveled up.]

[Your skill slots have expanded.]

And then.

[You are now an SSS-Class Hunter.]

[You are 'The Heaven that Gathers Wails.']

Paaat!

As I was declared an SSS-Class Hunter, I was enveloped in white light.

---

[a] Kim Myeong-Cheon

[b] Kim Mung-Chong

Chapter 364: The 1st Floor (1)

---

There's a story to tell later.

"I don't recognize this ceiling..."

After being engulfed in white light, the first words I muttered were probably among the top 100 most clichéd quotes used in novels throughout human history. However, it was a lie. The scenery that came into my view wasn't unfamiliar at all; in fact, it was quite the opposite.

-Oh? ...Oh? Why am I suddenly here?

This is Café Planetarium.

Once the lobby of the Great Library, it had now been transformed into a café stage.

Under the lofty ceiling of the library, the Guardian Spirit floated leisurely.

-Ah, it seems you, Zombie, were summoned to a meeting or something again? I couldn't attend because I don't have the authority, right?

'Yeah, that would be correc.....'

I was about to finish my sentence when a mischievous thought struck me. If there was anyone you shouldn't play pranks on, it was the Guardian Spirit. He ranked last on that list. I acted immediately.

[The Heaven that Gathers Wails agrees with the Sword Emperor's statement.]

I merely thought it, yet strangely enough, a message flowed through. It wasn't the first time, but it was certainly the first time Guardian Spirit received a message from me.

---Huh.

The Guardian Spirit forgot what he was about to say and stared at me intently. The emotions in his gaze were diverse but starkly evident. Satisfaction and a hint of regret.

-Well, yes. It's about time you became a complete Constellation. You little rascal. Not even 100 years old and already parading around as a Constellation, you've grown a lot.

'Hey, if you add up all the time spent in traumas, it would easily exceed 100 years, don't you think?'

I shrugged nonchalantly.

'Anyway, it's just as you thought. I returned from the meeting of the Pillars. I won. And as a reward, I got the chance to revise my skills once.'

-What? Skill revision? We didn't have such a thing in my time!

'Well, you've never defeated a Pillar, nor do you remember them, right...?'

-Damn it! This is discrimination against hunters! Why is it only Kim Zombie who gets all the favoritism? Hey! Pillars or Tower Masters or whatever you bastards are! If you had shown me even 1/100th of the kindness you show to Kim Zombie, would I be here munching on ghost rice cakes?!

Guardian Spirit yelled at the top of its lungs, truly believing its voice could reach the tower. I chuckled softly.

As this scene unfolded, a man approached us.

"Hey, slacker."

Thump.

A man dressed in a part-time uniform. Despite being on duty, he was nonchalantly chewing gum, and his gaze was so frivolous one might wonder if it belonged to a human. His mere presence seemed to lower the average moral standard of humanity by 1%. Who else could it be?

It was Yoo Soo-Ha.

"What? You're the one roaming around."

"Weren't you busy climbing the tower? Why are you suddenly here? Just a moment ago, this spot was empty, and now you're sitting here."

We were in a rather secluded part of Café Planetarium. The customers were far enough away that they hadn't noticed my presence. Being quite well-known myself, there would be chaos if they did.

".....Do you not remember?"

"Huh? Remember what?"

Yoo Soo-Ha furrowed his brows, clueless.

'Is that so.'

It was to be expected. Hunters associated with the Pillars all lost their memories. Yoo Soo-Ha couldn't remember the encounter with the Staff of Time Immemorial, nor his role as a judge.

It was a painfully obvious fact, but why did it leave a bitter taste in my mouth?

"Hey."

I swallowed that bitterness, pushing it down my throat.

"Do you want to see me dance?"

"....."

Yoo Soo-Ha's expression seemed to say, 'I knew you were crazy, but this is a whole new level of insanity.'

"Don't tell me, you, a guy who already has a partner, are trying to hit on me to go clubbing? No way, kid. I don't want to get involved with your duchy and suffer for it."

"Are you nuts? Delusional? I'm not talking about clubbing. I was asking if you want to see me embarrass myself with a Cossack dance."

"No, what you're saying sounds even crazier... Hmm."

Finally, Yoo Soo-Ha crossed his arms. It seemed he was intrigued. But he still looked at me with suspicion, wondering if I was just joking. A reasonable doubt, since if there was a list of people humanity could do without joking with, Yoo Soo-Ha would be right after the Guardian Spirit in second place.

"Alright. If you're willing to entertain an old man by showing off, I'll watch. Go on, dance right here in the café- What the hell are you doing, you lunatic!?"

"Cossack, dance, I am, dancing!"

"Stop it! Fuck, ah. Don't look here! Anyone who makes eye contact with me will forever wonder what's in their coffee from now on! Hey! If you stare for more than a second, expect phlegm, and for more than three seconds, fuck, I don't even know! Hey! Hey! Why are you still looking?!"

Yoo Soo-Ha screamed. The customers who glanced over at the commotion and met Yoo Soo-Ha's fierce gaze quickly averted their eyes. The handsome part-timer, who had become a fixture of Café Planetarium, was now more famous for his temper than his looks.

"Phew... Wow, shit. Crazy bastard. You actually danced when asked to?"

"Yep. If you ever want to see a Cossack dance, I'll perform it for you anytime."

"Why are you like this? Did you eat something weird...?"

"No. Just thought, if dancing for you makes this world a bit more bearable, then why not dance?"

"....."

Finally, Yoo Soo-Ha's expression reached its peak. It was a look of having heard something utterly unbelievable.

"Good heavens. You're really mad. No, I knew you were mad, but to think a madman could go madder, what should I call that?"

"Yoo Soo-Ha. I am... a god who can dance for you."

"If a normal hunter went mad, I'd report them to the Vigilante Corps, but what do you do when the top-ranked bastard goes insane? Seriously, should I send a message to the Ivansia duchy...?"

Yoo Soo-Ha muttered seriously. Though there was nothing serious to take from his words, except for one thing I heard for the first time.

"Top rank? What are you talking about? I'm still second."

"Huh? .....Ah, right."

Yoo Soo-Ha frowned, as if realizing, 'Ah, this guy didn't know yet,' lost in thought. He sighed heavily, filled with reluctance.

"Go see for yourself."

"Where?"

"Babylon Square. You could check on your smartphone easily, but you don't carry one, right? If you stay here, it'll only cause trouble with the customers. Better leave before it gets annoying."

Yoo Soo-Ha waved his hand dismissively. True to his words, I had long since abandoned my smartphone. I patted Yoo Soo-Ha's back as a farewell (which earned me a punch in the solar plexus, but I took it. Damn, that hurt), and teleported to the first floor.

Upon reaching the square, I was greeted by a gigantic hologram floating in the air.

+

1st. King of Death

2nd. Sword Saint

3rd. Black Dragon Witch

4th. Viper

5th. Countess

6th. Heretic Inquisitor

7th. Paladin

+

"....."

I stood motionless in the middle of the square, looking up at the ranking list.

"Hey, isn't that person over there..."

"King of Death, isn't it?"

"Eh, he's back? I didn't hear any news."

"He might have taken a break from climbing! Look! He looks exactly like the photo here. Compared to..."

Buzz buzz.

The square began to stir with excitement.

Numerous people were coming and going in the square. Compared to when I first challenged the 10th floor, or even to the future when I decided to undergo the 4000-day return, Babylon Square was much more vibrant.

The Great Guilds chose cooperation over invasion. The 10th, 20th, 30th, 40th floors... The endlessly unfolding fertile lands and new markets promised the tower an eternal new world. Raviel was my lover, and Uburka was my son. The procedures were strict, and the policies precise. Under the cooperation of the Great Guilds and local forces, the tower was prospering.

Even at this moment.

Humans from the outside world were also walking in the square. Although still a minority, there were empire exchange students selected by the Ivansia Duchy, Ghost Tribe members who joined Celestial Martial Guild following Viper, Earth Spirit Tribe warriors leading the trend of the Blood Fire Drama, among others of various races.

There would be discrimination, of course. Contempt, too. But while I was endlessly climbing the tower, taking care of external affairs, my comrades poured all their sweat and blood into internal management.

At least, there was no Babylon Square turned into ruins by countless terrorist attacks in our world. We, and I, will not allow even an inch of ruin to encroach upon this place.

Never ever.

"Hey, look over there!"

Someone pointed at the hologram. The reaction was minimal because most of the crowd was looking at me.

However, a clear change was happening on the ranking list that was enough to divert people's attention.

Fzzt fzzt-

Noise interfered with the hologram, and suddenly the text changed.

+

1st. The Heaven that Gathers Wails

2nd. Sword Saint

3rd. Black Dragon Witch

4th. Viper

5th. Countess

6th. Heretic Inquisitor

7th. Paladin

+

As if waiting for me to come and see it, my title on the ranking list changed.

A few people witnessed the change. The magical power inherent in the sound "Huh?" instinctively drew people's attention. Dozens of passersby shifted their gaze, and in no time, the "Huh?" spread throughout the square.

"What's that? The Heaven that Gathers Wails?"

"That's where the King of Death used to be."

"Di-Did the King of Death die and get removed from the list...?"

"My god. The King of Death might be dead?"

"The King of Death is dead?"

"King of Death got whacked?"

"King of Death was brutally murdered!!"

Dear citizens of the Tower, such a commendable example of information distortion you're showing....

"Why The Heaven that Gathers Wails, though?" or "Even if King of Death died, it's impossible for a new Hunter to suddenly take first place," or "That person standing there looks exactly like King of Death..." were some of the voices, but the rumor of my death buried all minority opinions.

And so, the square was in uproar for about four minutes.

"Really!"

The first person to rush towards me through the commotion was the Black Dragon Witch.

To be precise, she didn't exactly rush. She used her specialty, the [Teleportation] skill, to appear right beside me.

"Can't you stop yourself from causing trouble for one damn minute!?"

"Hewwwo. Nice to see you UwU."

".....What's with that sound, like scraping the bottom of a dog bowl?"

"Didn't you know? This is the latest greeting these days."

"What nonsense..... No, forget it. Rather than trying to make sense of you, I'd rather charge infantry into the Maginot Line. You come back after so long, and the first thing you do is spread a rumor that the top-ranked hunter might be dead!"

"It wasn't me."

I felt slightly wronged.

I just gained a new alias, and the rumor was spread by the people here. There must have been members of the Black Dragon Guild among the crowd. They must have rushed to inform the Black Dragon Witch as soon as they heard the commotion. Thanks to that, the Black Dragon Witch used teleportation to arrive here in less than five minutes.

'But it's been a while.'

Indeed, other comrades don't remember the events of the heavens floors either. If they had, I would have shared the story with the Black Dragon Witch too.

That's what I thought.

"Long time no see. How have the other comrades been?"

".....Huh? What are you talking about."

Thus, I was completely unprepared for the Black Dragon Witch's response.

"You're talking as if we haven't seen each other for months. Didn't you just meet the Countess a few days ago?"

I was momentarily stunned.

".....What?"

"What? What do you mean 'what'? I heard about it. The heavenly floor, right? There's no one else who would climb such a terrifying place as nonchalantly as you. What would you have done if the judge had betrayed you?"

My eyebrows twitched.

The commotion among the bystanders began to subside. The Black Dragon Witch had appeared in person and was bantering with me.

If I were not truly the King of Death, this would have been impossible, and thus the rumor of "King of Death is dead" quickly died down.

Contrary to the calming crowd, my mind was in turmoil.

"Wait a minute. How do you remember..."

"I'll let you explain that."

Thud.

Footsteps approached.

"It wasn't difficult."

I blankly turned my head. Cat-eared Merchant's Union members were escorting someone through the crowd, parting the bystanders.

There stood the Countess, smiling with a fan in hand.

Chapter 365: The 1st Floor (2)

---

[Come when I call you. Perform tricks if I ask you to, and if I command you to open a snack bag, then do it. Of course, you cannot lie to me and must always speak the truth. And that's not all. If I tell you to meow, you meow, and if I get sick of it and tell you to bark, then bark willingly.]

---

The Countess surveyed her surroundings.

"There are too many ears here for a conversation. Let's move elsewhere."

It was a sensible suggestion. We left the square.

Well, we just moved to a cafe clinging to the edge of the square.

'It's been a while since I've been here.'

This cafe was where we first met. The place where I was acknowledged as the vice guild master of the five great guilds during our first meeting. A place with its own significance.

Originally, this place was occupied by the most famous franchise in the world, the Green Star Octopus Mermaid Queen, but at some point, it turned into a cat cafe.

"Welcome! Woof! Master!"

To be more precise, it changed today.

Cats that I clearly remember seeing in the Heaven of Gold, undoubtedly the [The Cat that Bites Gold Coins], Nyangnyang Legion, rushed to the entrance.

"Woof! We are overwhelmed by the master's arrival and cannot contain our excitement!"

"Ah, I have already prostrated myself on the ground in my devotion...!"

"We have composed an ode to the Countess out of our devotion, woof!"

The Nyangnyangs lined up in a row, prostrating themselves. Their heads bowed but their tails were sticking up, wagging furiously.

The reason the cats didn't meow but barked instead was because the Countess commanded them to do so.

"Hmm."

The Countess covered her lower face with her fan, her eyes smiling.

"Not a bad welcome. Well, being the God of Commerce, you'd expect at least this level of service. Lead us to our table."

"Woof! Right away!"

The cats stood up and led the way.

We arrived at a window seat. It was arguably the most luxurious spot in the cafe, where sitting alone could justify the cost of the coffee. And literally, a hotspot.

"We warmed up the seat in anticipation of the master's arrival! Woof woof!"

Because the cats had already taken a seat on each chair.

"Our body heat shall warm up the master's cold body even if just a little! What an honor it would be! Woof!"

"Please, sit, master. We wish to serve you!"

"We've sent all other customers away. Don't worry! We gave them 10 gold coins each and asked them to leave politely, so they left happily!"

"If they realized their insignificant lives contributed to the Countess's comfort, they would surely rejoice too! Woof woof!"

"What the..."

I shuddered.

"I've never seen such a servile being..."

"I wondered where to best utilize them to earn such praise. It seemed there was no punishment greater than being eternally stroked by the very humans they scorned. So, I bought a cafe."

"I believe this cafe's land is the most expensive in the tower..."

"Well, money is something I have in abundance."

We took our seats by the window.

In other words, this cafe was situated in the square. Although the cats controlled the entrance and no one followed us inside, pedestrians could still glimpse us from outside the window.

Passersby snapped photos and waved, shouting through the glass. When I awkwardly waved back, a burst of cheers shook the soundproof glass.

Terrifying.

"Shouldn't we sit somewhere more secluded...?"

"No."

The Black Dragon Witch firmly refused.

"Do you know how long you've been away? I won't say you need to spend 90 out of 100 days in Babylon, but at least stay for 30 days. You're practically a king. There's nothing worse than a leader who abandons his throne."

"So we came to a cafe on purpose..."

"That's right. At the very least, when you're on the first floor, you need to be visible to the people. It's better to let the citizens see and feel reassured that the top-ranked hunters are living close to them, rather than holding meetings in some hidden depths. Right?"

So this was also part of reputation management.

Unlike me, Anastasia effortlessly smiled and waved. The glass vibrated again with the crowd's cheer.

Really, the Black Dragon Witch is flawless.

"Now, you must be curious why I remember the heavenly floors."

"Yeah. It's puzzling."

"As you know, I made [The Cat that Bites Gold Coins] bow before me."

Indeed, beneath the Countess's seat, four cats were kneeling in a row, a fact I recognized but chose not to react to.

"Tsk."

Regardless, the Countess clicked her fan.

"I demanded absolute obedience from the god. But in truth, I had another aim. To hide a beast, you must first create a forest to conceal it. To me, absolute obedience was that forest."

"And what was the beast?"

"The inability to lie to me."

Recalling the Countess's terms, I remembered:

「Of course, you cannot tell any lies to me and must always speak the truth.」

Indeed, such a condition was included in the Countess's surrender terms. Noticing my recollection, the Countess nodded.

"Seems your brain is still sharp, Kim Gong-Ja. Then let me ask from my side."

With a swish, the Countess's fan closed.

"Did the [The Cat that Bites Gold Coins] lose its memory?"

I blinked.

"Pardon?"

"A simple question. The [Staff of Time Immemorial] can distort the memories of hunters and Constellations. So, one might think that the [The Cat that Bites Gold Coins] would also lose its memories of the heavenly floors and the pillars. However, upon hearing that, I suddenly thought."

Tapping the table lightly with the tip of her fan, the Countess continued.

"There's no way that could be."

"....."

The Countess did not explain why she thought it impossible. Instead, the cats lying under the table pricked up their ears.

"Woof! Your thinking is correct, master. We are in cooperation with the [Staff of Time Immemorial]! When the pillar sends a soul, we receive it. Even if other Constellations can't remember the pillar, we, the collaborators of the heavenly tier, must remember!"

"Indeed."

I felt as if I had grasped the whole situation.

"Nisha lost her memory, but the cats retained theirs. Then, Nisha asked the cats about what happened and learned the whole story. Since lying was impossible, Nisha realized the full extent of the events."

"My, my. Now the two of you even address each other by your real names..."

Anastasia murmured in amazement beside us. Or perhaps, she just seemed dumbfounded.

The Countess shrugged her shoulders and then lifted one of the cats onto her lap.

"Wow, woof..."

"Hmm. Right, but that alone wasn't enough to be certain."

The Countess stroked the cat's head. Trembling. The cat shivered in terror, as if it were a mortal who had been blessed with a pat from a mythical monster.

"I needed assurance that, come what may, the pillar would not tamper with the Constellation's memory. Regrettably, I was not in a position to demand such a guarantee from the pillar. From the pillar's perspective, I am nothing more than a mere hunter. So, I thought of a counterintuitive solution."

"Counterintuitive solution?"

"Simple. Create an event where [no matter what happens, the pillar cannot tamper with the Constellation's memory]."

The Countess flicked the top of the cat's head. The cat trembled.

"Meow... We became the Countess's slaves according to the agreement. That was the deciding factor. The moment we became slaves, the [Staff of Time Immemorial] could no longer distort our memories under any circumstances."

"Why is that?"

"Because it would be a complete mockery of our feline lives."

The tricolor cat wagged its tail.

"If the pillar erased our memories, we would become the Countess's slaves overnight without knowing [why this happened] or [being clueless]. Isn't that unfair? It's as if, in the blink of an eye, we became the servants of the most noble being in the world! Woof! Of course, we would be very pleased with this situation and praise our master's elegance as we do now, but objectively, it's nothing but utterly unreasonable violence!"

"I see."

The Countess rubbed the cat's ears, causing the cat to jump in surprise and cry out "Meow!? Wow, woof! Woof!" in a pitiful protest, but to no avail.

"In short, I needed an absolute point that could not be rolled back. A point that could neither be erased nor distorted. That's why I let you rampage through the heaven and subtly pushed you until the Constellation submitted."

"....."

The moment the heaven's administrator was summoned and lost their memory, suspecting that the [cat bitten by gold] might be involved, the Countess aimed for the Constellation's surrender.

Listening to the Countess's grand strategy, I wet my lips.

"Weren't you worried?"

"Hm? About what?"

"That the [Staff of Time Immemorial] might have a ferocious nature. That it might endure irrational violence, that kind of entity. How could you trust that pillar?"

The Countess's eyes widened.

She covered her mouth with her fan and laughed softly.

"What are you talking about? Kim Gong-Ja, I have never once trusted the [Staff of Time Immemorial]."

"Excuse me? But..."

"I trusted you."

The Countess looked at me.

"You care about the tower more than anyone else. If the pillar managing such a tower were a ruthless dictator, you would have been the first to crush it. Isn't that so?"

"....."

"You tolerated the existence of that pillar. Not reluctantly, but willingly. Kim Gong-Ja. if you respect someone, they must be worthy of respect."

From afar, the cats wobbled towards us. They each served us a cup of coffee. The Countess held an Americano in one hand and smiled brightly.

"Just as you trust my abilities, I trust your judgment."

"...Nisha."

"You are our leader, and we are your comrades. And comrades, in my belief, strive to be equals."

The Countess said.

"What we did, how we conquered the stages, the conversations we had, a world remembered only by Kim Gong-Ja alone, oh dear. I would vehemently reject that from my end."

The smile that the Countess wore made it seem plausible why Patricia, despite their utterly opposite personalities, fell for the Countess.

"I lost my memory but when I opened my eyes, I found these cats scurrying around my feet. When I asked what happened, the cats showed me an ultra-high-definition hologram of the events in the heaven. I'd like to boast that everything went according to my plan."

"Woof."

The cats that delivered coffee to the Countess now pressed against my legs. Three cats combined their strength to lift a tray.

"White Mocha Frappuccino Venti Quad Shot Java Chip with Half-Half Chocolate Drizzle!"

I had never ordered it, but the cats brought my custom menu. I chuckled and turned to look at their master.

"A gift."

I was momentarily at a loss for words.

"Ah. Of course, the real gift is something else."

"Really."

"I just wanted to tell you this."

"Really..."

"Welcome, Kim Gong-Ja. You've worked hard conquering the heavens. We will always remember what trials you faced. The only thing you need to remember is one thing."

"...My comrades are amazing."

"Even if you leave us behind, we will never leave you alone."

I must have been making a face too embarrassing to show to passersby. To hide my expression, I took a sip of my coffee.

That day's White Mocha was exceptionally sweet.

Chapter 366: The 1st Floor (3)

---

Feeling reassured by the presence of my trustworthy comrades guarding the rear, I wished to say that I had started climbing the tower again. However, there was still unfinished business around the first floor.

"Where do you think you're going? There are hundreds, if not thousands, of interviews that have been put off. The press has been giving us the side-eye for a while now, making things quite burdensome, but this is a good opportunity. Let's get them out of the way."

Looking into Anastasia's eyes, it seemed there was indeed a lot left to do.

"Also, there's this, Kim Gong-Ja. There's going to be the first marriage between one of our hunters and a member of the Earth Spirit Tribe."

"What?!"

"Yeah, I had the same expression when I first heard the news. It feels too sudden, but it's something to celebrate, right? The wedding hasn't taken place yet. Since you're the oldest friend and a deity to the Earth Spirit Tribe, go and give them your blessings. Wait, hold on! First things first, the interviews! Hey! Kim Gong-Ja! You arm-flailing bastard!"

And so, I went to offer my congratulations.

The Earth Spirit Tribe has a unique marriage culture. Each partner searches through their respective homes' hearths, transferring the burning embers to a lantern. At the wedding, they combine their flames into one.

The guests also bring empty lanterns to the ceremony. Once the couple's flames merge, the guests pass on their congratulations by transferring the flame to their lanterns.

Guests carry this newly kindled flame back to their own hearths, [certifying the birth of a new couple] among all attendees. In homes without a hearth, they at least light a campfire.

It was a fittingly splendid ceremony for the Earth Spirit Tribe, who worship fire and revere their community... Naturally, there was a problem.

"W-We don't have a hearth at home! What do we do, King of Death?"

One half of the couple, the hunter, looked distressed.

Indeed.

Our citizens, enjoying the pinnacle of modern, or rather, future civilization, naturally did not keep hearths.

"Ugh. I'm not fixated on such things. Isn't love all that matters?"

"Ah, my love! But I'm interested in your traditions too! Surely, when we press our foreheads together, a brilliant idea will come to us!"

"My love...! Your heart is more delicate than the dew-kissed blossoms at dawn!"

Hmm.

Well.

A couple that loves each other to this extent would indeed be the first to marry across species. Yes, that makes sense...

"Ah, what a lovely occasion."

Despite feeling a surge of nausea from the saccharine display, I managed a smile.

"Argh! I've shown something unseemly before the great Kekerkker, ugor! Forgive me!"

"It's fine. I'm the one who should bear it, having intruded upon a couple's home uninvited."

"That's right. That's why I told you to forgive."

Uburka and our children really have no sense of how to treat a deity.

"Given that it's the first marriage of its kind, it's bound to attract a lot of attention. The major guilds are even planning to use this as a chance to promote harmony between species, but wouldn't that be too burdensome for you?"

"Ugor? Is that so?"

The Earth Spirit Tribe member tilted their head in confusion, but the hunter beside them cautiously nodded.

It's the difference in cultures, after all. I did well to rush over.

"I'll handle the press intrusion at the wedding venue. What business do merchants have interfering with the sacred union of flames?"

While pretending to address the Earth Spirit Tribe, I first reassured the hunter.

"And on this occasion, I'll arrange for a Holy Fire in the center of the square."

"Ugor, by Holy Fire you mean...?"

"I'll personally prepare the flame using my Aura. We'll set up something like an Olympic cauldron in the square to keep my fire burning continuously."

I turned to look at the hunter.

"You can take the flame from there to the wedding. For the Earth Spirit Tribe, it's as good as bringing divine fire, which should be more than sufficient. Of course, whether or not you choose to respect the Earth Spirit Tribe's marital traditions is entirely up to your agreement."

"Ah, um... Th-thank you for your consideration!"

The hunter bowed deeply, perhaps a bit too earnestly.

I smirked wryly. To them, it must seem like the top-ranked hunter is intervening on their behalf.

Imagine, someone of my stature blocking the press and installing something in the middle of Babylon's most expensive square. Naturally, they would feel immensely pressured.

'It reminds me of when I married Raviel...'

Back then, notable nobles from across the empire flocked to the ceremony.

Compared to Raviel, my status was lower, necessitating my adoption by the Imperial Chamberlain.

Even now, when dealing with official matters in the empire, it's more convenient to act under the title of 'Consort of the Ivansia Ducal House' than as the 'Top-ranked Hunter of the Lone Child World'. Am I the only one? The Black Dragon Witch and the Heretic Inquisitor also hold nominal noble titles.

Such are the differences between worlds.

"That's all I can do for you."

Raviel used her power to summon the Imperial Chamberlain and facilitate my adoption, which could be seen as either a kindness or a burden on me. Ultimately, it was my choice to make.

I will support the couple before me. If two people can transcend the differences in status and even species, they will surely navigate their future wisely.

"I'll do my best to suppress the press and provide a ceremony that's flawless from the Earth Spirit Tribe's perspective. However, there will undoubtedly be challenges that you must face on your own."

"Ah, um... What... What are your plans for the media?"

"Simple."

I grinned.

"Just give them a bigger scoop than interspecies marriage."

---

「 Shock! Encounter with a new species! 」

The media was ablaze with excitement just one day before the wedding.

「 Intelligent life discovered living in a city underground on the 5th floor! 」

「A splendid city hidden beneath the 5th floor, previously thought to be a mere hunting ground!?」

「An unexpected encounter. Who are the beings of this underground city?」

「Was the city legend true?」

「It's said that the darkest place is under the candlestick, but this place under the candlestick is mighty strong!」

「The Black Dragon Witch comments on the news, expressing 'it's shocking but a warm welcome'...」

The reaction was quite explosive.

"Die! Just die, you crazy bastard!"

As evidence of this, Anastasia was currently storming into my room in real-time, throttling me.

"Can you not?! Gah?!"

"Am I crazy? Do you really want to see me drop dead from overwork? I'm already buried under a mountain of tasks, and now you've piled this colossal event on top?!"

Anastasia shook me violently, her grip tightening around my neck.

This was no joke. A dark Aura emanated from Anastasia's grasp. Though not as strong as me, Anastasia was a hunter who would not be outdone in terms of Aura by anyone.

"I'm dying... Can't breathe... really... dying..."

"Good. Just die. It's not like it's your first time. Just die and go back to yesterday, then fix this mess immediately!"

"Help... help me..."

It was only when I was on the brink of death that Anastasia finally let me go, heaving a huge sigh as if bidding the world goodbye.

"Haah... Fine. I'll listen to your excuse. But how did you even find out about an underground civilization on the 5th floor?"

Catching my breath, I answered.

"Whew. It was Mutia, the Constellation I met on the 62nd floor."

"Mutia?"

"Yes. Officially known as [The Ruin-Harvesting Cow]. She has the power to regress people, showing them what lives they could have led, the myriad possibilities they hold. You could say she has a rough grasp of these possibilities."

The Black Dragon Witch slightly furrowed her brows.

"What? That's... overpowered."

"Yep. An overpowered character, indeed. Anyway, this overpowered character fought me and pulled all sorts of tricks."

If Flame Emperor had not obtained [Returner's Winding Clock], a worldline based on this assumption.

In that worldline, I didn't lose my life to the Flame Emperor but instead forged my own path. Roaming around from the 2nd to the 9th floor, I eventually discovered a city hidden underground on the 5th floor, thanks to a combination of luck and happenstance.

"Thanks to Mutia showing me my possibilities, I incidentally learned about the 5th floor's underground civilization. Since I knew about it, I had to make use of it."

"...I understand the situation, but you should have waited to reveal it. Now, our kids might collapse under the workload."

"Hm, actually, that was part of the plan."

"Huh?"

Anastasia asked, baffled by what seemed like nonsense.

But I was serious.

"The guild masters of our guilds trust each other completely now but the situation is different for the guild members below us. They've been fiercely fighting for years, so suddenly becoming all buddy-buddy?"

"...That's true."

"Exactly. They might refrain from fighting for now, out of respect for us, the guild leaders. But this is a matter of emotions."

The top-ranked hunters chose the path of cooperation after countless battles across stages.

However, it's different for the average guild member. They couldn't actively participate in stage conquests past the 12th floor. They lack the experience of [sharing hardships together].

"Anastasia is right. It's busy. With the discovery of an underground civilization on the 5th floor, no single guild can handle the workload alone now."

So, I deliberately created an experience.

"Driven by a desire to avoid death by overwork, the guilds must cooperate. Only by all guilds working together at full capacity can this hellish workload be managed.

"The world...!"

"And what about past conflicts? Old grudges? That's all well and good, but drop a 9-month overtime bomb in front of them and see. Do you think the guild members don't want to sleep or go home? They'll have no choice but to cooperate."

"You're truly a devil..."

Anastasia looked appalled.

I just shrugged.

"In the next few months, all the major guilds will effectively function as [one company]."

"But what about our kids' stress?"

"There's an easy target for stress relief. Announce that I was the one who discovered the underground civilization. All the guild members will collectively berate me, and I'll be the sole target of their ire."

"A scapegoat, then..."

"Right. After all, that's also a leader's responsibility. Besides, it's part of my role to scatter crumbs to the guild members while I solo conquer stages, right?"

To the members of the major guilds, I am a figure of mixed feelings.

Because of me, their workload has skyrocketed, making me an object of hatred. But thanks to me, they've also gained numerous benefits from many stages, making me an object of affection as well.

'If someone has to be the scapegoat, it's better if I take on that role.'

Don't want to work? Then leave the great guild. Give up numerous privileges.

Even now, there are countless hunters begging to be recruited by a great guild, even if it means working like an ox, just for a chance.

Practically, only hunters affiliated with major guilds have the freedom to come and go from worlds beyond the 11th floor.

We strictly regulate the entry of hunters to other worlds to minimize the shock they might experience, making it quite difficult for members of smaller guilds to find opportunities. There are hunters like [Apothecary] who succeeded purely on their own merits.

"If being hated prolongs life— as the saying goes, Kim Gong-Ja, you'll live a very long time..."

"If that joke holds true, I'm set for eternity."

"Eh?"

"I'll explain later."

I turned to close my laptop.

The screen was filled with articles ecstatic about the discovery of the 5th floor's underground civilization.

Among the flood of summer-like articles, a small, two to three-line piece stood out.

「The first marriage between a Babylonian and an Earth Spirit Tribe member! A modest but beautiful ceremony. Citizens shower blessings on this news...」

Smiling, I closed the laptop.

Chapter 367: Taboo (1)

---

Not everything went as smoothly as a wedding.

Time flew by swiftly.

A month had passed by in the blink of an eye. It wasn't an exaggeration, everything felt like a mere moment. Time had raced ahead, leaving me feeling somewhat aggrieved.

"It can't be helped."

Isn't it said that the older you get, the faster time seems to fly? Although my physical age is what it is, my mental age is already beyond measure.

I once tried to calculate how old I truly was, but I gave up once the count surpassed three digits.

It's fine. My physical age is still in the twenties... This sounds like I'm insisting I'm still in my twenties, doesn't it?

"May glory be upon the Moon of Ivansia! Consort, as per your command, we have surrounded the city gates!"

As I was ruminating on the cruelty of time, a knight rushed over and saluted.

I snapped back to reality with an "Ah."

"Good work, Knight Commander."

"It's nothing, my lord!"

"Have you sent the envoys for surrender? Still no response?"

"Yes! They continue to cry out for a desperate resistance!"

"How foolish."

I clicked my tongue.

Surrounded by elite soldiers of the Ivansia duchy, including the Knight Commander, the military discipline was strict. A formidable army of six thousand had encircled a small town.

If you're wondering how I, who was just interviewing on the 1st floor, ended up in the midst of a medieval battlefield, the reason is simple.

Raviel was nearly assassinated.

To be more precise, she was assassinated.

---

After winning the duel against [The Staff of Time Immemorial], I had been staying on the 1st floor for a while, showing my face to the public now and then, as Anastasia had strongly suggested.

But just when the interspecies wedding had concluded smoothly and the underground civilization turmoil had begun, in the middle of an interview with a journalist, a message resounded in my head.

[Skill activated.]

I was perplexed...

...Because I hadn't used any skills.

Noticing something off about my expression, the journalist in front of me asked, "Is something the matter?"

Just as I was about to respond with a smile, claiming it was nothing, I experienced the activation of 'a certain skill' for the first time in my life.

[A Certain Returner's Love (EX) has been activated.]

That was the beginning.

[You share a timeline with your partner.]

[The timeline has ended.]

W-What?

My vision spun. The scenery twisted like ink-soaked spaghetti. The journalist's voice, exclaiming "King of Death? King of Death!?" seemed to fade into the distance.

[You have died.]

[You will return 24 hours before.]

And so, I probably became the first human to experience 'dying without doing anything at all.'

"....."

"Die! Just die, you damned lunatic!"

When I blinked my eyes, the scene had changed. The journalist who was interviewing me had vanished without a trace. Instead, Anastasia was shaking me back and forth, holding my neck.

I had returned 24 hours before.

"What madness."

I realized the whole situation. Why I had suddenly died.

The message had clearly stated that [A Certain Returner's Love] was activated.

[A Certain Returner's Love] is a skill that allows Raviel and me to share the same timeline. If I go back a day, Raviel also goes back a day, ensuring we always breathe on the same timeline.

If Raviel dies, meaning her timeline ends... naturally, my timeline would end as well. We would die together.

But I have [Returner's Winding Clock].

If I face death, I immediately return 24 hours before. Since my timeline is reversed, so is Raviel's.

In short, as long as [A Certain Returner's Love] and [Returner's Winding Clock] are intact, we will never face a true death.

We'll just die for a day.

"....."

I wasn't in any immediate danger of dying just moments ago. Literally, I did nothing. Yet, the winding clock had been activated, meaning someone else had died.

And that meant Raviel's death.

"Right! Die, you insane bastard! Just die!"

Anastasia hadn't realized that I had just returned from the future. My muttered 'what madness' seemed to have been interpreted differently by her.

"There's no need to scream for death, Anastasia."

I murmured.

"I've just died, after all."

"What?"

"I returned from tomorrow to today. Right now."

"....."

Only then did Anastasia take a proper look at my face.

"...Why do you look like that?"

"What's wrong with my face?"

"It looks like you're about to kill someone. It's slightly scary, you know. Did something so shocking happen that you need to make such a face now?"

"This time, it's different."

"Oh, hmm. It was different... May I ask what made it different?"

"It wasn't me who died, but Raviel."

For some reason, Anastasia's complexion darkened drastically.

Silence ensued.

Anastasia released her grip from my neck, then clenched her eyes shut and sighed deeply, as if the ground was about to swallow her.

"This is insane..."

"I apologize for causing a stir with the underground civilization issue without consulting you first. However, I believe this incident will lead to stronger cooperation among the members of the large guilds. If you need a scapegoat, use me."

"I see... Ah... Well, that's possible."

"Anastasia."

"Speak your mind..."

"I'm truly sorry to impose on you during such a busy time, but I must visit the empire."

I spoke quietly.

My voice sounded strangely cold, even to my own ears.

"I can't say how long it will take. However, I promise to deal with the matter as quickly as possible and return."

"...Kim Gong-Ja."

"Yeah."

"Don't kill too many..."

"I can't promise that."

I gathered my holy sword.

"Squeak?"

"Yip yip."

The holy sword, playing with the snake and the fox, looked up at me, as if asking, 'What's going on?'

But upon seeing my face, both Constellations immediately closed their mouths.

"....."

"....."

The snake quietly coiled around my wrist, and the fox silently became a scarf. I didn't wait for the Constellations to wrap around me and walked out into the hallway of the quarters.

"Silvia Evanair!"

Silvia was waiting in the hallway. Once known as Lady Goldencup, Silvia had become entirely my subordinate since the defeat of [the Ruin-Harvesting Cow]. She was the Chamberlain of our family.

Silvia looked bored at a glance. She was idly yawning in the hallway when my call made her flinch.

"Ye-Yes? My lord?"

"Call all the household members together. However, there's no need to go out of your way to summon those far away. You have 5 minutes to gather everyone who can be here now in the garden."

"Eek. What a hassle. And 5 minutes is too short. Why all of a sudden..."

Silvia caught my gaze.

"...Oh, why indeed! There must be a heavenly reason from my lord! Yes! I'll gather the children right away! Yay! Work, it's work! I'm truly delighted to have work! Damn it!"

Silvia ran off in a hurry.

I went down to the garden first to wait.

Where I stayed was a kind of communal residence. Not only my family and vassals, but also the Black Dragon Witch, Heretic Inquisitor, Countess, Paladin, etc., lived together. However, it was ambiguous to say we lived in the same mansion. Each of us stayed in separate buildings, and the only shared space was, at best, the garden.

My family members quickly gathered in that one shared area.

"....."

The first to arrive was Ester. Holding the position of an advisor within the family, Ester was the heir who would lead the household in my stead during emergencies.

After exchanging glances with me, Ester quietly waited. Without asking why they were urgently summoned or what was happening, Ester didn't utter a single word.

Following Ester came Kim Yul. After Kim Yul came the Four Demon Lords. Then the cult gathered.

They alternated glances between me and Ester, then, just like Ester, they sealed their lips.

Finally, 5 minutes passed. Many vassals had yet to arrive, but I had no intention of dragging things out any longer. Frankly, it took a tremendous amount of patience to even wait for 5 minutes.

"Where's Uburka?"

"The Chief Warrior has been dispatched to the 5th floor to assist in negotiations with the underground people, my lord."

Ester replied emotionlessly.

"The Earth Spirit Tribe loves the scent of the earth and finds comfort in the dampness of the underground. Expecting that they would communicate well with the tribe that founded the underground civilization, we sent them. Should I call them back?"

"No. It's fine. There's no time."

I turned around. About a hundred vassals were looking at me. They weren't panicked by the sudden call, but they were curious about the reason for the assembly.

I answered their questions.

"Raviel is dead."

Thud.

The breath in the garden halted.

I smiled.

"To be precise, she will die tomorrow. Thanks to my skill, I was able to know of Raviel's death in advance. Truly, it's divine intervention."

I tried to make a joke in my own way. Being the representative of the Machen, it was divine intervention that I, through my skill, predicted Raviel's death.

However, no one responded to the joke. Not a single vassal forced a smile.

Ester's expression hardened. Kim Yul closed his eyes. Among the Four Demon Lords, the Sword Demon broke into a cold sweat, and the Hell Ghost Demon let out a long sigh.

"I can't imagine who would harm Raviel. How parched and twisted one's brain must be to commit such an act is beyond me."

I curled the corners of my mouth. Since no one laughed at my joke, I might as well laugh myself.

"One thing is certain, though— that bastard's imagination falls far short of mine. Why? Because that bastard can't imagine hell."

"....."

"No matter what kind of hell that son of a bitch imagined, the hell that bastard will experience from now on will be nothing but a blissful paradise in comparison. I intend to show that no one is as capable of creating hell as those who dare to speak of heaven in this world."

I turned my back.

I didn't utter pleas or commands to follow me or come with me. I simply walked ahead.

The footsteps of about a hundred people followed behind me.

[You are being transferred to the 25th floor.]

The destination was Sormewin Academy.

Originally one of the empire's top academies, Sormewin developed even further after the exchange agreement between Babylon and the empire was signed.

An office in charge of exchanges was established, and houses for the bureaucrats working there were built. As rare trade items from Babylon began to arrive, even agencies to handle them were created. Currently, Sormewin was more of a city than just an academy.

As soon as I was transported, an imperial bureaucrat greeted me warmly.

"Welcome! Welcome to the empire! If you don't mind me asking, what is the purpose of your visit..."

"I am the Consort of the Duke of Ivansia."

I looked at the bureaucrat.

"I am here not for Babylon's affairs but for a family matter."

"Oh....."

The bureaucrat stuttered. It seemed he recognized me. Indeed, if someone tasked with handling exchanges didn't recognize my face, they would have no excuse even if they failed.

The bureaucrat's complexion soon turned ashen. Following me, about a hundred vassals had been transported. The immigration office, or rather, the tower entrance office, was flustered by our sudden appearance.

"Let me repeat, this is a family matter."

Unfortunately, I had no time to persuade them gently.

"If you don't intend to make an enemy of the Ivansia duchy, step aside. Immediately."

The bureaucrat couldn't stop me. The knights and soldiers guarding the office made way for us. Hunters dispatched from Babylon, and guild members from the Black Dragon and the Merchants Union, also stepped back upon seeing my face.

I headed towards the Ivansia duchy's annex built next to Sormewin.

"Co-Consort! What in the world is this!"

Soldiers of the duchy, flustered, blocked my path.

"If you were coming, you should have sent us a message in advance so we could welcome you properly...!"

"Do you have any shame blocking my way when you couldn't even protect your master?"

"Ye-Yes?"

I smiled wryly.

"I'd like to tie you all up and hold you accountable right now, but I'd rather see Raviel's face first. I won't repeat myself. Move aside. Well, it doesn't really matter whether you do or not."

"What do you mean..."

"I mean, I don't have time to waste on someone like you."

I nodded slightly.

Ester made a move. Ester applied a joint lock to the soldier, immediately neutralizing him.

A fraction of a second after Ester, the clergy stepped forward. In just a moment, the duchy's annex was subdued by force. The Blue Lion Knights attempted to resist us, but like decaying leaves, they were easily trampled.

I walked down the corridor.

In front of Raviel's bedroom, six servants were standing guard.

All were servants trained to defend against assassinations, cherished confidants of Raviel. Normally, they were reliable, but at this moment, to me, they were nothing more than leeches sucking on the duchy's treasury.

"Consort."

"Step aside from the Moon of Ivansia."

"Even if it's you, Consort, you can't just barge in from here on..."

Was there any need to listen to this babble?

'No.'

I lightly tapped their pressure points with aura.

".....!"

The servants collapsed in the hallway. They were not allowed to make a sound or even groan.

I purposely did this so they could feel the bitter humiliation of not being able to block my path for even a second while remaining conscious.

Leaving the twitching servants behind, I opened the bedroom door.

Creeeak—

The door opened.

"Hmm."

Raviel was sitting in a chair, looking down at a winding clock.

Despite all the commotion and outrage I had caused, Raviel seemed hardly surprised. Instead, she nodded lightly, as if she had expected it.

"13 minutes and 27 seconds, huh."

Her red eyes shifted from the winding clock to me.

"I thought it wouldn't take you more than 5 minutes if you came alone, and not more than 15 minutes if you brought your forces. Indeed. Our distance was 13 minutes."

"Sorry for the delay, Raviel."

I smiled.

"So, which son of a bitch do I need to beat to death?"

Raviel gave a bitter smile.

Chapter 368: Taboo

(2)

---

I gently nudged the chair beside me.

The fan used to tap on the chair's armrest was a premium gift I gave.

I bit my lip.

It wasn't just an expensive gift. It was a fan crafted with great care by NamGung Woon, once my master's formidable rival and now the retired Head of the Martial Alliance and the Great Guardian of the Celestial Martial Clan.

Raviel must have anticipated my arrival. She was wise. She had devised a way to quell my emotions far more effectively than any words of 'calm down' could.

Indeed, Raviel's intentions were spot on. Seeing an item that even remotely connected to my master, ice poured over my raging heart.

Though it was like pouring ice into lava.

".....If I am not to harbor murderous intent now, when should I?"

"Whenever that time may be, even if it's this very moment, it's clear that the place for you to harbor such intent is not before my eyes. It's not a matter of timing, but of place."

"I am aware but I do not wish for my anger to dull. The more I speak with you, the more my reason will rein in my emotions."

I spoke softly.

No, from the moment I realized Raviel's death, my voice has only flowed quietly. Not to maintain composure, but quite the opposite.

I didn't want the heat of my anger, soaked in my heart, to leak out even a bit. Not a single drop.

"I want to stain my hands with blood in pure rage, in sheer emotion. Please, tell me who dared to lay their hands on Raviel."

"All I hear is a wish to go mad."

"You heard right."

"....."

Raviel lifted the corners of her lips.

She seemed satisfied, as if discovering a new toy, and for a brief moment, it seemed she shuddered at the wave of my emotions.

Seeing the curve of her lips etched on her pale face, I realized.

It was over.

Raviel was more interested in my reaction, fueled by rage at her death, than her own demise.

"Do you wish to kill the one who murdered me?"

".....Yes."

I tasted the metallic tang of blood in my mouth. My teeth had finally bitten through to the red flesh of my lips.

"How do you want to kill them?"

"I want to kill them by ripping their life out of them."

I knew where this conversation was heading, into which terminal it would crash and the sea that it would flow into. Yet, I answered, making my teeth a wheel of fate, my tongue a stream of water.

I couldn't remain silent to the question of my beloved. Never.

"I want to finely slice the lips along the edge of the teeth. I want to see their voice twist grotesquely through the gaps between bared teeth and severed lips."

"And the eyes?"

"I'll gouge them out and connect the lost veins and nerves with my aura. Then, I'll place them back in the sockets. Every blink will bring them pain, wishing they were blind instead."

"....."

Raviel's laughter deepened.

Now it was visible in her eyes. A slight twitch under her left ear, along the slender neckline. Raviel was savoring the sight of me completely losing my reason, tasting the rare madness of her husband.

"Raviel."

"I see. I was not considerate enough. Close the door."

Raviel gestured towards the bedroom door wide open behind me.

"I cannot leave such a voice, such a face of yours to be witnessed by others. It's a luxury that should be allowed only to me."

"Close it. Please, Gong-Ja."

I closed the door.

The air in the bedroom grew denser.

The poison was the scent of blue lilies.

"What about the hands? The wrists? The back of the hands. The fingers. The nails. What do you plan to do?"

The source of the poison was her red eyes.

"I want to hear."

I opened my mouth.

"Tell me, my love."

I told her.

Every imaginable hell, hells that would mock hell itself for being lukewarm, spilled from my lips, carrying the warmth of my heart and the poison of my blood.

Raviel indulged in my warmth and poison to her heart's content. It would be fair to say she devoured it.

As my rage roared for red blood, the gleam in Raviel's red eyes shimmered more brightly. Polished. My poison was sweet vitality to her.

"So, will you kill like that?"

Raviel asked lazily, like a lioness sated after a feast, as if all predation was done.

"Yeah."

"Among those shadows you've gathered, murderers are more common than not. Some are even mass murderers."

"Ah....."

"The one who killed me must certainly pay the price. Gong-Ja, my love, I have no intention of stopping you from executing that price. However, whether the weight of that price will be justly measured, I wonder."

I pressed my forehead.

Raviel was urging me to be fair. I, who had accepted Ester and even forgiven Yoo Soo-Ha. Raviel was saying that the same standards I set when accepting them should apply now.

"Raviel..... but."

"Wouldn't I have felt the same rage if you had died?"

My heart slowed.

"How many times do you think you've died since we exchanged rings? How many times do you think I've held back? Gong-Ja..."

Raviel smiled.

"You must endure as much as I have."

I couldn't say anything.

Raviel knew my rage. The way to quell it. And the one sentence that would prevent me from ever bursting into fury.

Even if I had more to say, it wouldn't have escaped my lips.

Raviel pulled my wrist, sealing my lips with hers. It was hot. So hot it could scald my tongue. The heat vomited from my heart, she must have stolen it all.

The closed door remained shut.

---

It was only when the sun set, the twilight spread, and the silver moon peeked through the window that we began to speak calmly.

"It's the Crown Prince."

Raviel spoke in a voice that had cooled down significantly. Her voice always had a resonance as if submerged in an icy sea. It was the voice of Raviel I loved.

"Damn it."

But the content Raviel revealed included a figure I could never like.

"That noodle hair bastard. Wasn't his blond hair enough that now even his brain's turned into noodle strands, swollen and bloated?"

"Hmm. I always look forward to what you'll compare the Crown Prince to. This time too, I'm satisfied..."

My anger, which had barely subsided over four hours, reignited.

However, after the fire had swept through once, only ashes remained. Just as Raviel intended, a fury comparable to before didn't arise.

Moisture seeped into places unburnt by the flame. It was reason. Cold judgment. Like old dampness clinging to my skull, reason let me make almost habitual judgments.

".....Indeed. If not for the royal family, who else would dare to assault the Duchess of Ivansia?"

Once the lubricant started flowing, the rest was easy.

My thoughts raced.

"However, the current Emperor is a wise ruler. He's aware that the power of the empire is tilting towards the Ivansia family. This isn't a scheme of the entire royal family, but rather the unilateral action of the Crown Prince."

"Hmm."

Raviel rested her chin on her hand.

She was enjoying herself, encouraging me to continue with a gesture.

"But with your death, everyone would immediately suspect the royal family. The Emperor would claim his innocence, but it would be difficult to dispel people's suspicions. That's when the Crown Prince would stage a rebellion against the Emperor."

Crack.

I gritted my teeth but continued with my deduction.

"[The Emperor, blinded by power, assassinated a loyal subject of the empire, the Duchess of Ivansia. As the Crown Prince, I cannot stand by and watch the empire fall. With tears in my eyes, I take up arms in rebellion. Although I'm committing a great disloyalty to my father, if I alone can bear this shame to save the empire, I will gladly draw my sword.]"

Raviel did not contradict my words.

Her silence gave me confidence. That madman. That noodle-brained fool blinded by power. To think that sparing the successor to the throne, turning a blind eye out of respect for the Emperor and the royal dignity, he dared...

"At one point, the Crown Prince was Raviel's fiancé. [Although our engagement ended unhappily, I cannot overlook the death of a noblewoman with whom I once shared a bond.] He plans to cry out for such a plausible cause to gain the support of the Ivansia family."

"Truly unfortunate....."

Raviel sighed as if savoring a sweet.

"People always marvel at your effortless accomplishments. They're unaware of the well-concealed sword in your mind, but then again, what do people know?"

"....."

I cleared my throat.

".....If the Crown Prince secures the support of the Ivansia family, it's essentially the same as having the backing of the noble faction. He probably calculated that the coup has a high chance of success. Yes, in his own way."

I looked at Raviel.

"For this plan to succeed, people need to be convinced that [the Emperor is the assassin of the Duchess of Ivansia]. Raviel, where were you supposed to meet your end tomorrow?"

"If the moon of Ivansia is this wise, the people of the empire should rejoice."

Raviel fully affirmed my reasoning.

"I was waiting to meet His Majesty in the palace."

As I thought.

".....So it wasn't an assassination, but a poisoning. The idiot who dallied with Goldencup after leaving Raviel is the culprit. He probably seduced a palace attendant with his half-decent looks."

"Correct. Even if I were to score your answer sheet 120 out of 100, no one would blame me."

"Of course, the Crown Prince himself wouldn't have been in the palace at that time. He needed to avoid suspicion. Was he on a hunt, perhaps?"

"150 points, then."

"Ha. He must have taken a few of the royal guards on a hunting trip as an excuse. That way, upon hearing of your death, he could storm the palace with his soldiers!"

"200 points... Troublesome, Gong-Ja. Even if you are my consort, giving more than double the perfect score might make me appear biased as a judge. Are you trying to subject me to accusations of partiality?"

"Fine. I'll go kill the Crown Prince and his sycophants who joined his hunt and be back."

"By returning to 100 points, you've shown great consideration."

"....."

I looked at Raviel.

Raviel looked back at me.

"Thinking about it, five hours seems too short to quell my anger."

"Indeed?"

"The more I think about it, the more I realize how long it's been since you and I spent such exclusive time together. And to think we can't fully enjoy this time because of that damn Crown Prince really pisses me off. That bastard!"

"And so?"

"Let's just play all day."

"Are you planning to hand over an entire day to the Crown Prince and his rash actions?"

"No. After playing for a day, we'll turn back the day."

"An excellent plan. I see no reason to refuse your proposal."

We played all day.

[You have died.]

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

And then we played another day.

[You have died.]

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

Playing made it hard to find a reason not to play for yet another day.

[You have died.]

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

The world? Assassination? Power struggles and political fights? Forget it.

For now, I'm going to play with the person I love.

[You have died.]

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

It took us a whole week to come back to our senses. The silver moon still twinkled from the same spot beyond the window. Raviel and I, side by side, propped our chins, pondered together, and murmured in unison.

"Did we go too far?"

"It does seem we might have gone a bit too far..."

"Indeed, a week was too much..."

"Perhaps a week was indeed excessive..."

"Then we should play for just one more day."

"Yeah, let's play for just one more day and then exercise restraint."

[You have died.]

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

And so, two weeks passed.

As for the chaos we caused during those two weeks, I choose to remain silent. However, if you could turn back time and nobody would remember what you did during that reverted time, imagine what you could do. Just about three times that imagination came to fruition.

We were utterly satisfied.

"Now, what do you plan to do, Gong-Ja?"

Fully satisfied, Raviel asked as I shrugged my shoulders.

"First, I'll go see the Crown Prince."

"Don't kill him. If you must, it shouldn't be now but later. When no one cares, quietly remove him."

"Yes. I'll be back."

Right. I won't kill him.

I'll just show him pain worse than death.

Chapter 369: Taboo

(3)

---

As soon as I emerged from Raviel's chamber, I ordered the household knights of the Ivansia family to assemble.

The vassals of the Duke were visibly disconcerted. It was understandable; I had never interfered in the affairs of the Ivansia Ducal household before.

For the servants who had been pinned down by my aura and forced to kiss the cold floor for half a day, their faces were twisted in outright hostility.

"Consort, with all due respect, even you cannot command the knightly order..."

"Respect? Thought it didn't exist? It's surprising that it does."

I drew the family crest from my pocket and showed it to them.

"Raviel has given me full authority. My commands are as good as those coming from the Ivansia name itself. Unless you're considering a career change to rebels, I'd suggest you comply quietly."

"....."

The servants gnashed their teeth and glared at the crest as if staring it down could turn it into a fake.

I smirked.

"What? If you doubt it, run to the Duchess and verify my words. Though, it'll just be another step on your already trampled pride, but hey, it's all valuable experience. It'll fertilize your life."

".....We shall comply with your command... Consort."

"Oh, how kind of you."

I pocketed the family crest and waved my hand flamboyantly, imitating Yoo Soo-Ha's infuriating gesture. In some sense, he was the perfect role model.

"What are you waiting for? Get to work! Are you dining on the family's dime for free? I knew Ivansia was charitable to its subjects, but I wasn't aware it extended to free meals for its vassals. What? Have I, the consort of the house, been too neglectful?"

".....Grr!"

"If you have time to growl, accept the orders. Echo after me, summon the knightly order."

"Summon the knightly order!"

The servants dispersed with a look that promised retribution.

Not that I was scared. They had left Raviel exposed to potential poisoning; they were bound to be scorned by me for a long time.

It wouldn't take long for them to realize that it wasn't they who had marked me, but I who had marked them.

"Silvia Evanair."

"Ah, y-yes, m-master..."

After issuing the summon, I called for Silvia.

The vassals who followed me had already seized control of the Duke's annex. Among them, the close aides waited in the corridor outside the bedroom, and Silvia, once known as the Goldencup Lady, was among them.

Silvia approached me tentatively, gauging my mood.

"It seems you're in a better mood than before, thankfully..."

For reference, from Silvia's perspective, I had reemerged from the bedroom just an hour after entering.

In reality, Raviel and I had been playing for a full two weeks, repeating a single day. We perceived time differently.

"What did I look like before?"

"Do you want the honest truth, or something more pleasant to hear?"

"Just be honest."

"It was like a lunatic whose eyes had flipped, smiling with just the tips of their lips twitching. 'Wow, this guy could become even crazier,' I thought. 'He's striving to surpass the very definition of lunacy.'"

I let out a bitter laugh.

The fact that Silvia could speak to me this way meant my mood had significantly improved. She judged that she could joke without repercussions, given my apparent good spirits.

"Silvia, I have something I want to ask you."

"What is it?"

"You were once seriously involved with the Crown Prince, even discussing marriage. So, did the Crown Prince truly love you?"

"....."

Silvia furrowed her brows.

".....Wow. That's an unexpectedly serious question."

Her face barely changed, but an air of aristocratic haughtiness was palpable. Positively regal if spoken kindly, or downright annoying if not.

After all, wasn't she once a lady who, alongside Raviel, dominated the empire's social circles?

"Love? Hmm. If you're asking whether the Crown Prince was smitten with me, I'd say yes since I seduced him. But hmm..."

Silvia tapped her chin thoughtfully.

".....Probably not. No. The kind of love you're asking about wasn't there."

"Why do you think so?"

"For starters, since I've been taken in by you, the Crown Prince hasn't once sought me out."

Silvia laid out the facts plainly.

"Do you know what we talked about most when the Crown Prince and I were alone?"

"I can't even begin to guess."

"Try to imagine. Gossip. When we met, we'd gossip about the Silver Lily... Ah, I shouldn't call her that now, should I? Anyway. We'd gossip about the Duchess of Ivansia."

Silvia sighed and shrugged.

"We purposefully chose dating spots where students could see us just to ensure someone would witness us cuddling and run straight to the Duchess with the news."

"To make Raviel feel humiliated?"

"Exactly."

"The couple was more pathetic than I thought..."

"What did you expect? You know better than anyone, don't you? The Duchess of Ivansia is someone who doesn't get shaken by anything others do."

Silvia narrowed her eyes.

"Her only weakness was love. Love. The Crown Prince, aside from having an affair with me, had no other way to shake the Duchess. That's all he knew."

"....."

"In every aspect, he was inferior. Studies, diplomacy, administration, public affection, and even schemes. Probably even in swordsmanship. Despite being born into the most noble family in the empire, he had nothing on the Duchess of Ivansia."

"So you had a secret affair with him to feel superior to Raviel?"

"Yes."

"Truly a piece of trash."

"Is this your first time seeing trash?"

Silvia replied nonchalantly.

"There are many like that in the world."

Indeed.

The problem is, even if such people are plentiful, this one happens to be the Crown Prince of the empire.

".....I've been patient, warning him to behave. But it seems that won't do anymore."

Silvia looked up at me, and I returned her gaze.

"I'll bring him down."

Silvia's eyes widened, but that was it. The surprise she showed was just that brief.

In fact, what Silvia said next surprised me more.

"Umm, I'm kind of against that..."

"Because of some loyalty to your old flame?"

"Loyalty is just talk. No, it's just that it'd be much easier if the Crown Prince ascended the throne as is."

"What do you mean?"

"He won't be able to govern the empire smoothly once he becomes Emperor."

Silvia declared confidently.

"Ten years at most, five at the least. Complaints about the Emperor's incompetence and tyranny will start erupting from every corner of the empire. From the nobility and even the common folk. Then, when that happens, it'd be a breeze for the Ivansia family to dethrone the Emperor."

"....."

"Sure, we could replace the Crown Prince now if we wanted to. Easily. The real power of the empire is already shifting to Ivansia, but the common folk still don't know what a mess the Crown Prince is. If Ivansia is to become the new royal family of the empire, it'd be best to have the support of the people as well... What? Why are you looking at me like that?"

"No, it's just unexpected. You actually have a political mind."

Silvia made a disgusted face.

"Hey. If it weren't for you... ah, sorry. If you hadn't been there, I would have become the Crown Princess and then the Empress, bringing down the Ivansia family... Yes?"

Right. She was a returnee.

"Your advice is sound, but the head maid seems to be misunderstanding something."

"Misunderstanding?"

"Yeah. I plan to bring down the Crown Prince, but it's not because I want Raviel to become the new Emperor."

"Eh? Why not?"

I answered calmly.

"Because if Raviel becomes the Emperor, she'd be even busier than now."

"....."

Silvia was speechless.

".....Really? Is it really just for that reason?"

"What other reason could there possibly be?"

"What a lunatic... ah, right. If it's you, that makes sense. And you have room to spare. Damn it. Being around you skews my perspective on everything, and it's annoying."

Silvia rubbed the back of her head, mumbling something about how it made sense for two such people to be in love.

"So, you just want to replace the Crown Prince while keeping the current royal family intact? Is that correct?"

"Spot on."

"Then... we'll have to support either the Second Prince, the Third Prince, the First Princess, the Fourth Prince, or the Second Princess. Damn it. Am I the only one well-versed in the imperial situation to be chosen as your advisor?"

Silvia grumbled.

"If you ask me to recommend someone, it'd be the Second Prince. He might lack the ability to think for himself, but he's not capable of causing a mess like the Crown Prince. He's harmless."

"Isn't there a royal family member who could become a sage ruler or a wise monarch?"

Silvia scoffed.

"If there was, do you think the Crown Prince would have maintained his position?"

Truly, the chamberlain knew how to strike with facts.

---

The next day, Raviel and I entered the imperial palace.

It wasn't the main palace in the capital but a separate palace suitable for the second capital's growth, Sormewin. The Emperor happened to be staying here at the time.

"If it had been the capital's palace, the Crown Prince wouldn't have dared to command a servant to poison."

Raviel noted.

"However, this place is different. Excluding the Emperor's entourage, the servants handling menial tasks are mostly the Crown Prince's people. It was relatively easy to plot a poisoning here."

Of course, it was only "relatively" easy.

The Crown Prince had mobilized all his connections and power for this assassination attempt. Yet, in the end, only two servants in the separate palace were actually involved in the poisoning.

Unknown at the time, we now fully grasped who participated in the poisoning.

During those two weeks of leisure, the nearly fortnight of rest wasn't just spent indulging in decadence within the bedroom. We uncovered everything: the servants' family backgrounds, personal circumstances, and connections to the Crown Prince.

"Please, I beg you, show mercy to my family...! I'll accept being enslaved, or you can chop me up and throw me to the sea. Just please, spare my family..."

We easily extracted confessions from the culprits.

Their confessions were promptly reported to the Emperor. Initially skeptical, the Emperor had no choice but to sigh after personally interrogating the culprits.

"Foolish child... Was he always this foolish..."

The Emperor lamented.

He might have been lacking, but he was the chosen successor. It was natural for the Emperor to feel sorrowful. However, I was ready to deliver an even greater blow to the Emperor.

"Your Majesty. The foolishness of attempting to poison the Duchess of Ivansia is already shocking, but there's an even more tragic foolishness Your Majesty must consider."

".....And what might that be, sovereign of another world?"

The Emperor regarded me not as the Consort of Ivansia but as the monarch of the World of the Lone Child.

In official settings, I might pay utmost respect to the Emperor, but in a secured space like this, the Emperor didn't bother with maintaining his dignity.

"The Crown Prince is currently away on a hunt with his close associates. According to intelligence, their gear is unusually heavy for a mere hunt."

I bowed slightly.

"Armored horses for hunting mere beasts? Isn't that an over-preparation?"

"....."

The Emperor's sigh deepened.

He was an astute ruler despite his son's betrayal. He grasped the hidden meaning in my words immediately.

Turning his head, the Emperor ordered his chamberlain (the very same elder who had adopted me as his foster son) to act.

"Immediately inspect the main and rear gates for the guard troops."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

The elder promptly checked the palace's security and returned.

"Your Majesty, there were no issues at the main gate, but the guard responsible for the rear gate was absent, and his subordinates were barely half the required number."

"Ah..."

The Emperor heaved a long sigh.

"Is it true... is it true that my son intended to harm me?"

No one responded.

Raviel remained silent throughout. Her mere presence was enough.

Whether it was reporting on the poisoning, detailing the culprits' confessions, or exposing the Crown Prince's intentions, such potentially treasonous words flowed only from my mouth.

Even when reporting this calamity to the Emperor, I spoke not as the Consort of Ivansia but as the representative of another world. It was best not to give anyone a reason to hold me accountable later.

"Your Majesty. Summon the Crown Prince who is away on his hunt."

I urged him towards the final nail in the coffin.

"If the Crown Prince truly considers himself innocent, he will respond to Your Majesty's call. He would have no reason to refuse. However, if he truly orchestrated this entire tragedy, fearing his plan might be exposed, he will flee."

".....Very well. It shall be done."

Following my advice, the Emperor sent a messenger.

Anxiety filled the air as we waited.

Only after a considerable time did the messenger return. The imperial chamberlain whispered something to him. Once the messenger left the audience chamber, the chief servant spoke up.

"Your Majesty."

"Is the child coming...?"

"I regret to inform you, Your Majesty, but the Crown Prince turned his horse around and fled with his followers."

Silence enveloped the audience chamber.

During this time, the Emperor seemed to age five years. Despite the arrival of people from another world, he had maintained his composure and ruled the empire as peacefully as possible, but the rebellion of his son seemed to have broken his heart.

"Duchess..."

For the first time, the Emperor addressed the Duchess.

Raviel, as if she had been waiting, slowly bowed her head.

"Yes, Your Majesty. Speak, I am listening."

"What should I do with you...?"

"I shall always remain loyal to Your Majesty."

Raviel's words meant she had no intention of using this incident as a pretext to rebel against the empire.

The Emperor closed his mouth again.

Silence lingered.

".....I have done you a great disservice."

The voice that escaped the Emperor's lips sounded less like the sovereign of an empire and more like a father to a child.

"I knew my son was lacking and foolish, and I knew you were a bright child. I thought that even if he was lacking, with your support, he could manage the country, but was that judgment blinded by paternal affection? Even that..."

".....Your Majesty."

"I let you go for the sake of a lady from a baronial family, and the story was over from that moment. How can I blame only my son for his foolishness? My foolishness is far greater."

"Your Majesty has always shown concern and kindness to me since my days as a lady."

"I am sorry."

The Emperor closed his eyes.

".....The Crown Prince is no longer the empire's Crown Prince. Nor will he be my son any longer."

At this moment, the fate of the Crown Prince was sealed.

Born a prince, but not destined to die as one.

"Let the Ivansia Ducal family handle this matter."

That day, I led the ducal knightly order in pursuit of the Crown Prince.

Chapter 370: Taboo

(4)

---

The Crown Prince, along with his close aides, stealthily took refuge in a small city. It was more of an escape than a flight, akin to escaping from reality.

"Let's send an envoy to recommend surrender for starters."

I surrounded the small city with the ducal knights, the imperial knights, and my own vassals. Then, as a formality, we sent an envoy to politely request their surrender.

Of course, the Crown Prince, who had escaped into his own fantasy, was far from observing such formalities.

According to the envoy, His Ramen Highness yelled something along the lines of, "You are invaders from another world! I am the foundation of the Empire! I will never bow my head to the likes of interworld scoundrels!"

Hearing this, I clicked my tongue.

"Foolish."

Indeed. Had I rashly intimidated the Crown Prince, I would have been treated as an invader from another world.

Among the empire's nobility and citizens, there were quite a few who viewed the otherworld unfavorably. The Crown Prince's claim that they must fight against the threat from another world could have gained momentum.

But I had the justification from the Emperor.

Even the clothes I wore were of the empire's style. I was the Consort of the Ivansia ducal family, acting under the solemn command of His Majesty, the Emperor, not as a monarch from another world.

Checkmate.

"What are you planning to do now?"

Silvia approached me and asked. She was well-versed in the empire's affairs and was assisting me.

"Based on my past experience of dating him, I'd say drop any expectations of the Prince surrendering. That man never backs down once he's made up his mind."

"So what if the damn prince refuses to surrender?"

"Heh?"

I gripped the hilt of the Holy Sword.

"I'll capture him."

That night, I scaled the city walls alone.

The Crown Prince's forces, perhaps preparing for a siege, had a fairly tight security. In other words, it was only "fairly" tight. If they wanted to stop me, they needed an incredibly meticulous security setup. Not something like this, buddy.

Before an hour had passed, I had infiltrated the Crown Prince's bedroom.

"Huff... Uhm..."

The golden-haired ramen lay unaware of the world, asleep. Even with the knights who were guarding outside his bedroom all knocked out.

I snickered and gently poked his cheek.

"Hey, you gonna wake up?"

The Crown Prince groggily opened his eyes, still not fully grasping reality.

"Ugh, hmm... What's... going on...?"

"What do you mean what's going on? Get up already. I'm the one who married your first fiancée and took your second fiancée as my vassal."

"What...? Huh!?"

Only then did the Crown Prince's eyes snap open. I was waiting for this moment. I immediately flicked his eyelid with my finger.

"Aaah! My eyes, my eeeeyes!"

The Crown Prince fell off the bed, covering his face.

"Kid, that's quite the overreaction for a little flick."

"Guards! Guuaaards! There's an intruder! The intruder has appeared! What are the guards doing?"

"Your guards are all out cold. You're like an order of spaghetti alle vongole with clam shells but no clams, waiting over 30 minutes for your seolleongtang and it still hasn't arrived. Can't you sense anything even when I'm gently stroking your eyebrows?"

"Guuaaards! Guards! Guaaaaaards!"

I squatted down to look at the Crown Prince.

The so-called first-rate posture.

The Crown Prince, having never seen such a posture in his royal life, shuddered as soon as our eyes met.

"Why is no one responding to my call...?"

"Because I've covered a 6-meter radius with my aura like a dome. No matter how much you whimper, the curtain blocks the sound."

"That's impossible—"

"It's possible. And it will continue to happen. Your Highness, I don't want to face you any longer than necessary, so let's wrap this up quickly."

I pulled out a scroll from my robe. It was an imperial edict with the Emperor's seal.

"What, what... That's...!"

Recognizing the seal, the Crown Prince's mouth dropped open. I flicked my finger again, this time hitting his lips. A comically pitiful cry echoed.

"Listen, kid. For the sake of your pea-sized brain, I'll personally interpret His Majesty's sublime words."

Facing the Crown Prince, whose lips were now swollen red, I smiled.

"From today, you're going on a study abroad program to our world."

"Study abroad? What nonsense is that?"

"Well, it sounds nice, but it's actually exile. Did you really think you'd get away unscathed after attempting to poison Raviel and even threatening the Emperor?"

The Crown Prince's face turned ashen. He must have realized that I held all the evidence.

"There are countless nobles who follow me. They won't tolerate such tyranny!"

"It's funny you should say that because they're about to lose their heads and their families are on the verge of extinction due to treason, but I'm going to give them a chance."

"A chance...?"

"Yes, the chance to cut ties with you and save their lives."

I tapped the Crown Prince's forehead with the scroll. Each time the edict touched his forehead, he flinched.

"The nobles didn't join your rebellion. [The Emperor ordered you to study abroad in another world.] But [you were unfamiliar and afraid of going to another world, so like a teenager, you stubbornly refused.]"

"Ah...?"

"And you didn't throw a tantrum alone. [You begged the nobles to please hide you.] And the nobles, unable to harshly refuse the Crown Prince's request, [secretly hid you here,] but the secret didn't last long, and [they were caught by His Majesty.]"

The Crown Prince looked up at me blankly.

I curled my lips up.

"Don't you get it? This is my scenario. According to this, the nobles don't have to bear the crime of treason. They'll only be guilty of indulging in the whims of a pathetic Crown Prince."

".....!"

"See? If you go on a study abroad program alone, everyone gets their happy ending. What do you think the nobles will do? Eh? Will they say, 'Even if our heads fly off and our families are destroyed, we will follow His Highness the Crown Prince to the end'? What do you think?"

"Aaaah! Aaaaaah!!"

Finally grasping my intentions, the Crown Prince began to struggle desperately.

"You plague from another world! It's all because of you! Everything fell apart after you came! You took Ivansia's lady, and even my cute and lovely Lady Goldencup! It's all your fault! If it weren't for you—"

"Sweet dreams, Your Highness."

I pressed a point on the Crown Prince's body.

"When you wake up, the world will have changed."

And with that, the Crown Prince's world went dark.

---

"—Huh?!"

The Crown Prince sprang up.

Drenched in cold sweat, he swallowed his saliva.

"Was it, was it a dream? Phew..."

"Did you have a pleasant dream last night?"

"Aaaah!!"

Startled by my face, he jumped as if he had seen a horrifying monster. My delicate heart might just take offense at such a reaction.

"Wh-Where is this place!?"

"We're on the 29th floor, sir."

I beamed a smile.

"It was once a school genre stage, ruled by the [Holed-Up Head Librarian]. One of my vassals, Kim Yul, used to live here."

"Ha, ha?"

"Of course, such information is useless to you. The one and only Crown Prince of the Empire, who was destined to don the Emperor's crown. There's only one thing you need to remember: in this world, no one will treat you as a Crown Prince."

Knock, knock.

Someone knocked on the door from behind.

"Come in."

"Yes, I'm coming."

With a lively voice, Silvia entered. What greeted her was a tiny studio room. No, calling it a studio was too generous; it was more like a cramped goshiwon (a type of very small Korean apartment).

Silvia glanced around the room and frowned.

"Wow, it's cramped... My Lord, can that man really live in such a small space? I don't think it's possible."

"That's the reality he has to face now. Did you speak well with the goshiwon owner?"

"Ah, yes. When they saw the gold bars, their eyes lit up and they said they looked forward to our patronage. They seemed to mistake us for a mafia from overseas."

Good.

The 29th floor was currently operating as a school city. There were schools in Babylon, but a systematic public education system hadn't yet been established. Hence, this place, the 29th floor, which was frozen in time during Kim Yul's era, was used as an educational venue.

"Si-Silvia...?"

The Crown Prince, unaware of such circumstances, was simply dumbfounded by Silvia's appearance.

Silvia, not in her voluminous dress but in modern clothing, smiled sweetly.

"Yes, Your Highness. I'm Silvia Evanair."

"Oh! My Silvia! The nightingale bearing the name of Goldencup! You must have rushed here to rescue me from this demon's clutches...! I believed, no, I only believed in you. My delicate Goldencup!"

"Ugh, what's this? It's like reading through a diary filled with embarrassing memories."

Silvia made a disgusted face.

"Anyway, I've taken care of various documents while greeting the goshiwon owner. Starting next week, the Crown Prince can enter school. He'll become a blond prince of a transfer student."

"Good work."

"Yes, it's really just hard work... Though I'm not one to talk, but don't you think the bureaucrats of this stage are too corrupt? The administration is like a sponge, full of holes."

"Well, the almighty power of gold bars has just been proven."

"I wonder how much you bribed them with..."

As we casually chatted, the Crown Prince merely stared at us, lost for words.

"Si-Silvia? Why did you call me 'Crown' earlier? And... why didn't you recognize me?"

"Ah, I almost forgot."

Silvia rummaged through her bag and pulled out something. It was a card.

"This will be the only means to prove your identity from now on."

Silvia politely handed over a student ID card. On the newly made ID, a photo of the Crown Prince, barely keeping his eyes open, was printed in a square.

Below it, the following text was written:

+

[Student ID]

Name: Kim Hwang-Tae

Affiliation: Shinseo High School

+

".....Kim, Kim Hwang-Tae?"

"Yeah, that's your name from now on."

I flashed a bright smile.

"Hwang-Tae, you're a second-generation overseas Korean who has somehow returned to the country, but you were kicked out of your house and now live alone in this goshiwon. Naturally, you have no allowance and must find a job or do odd jobs to earn money. Got it?"

"Odd jobs? Odd... Odd jobs? What nonsense are you spouting!"

"Yes, our Hwang-Tae seems to have no clue about the situation, which is quite satisfying."

I gently patted Kim Hwang-Tae's head.

"If you're three months behind on your rent here, you're out. If you skip school and refuse to attend for more than a week, you're also out. For our Hwang-Tae, who has been pampered as a prince his whole life, this world might seem harsh. But, Hwang-Tae... that is the real world!"

"....."

"Hang in there! Be strong! You can do it!"

I clenched my fist.

"Although no one in this city will treat you like a Crown Prince! And no one cares where you rolled in from like a stray bone! Originally! The world! Has no interest in you!"

"....."

"Work! It might be hard to find a job with a student status, but that's just how it is...! Money is hard to earn...! Work and work, and with your effort and sweat, secure food for the day! If you can't, you'll starve... and, well, die... but that too is a natural law!"

"....."

"Hwang-Tae!"

I grabbed Kim Hwang-Tae's shoulders.

And asked him, looking into his soulless face.

"How many days have you gone without food?"

"What... what...?"

"Don't worry. After two days of fasting, you'll see the world differently! I'll be cheering for you from afar as you start your new life, Kim Hwang-Tae! Fighting!"

I left 30,000 won and turned to leave.

Silvia also bowed slightly to Kim Hwang-Tae.

"Goodbye, Your Highness. Honestly, if you had sought me out even once after I became indebted to our Lord, I might have been able to help you now. But, it can't be helped! I'll be cheering for you from afar too!"

We both swiftly exited the room.

As we walked down the gloomy staircase, Silvia spoke up.

"So how many years do you plan to let him stay before sending him back to the empire?"

"Send him back? He's going to live here forever. They've already designated the second prince as the successor, so what good would his return do other than get him purged? Leaving him here is an act of mercy. Mercy."

"You really are a devil, my Lord..."

A desperate scream echoed from beyond the goshiwon stairs.

That day, a blond prince of a transfer student arrived at Shinseo High School on the 29th floor.

According to later accounts, Kim Hwang-Tae, who had starved for four days straight, eventually began to assist with odd jobs for the goshiwon owner and embarked on his second school life.

Hang in there, Kim Hwang-Tae! You are the protagonist of this spin-off!

Chapter 371: Home Sweet Home (1)

---

Over three months had passed since my return to Babylon.

During those three months, I spent time with Raviel, established new diplomatic relations with the underground city civilization, was surprised by Raviel, witnessed Kim Hwang-Tae transfer to high school, played with Raviel again, and caught up on a multitude of backlogged tasks.

It was indeed a fruitful time, but after a hundred days, I suddenly lifted my head.

"It's time to climb the tower again."

Silence followed my declaration.

At the moment, I was lying on the sofa, flipping through a magazine. It was one that featured an interview with me. The magazine was filled with cheesy headlines like "What Does Kim Gong-Ja Think of Being a Hunter!?" and "Everything You Want to Know About the Hunter Industry! 100 Questions, 100 Answers!" Who would even read this?

After a pause, a response finally came.

"...? Why all of a sudden?"

It was the Black Dragon Witch.

Anastasia was seated on the opposite armchair, engrossed in the same magazine. Incidentally, she was also the cover model for this issue.

The magazine cover seemed like humanity's attempt at visualizing the concept of 'nobility,' but at this moment, Anastasia was the epitome of a lazy sunday evening vibe at home.

Dressed in a school gym uniform that seemed more suited for high school students, she was nonchalantly munching on squid legs.

Scenes like this made one want to ask, "Does Ukraine have brown gym uniforms?" or "Do Ukrainians also snack on squid legs?" It was tempting to tease her relentlessly.

But everything about Anastasia was perfect– her posture, her expression, and even the crunchy sound of her chewing the squid legs.

She was the Ultimate Korean Slacker Lv.99.

Anastasia's pose was so natural that I had no choice but to accept it as part of life's natural flow.

"No... Staying here any longer and I feel like I'll rot away. How should I put it? Moisture is seeping into my heart, making me feel like mold is going to grow in my brain."

My words made my friends look up one by one.

We were in the communal living room of our lodging.

In the evenings, when everyone returned from their day's work, they would naturally gather here in groups of three or five. As a result, the Countess, Viper- the Celestial Clan Master, and the Heretic Inquisitor all looked up at the same time, creating a harmonious moment.

"Mold? Moisture? I'm not sure what you're talking about. Liǎofàn, do you understand?"

"I doubt it. That guy's been spouting nonsense not just today, but for a while now."

"Ah, Silvia! Could we have another half plate of fries, please?"

By the way, my friends were wearing yellow, navy, and blue gym uniforms respectively.

I'm not exactly sure when made in Korea gym uniforms became the dress code for this communal lodging.

From what I can vaguely recall, I was the first to wander around the lodging in a black gym uniform. Anastasia, having seen me, commented, "Oh, that looks comfortable. What is that?" and then the tragedy began the very next day. Yes, it's best to bury this memory for the sake of my mental health.

"That's exactly it! Right there!"

I abruptly stood up and pointed accusingly at the Heretic

Inquisitor.

Just then, Silvia delivered the fries with a sour expression, and the Heretic Inquisitor cheerfully picked one up.

With ketchup smeared on his lips, the Heretic Inquisitor blinked in confusion.

"Me?"

"Not [me?], but [me?!] Bambolina, you're eating those potato fries with your bare hands! Wearing a gym uniform! And with ketchup smeared on your lips!"

"Aha, Master. Fries are traditionally eaten with bare hands. I hope you're not one of those heretical types who use a fork or chopsticks just because they don't want salt on their fingers!"

"I'm more on the chopsticks side, actually..."

"My goodness."

"Dear me."

"Are you insane?"

"I'm really disappointed in you, Kim Gong-Ja..."

In turn, the Heretic Inquisitor, Countess, Viper, and Black Dragon Witch looked at me with disdain, as if I were trash.

And just at that moment, Paladin passed through the living room with a towel around her neck.

"For the record, I'm in the camp that prefers socks with sandals."

Paladin nodded her head and continued on her way through the living room.

We watched his retreating figure in silence, looking like she was about to fetch water from the mountain spring.

"...Anyway, that's not the point!"

I quickly regained my composure.

"You all! You've rotted! Completely rotted! There used to be a more edge-of-the-knife vibe around here! How did you all become so terribly slack?"

"Rotted, you say? That's quite rude, my friend."

"If you're going to say such things, at least take off those triple-stripe slippers!"

"Eeeh, but they're comfortable."

Yes, Anastasia, seated on the armchair, was indeed wearing triple-stripe slippers with bare feet.

Not just Anastasia, but everyone here was dressed the same: school gym uniforms and triple-stripe slippers, a fashion terrorist combo only found in South Korea that had taken over the top echelons of the tower.

Could this also be due to my influence? Did they start copying me one by one after seeing how comfortably I moved around? Oh, God. No one ever asked for this kind of Hallyu wave.

"If I keep hanging around with you guys, my brain will start to rot too! You should be working, not lounging around! There must be tasks piling up, with subordinates dying off while you're here relaxing!"

"Well, we're not subordinates, are we."

"Right. We only work when we need to and leave the rest to our subordinates. Isn't that what we pay them for?"

"Relaxing occasionally is very important, Master!"

Wrong. These guys... their brains must've already been infected with mitochondrobacktertetracyinfluenza bacteria. There's no hope or dreams left.

"I'm going to climb the tower."

"Seriously?"

"Yes, seriously. I'm really going. I can't bear being with you any longer! If I stay cooped up here any longer, I might lose all interest in conquering the stages and end up a bum, so I'm going!"

My friends stared blankly at me.

"Hmm. Well... do as you wish. Live your life."

"Since all the urgent matters are dealt with, you're free to do as you please."

"Everything will flow according to your will, Master!"

"Man, these fries are fucking delicious. Hey, Gong-Ja's maid! What oil did you use for these? Let me get the recipe so I can cook for my kids too."

It seemed like only about 0.5 people were genuinely interested in what I had to say.

Are these really my friends? My comrades with whom I've entrusted my life? I doubted it for a moment. Then, the Paladin, who had left the living room earlier, returned.

Holding an electric toothbrush in one hand, she surveyed the room.

"By the way, I think socks are better with sandals."

Then she nodded and walked past the living room.

We silently watched her receding figure until the Countess threw her slipper with all her might at Paladin's head.

"I'm really going... See? I'm going. Really."

No one answered.

The fight between the Countess and Paladin began, but astonishingly, no one paid any attention to me.

I mulled over the feeling of being the neglected adult in the family as I weakly headed towards the next stage.

[You are being transported to the 80th floor.]

"---And that's how I ended up here. Ah, yes. As a hunter, or rather, now a Constellation, climbing the tower is a must. I suppose I should be called a Hunter-cum-Constellation? Anyway, one must ascend to higher places. See? As soon as I reached the 80th floor, even the air felt different."

"You..."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] looked at me with incredulity.

"Sorry, but have you ever been told you sound like an idiot?"

That was a bit harsh.

---

The administrator who welcomed me on the 80th floor was [The Staff of Time Immemorial].

The mage, with her ever-unwavering silver eyes, looked at me, especially with a very dopey gaze.

"What? I was wondering when you'd start climbing again. I thought maybe you wouldn't come at all, but you've timed it just right."

"Yes, I've finished everything I needed to do on the 1st floor... Huh?"

I suddenly noticed something different about [The Staff of Time Immemorial]. Her eyes hadn't changed, neither had her face or attire. It was her staff, the symbol of his identity.

Her trademark staff, as thin as a little finger but extremely long, was snapped in half.

"Why is your staff like that? Did you get into a fight with someone?"

"Get into a fight? Are you seriously asking me that?"

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] let out a sarcastic laugh.

"I lost in a fight with you. After the management of the Netherworld was handed over to you, I've been stuck as a broken staff."

"Ah, but you're still managing the heavenly floors, aren't you?"

"For now... for the time being, at least."

The mage sighed.

"If you fail to reach the 100th floor or give up halfway, I'll return to being a complete pillar. If you succeed in conquering the 100th floor, I'll be done for. It's frustrating, but right now, my role isn't to [guide] you but to [serve] you like a superior."

"I see."

I nodded.

"Then could you fetch me some vending machine barley tea?"

".....First of all, I get that you're trying to boss me around as soon as I say I'm in a position to serve you. I'll concede that point for argument's sake, but why, of all things, a vending machine barley tea?"

"Think about it, mage."

"Speak."

"Imagine your boss, of all things, asking you to fetch barley tea, and from a vending machine at that. Just that, nothing else. How would you feel while you insert the coins, press the button, and wait?"

"I'd feel just like I do now."

"See? You know exactly. What are you waiting for? Go fetch it."

"This son of a..."

Three minutes passed.

I slurped the barley tea the mage brought from the vending machine. The mix of barley powder and sugar created a chaotic taste, blurring the lines between what was barley and what was sugar.

"Mm. This is the taste. The Principal of Memorial Gourmet said this was the taste of memories. Maybe we could turn this into a spin-off series."

"You won't die a peaceful death..."

I was already incapable of dying.

Now, even more so.

"Did you enjoy the barley tea I went through so much trouble to get for you?"

"Yes. It's delicious."

"Then listen while you enjoy your honey. From the 71st to the 80th floor, it was the phase where you were established as a Constellation. And you've passed this course more perfectly than any other Constellation. Now, from the 81st to the 90th floor, it's time to build [Your Own Kingdom]."

I paused, straw in my mouth, and tilted my head.

"My own kingdom?"

"Yes. Also called a Star Domain or Sanctuary. Some call it a Sacred Domain or Dragon Kingdom."

The mage tapped the air with her broken staff.

A white cube appeared, displaying a familiar scene on its surface.

"That's the Great Library of All Knowledge."

"Right. The Great Library of All Knowledge was the Sanctuary of [The Holed-Up Head Librarian], or Hamusutra."

Interesting.

With this example, I got a sense of what was expected of me.

"[The Ruin-Harvesting Cow], Mutia's Sanctuary was a temple buried in the desert. [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth]... The Hisimet Cretsu you're currently wearing as a bracelet, his Sanctuary was a doll exhibition. Even hunters who haven't become Constellations are allowed to have their own space if they pass through the 90th floor."

"In essence."

I removed my lips from the straw.

"I'm about to have my own home."

"Yeah."

Thump.

The mage tapped the floor with his staff.

"A palace that is solely yours."

[You are being transferred to the 81st floor.]

White light enveloped my vision.

Chapter 372: Home Sweet Home (2)

---

Emerging through the long light, I didn't find my own kingdom waiting for me, unfortunately.

It was a world engulfed in darkness.

"Whoa, what's this... It's really dark here?"

Darkness was all there was.

Taking a cautious step forward, my ankle squelched into something, sinking down. It felt as if I had accidentally stepped into muddy water. The texture of the darkness was akin to a mass of mud.

"That's because nothing has been created here yet."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] spoke from behind me.

"This place is, so to speak, bare ground where not even the skeleton of a house has been erected. There's no built-in furniture, let alone a roof. Wailing Heaven, you've cleared stages and earned enough for land, but you haven't built a house yet."

"So, I've become a landowner but not a homeowner."

If you think about it, I had struggled from the 10th to the 80th floor just to buy a piece of land. When compared to a 100-floor life, acquiring land meant I had already achieved 80% of life's goals.

Hmm. It's uncomfortably realistic...

"Where can I find an architect and interior designer to hire?"

"Sorry, but you're the architect and the interior design company. You're no longer a hunter who passively accepts quests and performs tasks. Well, if you still want to frame it as a quest..."

The mage engraved letters in the air with her staff.

"This should do."

Wherever the tip of the staff passed, white letters emerged.

+

[Build Your Own Kingdom]

Constellation: The Heaven that Gathers Wails

Difficulty: Undecided

Objective: Create a sanctuary.

+

I nodded.

"Sounds simple enough."

"Be a pillar. Save the world. Help humanity. The most difficult tasks in the world are always expressed in a single sentence. So, I'll just watch from the side as you diligently build your palace, commenting on it along the way."

The mage sighed softly.

"There's one problem, though."

"Life is nothing but a series of problems."

"Right, but this problem needs immediate resolution. You usually leave things tidy before moving on... But it seems there's one bond you haven't properly concluded."

A bond not tied off? An unfinished human relationship?

Did I still have such a thing? After I danced the Cossack dance for Yoo Soo-Ha, I thought my relationships were so clean that they were practically bleached.

"Haha. You must be mistaken, I've settled all my affairs."

"In fact, I've been waiting for you to come up. [That thing] has been breaking in every day, tormenting me to no end, and I can't stand it any longer."

Jjeojeojeojeok-

An ominous crackling noise came from somewhere. Turning my head, I saw a crack in the distant upper area. To call it the sky, the ceiling, or simply darkness was unclear, but a fissure had opened.

"Congratulations, Wailing Heaven."

The mage stepped back three steps from me as if avoiding something. He was wearing an ominous smile.

"What's that supposed to..."

"In the Constellation system, there's a stalker that only follows the popular ones. You've attracted the attention of many Constellations, so unfortunately, it seems the stalker has heard about you too. I can't help you, but good luck."

Chwaah!

The crack widened, and pus flowed down. It was dark here, but the other side of the curtain was just as dark. However, the being that fell to the ground, covered in pus, was not black.

[Warning.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer harbors hostility towards you.]

The being had hair as silver as platinum.

"Are you [The Heaven that Gathers Wails]?"

"....."

The man with silver hair spoke in a voice familiar to me, but that was the only familiar thing. The temperature of his gaze looking at me was entirely different from that of my servant, who had reclaimed the name Kim Yul.

More than anything...

The man in front of me was still tying his hair with a yellow rubber band.

“...Leafanta Aegim.”

Constellation Killer slowly tilted his head.

His eyes, as fresh as a newly born star, looked this way.

"Do you know me?"

Yeah.

You were the one left.

"I know you very well."

As the mage said, there was indeed one cause and effect that

I had left untied.

The Constellation Killer is made up of multiple slaughter dolls.

I once snatched the existence named Kim Yul from the Constellation Killer. To be more precise, I succeeded in restoring him.

The Constellation Killer originally gained strength by abandoning memories. He had discarded his past as Kim Yul. However, through trauma, I was able to forcibly see his past, and by peeking into the past this way, I restored Kim Yul.

Nevertheless, I merely created a new being with memories identical to [Kim Yul].

Still, a slaughter doll called Constellation Killer, suffering from memory loss, roamed the world.

Thanks to his S-grade skill.

[Puppeteer's Parade]

Rank: S

Effect: There once lived an old puppeteer in a world. The puppeteer feared being loved by someone. But he was not strong enough to endure eternal solitude.

"Let's create another me." The puppeteer thought. "Let the other me be loved. Let it live. With people, among people. And if it gets hurt--- let's throw it away." The puppeteer whispered. "Erase it forever."

Countless puppets lived.

Countless puppets were discarded.

This skill is a sorcery for the weak. The right to choose memories to keep and discard. You can create 13 puppets with the same appearance and abilities as you. When a puppet dies, another wakes up. Broken puppets can be repaired.

Granting you a replicated immortality. An assembled eternity.

*However, memories are not shared between puppets.

+

13 puppets.

A being that slaughters Constellations day by day, losing memories continuously, and equalling the prowess of the Sword Saint.

I created the 14th puppet, infused it with Kim Yul's memories, and named it Kim Yul, not Constellation Killer or Leafanta Aegim.

In other words, the 13 puppets I couldn't take in were still thriving somewhere.

"I'm sorry. I do not remember you."

And thus, he arrived here.

To confront me, whose reputation as a Constellation had soared.

"If you can tell me when we met, I could look up the record."

Constellation Killer pulled out a worn notebook from his pocket. I knew what that shabby item was.

A diary. An item Constellation Killer carries to overcome the absolute weakness that the puppets can't share memories.

Even though memories are disconnected, the sentences written in the notebook are shared verbatim with other diaries.

"No need."

I shook my head.

"We have definitely met. We shared time together. However... you won't find any record of me in that diary you're holding."

"Why wouldn't there be?"

"Because I met you in the past before you obtained that diary. A time you can never return to or retrieve."

"I see. So you are a master of time."

The Constellation Killer was calm. Despite my claim to have seen his past, he showed no curiosity at all.

"A troublesome opponent. I thank you for the clue about your ability."

"I know far more about you than you do about yourself."

"Everyone in this world does. It's not a notable personal detail."

The Constellation Killer wrote something in the diary.

I read the direction of the moving pen, backtracked, and constructed the sentences written in the notebook in my mind.

+

The Heaven that Gathers Wails.

Possessor of a time skill.

Able to know the opponent's past.

Presumed to have had contact with me in the past.

+

Reconstructing the letters was incredibly easy, and for good reason.

".....It's in Hangul*."

*Hangul is the Korean Alphabet system.

"Hmm? I don't understand what you mean."

The Constellation Killer's expression remained unchanged. Watching him, my heart clenched. He was using these letters without even knowing what they were.

To the Constellation Killer, these characters were likely [somehow naturally learned letters]. He used them when writing sentences that others shouldn't understand, when using his diary, like a personal cipher.

He was a refugee who had lost his homeland. Because he had forgotten the language, he was aphasic. Because he had discarded his own existence, he was nonexistent.

Looking silently at the one who had become aphasic and nonexistent through exile, my heart was heavy.

Although he used the same yellow rubber band and the same letters from our shared homeland, unlike when I saw Anastasia and others in gym clothes— my heart was filled with turmoil.

"I have been pursuing you for 31 days."

The Constellation Killer slammed the diary shut.

The dull sound interrupted my thoughts.

"Since 31 days ago?"

"Yes, but every time I attempted to invade the World of the Lone Child, an old swordsman who blocked my path was there. An old man wearing a black suit."

The Constellation Killer mumbled to the puzzled me.

"The old man introduced himself as Sword Saint."

My eyes widened.

So that was it. Sword Saint Marcus had been absent, fighting the Constellation Killer without my knowledge!

During my 100 days in Babylon, I never met Sword Saint Marcus. Even my companions were unaware of the Sword Saint's whereabouts. I had assumed he might have gone on a solitary training journey, but who would have thought he was fending off the Constellation Killer's invasion!

『I wish to become your guardian.』

『As your guardian, I wish to protect your life and forever guard the humanity of those around you.』

Sword Saint Marcus's words about wanting to be my guardian were no empty promises.

He had become a palisade to protect us, a wall of the World of the Lone Child, battling the invader unbeknownst to us.

My heart, which had been troubled at the sight of Constellation Killer, was filled with a sense of pride.

"I attempted to invade through different routes numerous times, but each time, the old man was one step ahead, blocking me. He likely had a skill to sense my movements, or a skill to detect outsiders trying to invade that world."

The Constellation Killer continued.

"Only now, after you left the World of the Lone Child, have I successfully pursued you."

"That's good news."

I grinned.

"Because it means you ultimately couldn't defeat Sword Saint Marcus. And I am stronger than him. Constellation Killer, no matter what you try, you can't defeat me."

"A sound conclusion."

Constellation Killer responded indifferently to my blatant provocation.

"Sword Saint said that even if he were to lose, it would be certain that I would ultimately succumb to you. After receiving that information, I assessed your threat level as the highest. As you said, with my current capabilities alone, I cannot defeat you [no matter what I try]."

That moment.

"Therefore, I have concluded that I must [use every means possible]."

Jjeojjeok! Jjeojjeok, jjeoeok!

The cracks already in the sky widened further. From the gaps, one, two, three, something kept falling.

And then.

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

I witnessed that all of them were flaunting silver hair just like the first.

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

[The Constellation Killer has appeared on the 81st floor.]

I unconsciously pressed my lips together.

"....."

A total of 13.

Just one would be enough to wipe out most Constellations, and a match for Sword Saint Marcus. The slaughter dolls, all thirteen with cascading silver hair, stood up.

Thirteen pairs of eyes simultaneously looked this way.

“The Heaven that Gathers Wails.”

“.....Ah.”

“I designate you as the highest level o f threat. From now on, I will utilize my full power to annihilate you.”

I couldn't help but burst into laughter.

"Hamusutra would pass out from happiness if he saw this scene!"

The moment I grasped the hilt of the Holy Sword, all thirteen Constellation Killers charged at me simultaneously.

Chapter 373: Blue Blood (1)

---

The first flower to bloom in spring was blue.

Spring had arrived in the world where the Constellation Killer resided.

-.....

The Constellation Killer gazed up at the flower that resembled his own pupils.

In his original homeland, the first flowers to bloom were yellow, or perhaps pink, but he had forgotten the spring of his homeland. To Leafanta Aegim, spring was now merely blue.

-.....If one wishes to not become a Constellation, what must be done?

The Constellation Killer gently touched the flower petal with his pale fingertips.

-The stars should no longer dictate the lives of people. To ordinary humans, Constellations are far too mighty. Merely by existing, Constellations lead people to make decisions about their lives. To flee from their responsibilities.....

As he continued speaking, the Constellation Killer suddenly stopped.

It wasn't because he doubted his own logic. There was a very tangible reason. Enchanted by the scent of the flower, a bee, buzzing, suddenly landed on the nail of the Constellation Killer.

-.....

For a long while, the Constellation Killer observed the wings of the bee. Then, he slowly stroked the bee.

Ouch!

The bee perceived the touch of a human as an attack.

Immediately, it regurgitated its insides and stung the finger of the Constellation Killer.

The poison of a bee, which holds no concept of kindness in this world, was venomous. The toxin, nurtured within the insect's body for its entire life, seeped well into the flesh of Leafanta Aegim.

That was all there was to it. Having lost its sole purpose of existence, the bee soon fell to the ground, trembling.

Unaware until it was used, the poison was only capable of bringing death upon itself.

-.....

The Constellation Killer could have easily neutralized the insect's venom using his aura.

But he chose not to.

Merely observing with his blue eyes, the swelling caused by the sting of a mere mortal insect.

-Indeed.

He had realized something.

-I should have a child.

The Constellation Killer turned his head.

He was standing in the garden of a noble house.

Chosen by the [Goddess of Protection], Leafanta Aegim, who became the emperor above all, renounced the throne and wandered through various worlds.

In this world, which he happened to visit by chance, Leafanta Aegim had stayed longer than expected. Why? Perhaps it was because he had taken a liking to this garden.

A nameless maid was working in the garden, tirelessly shoveling the earth. It wasn't until the Constellation Killer approached her that she noticed his presence and looked up.

-Is there something you need?

The maid's pupils were red.

-Is there anything I can assist you with, noble sir?

The noble house where the maid worked was indebted to the Constellation Killer. One of the children held captive by the Constellations was a lady of this noble house. The family treated the Constellation Killer as a noble, and the maid, too, showed him all due respect.

But that wasn't the only reason.

-I know you steal glances at me whenever you find the time.

-.....

The maid flinched.

With a cautious look, she gauged the Constellation Killer's mood. However, there was no sign of anger or reprimand from him. Relieved, the maid shrugged her shoulders with a sigh, "Phew."

-Yes, I did sneak a peek. Frankly, aren't you a bit too handsome?

-Is my face to your liking?

-If a passerby turns their head unwittingly at the sight of a work of art, it's not the fault of the passerby, but the person who placed the artwork in the middle of the road.

The maid seemed adamant about asserting her innocence. However, that wasn't what concerned the Constellation Killer.

-I desire to spend a night with you.

Thud.

The maid, who had been actively chatting, suddenly froze.

---Eh?

-Of course, only if you consent.

-Eh? Ah. Uhm...?

The maid could not comprehend the situation.

-Wait a moment, noble sir. Do you have feelings for me?
Gasp. Don't tell me, your occasional strolls through the garden were all strategies to approach me...!?

-No. I have no such feelings.

-.....

The maid was bewildered by the situation.

-Then, why are you propositioning me now...?

-I have long pondered how to escape the path of becoming a
Constellation. Or rather, how to preserve my humanity.
However, I am one who loses memories. Even if I wish to remain human, I cannot.

The maid still could not grasp the situation, nor could she understand the Constellation Killer's words, and Leafanta Aegim did not place much importance on whether the other party understood him.

In short, he continued regardless.

-But perhaps things might change if I have a child. Proof that I was human. A clear evidence of being human.

-Oh...

The maid hesitantly spoke up.

-Um, I'm not sure if I understood correctly, but in any case, are you saying you want to spend a night with me to leave a proof that you've lived?

-That's correct.

-.....

The maid seemed to finally grasp the situation.

In essence, the man before her was a madman with a pretty face.

-Wait a moment... Let me think about this...

-Do as you see fit.

The maid put down her shovel and crossed her arms.

-...Anyway, you're a hero among heroes who saved this country. Hmmm. To inherit the lineage of such a person could turn my life around. Considering the way you speak, you don't seem particularly interested in the child, so this largely depends on me... But perhaps it's not a bad gamble to consider...

The maid mumbled to herself endlessly.

Peeking sideways, she looked at the Constellation Killer seriously from head to toe. Then, her gaze momentarily rested on the Constellation Killer's hand, noticing the swollen finger from the bee sting.

-You've been stung. Doesn't it hurt?

-No, it does hurt.

-Then why don't you seem bothered?

-Because it doesn't bother me.

The maid stroked her chin, seemingly understanding something, and muttered, "Indeed..."

-You are alone.

What did that mean?

Before the Constellation Killer could comprehend, the maid clicked her tongue shortly.

-All right, noble sir. I will sleep with you.

The maid's red eyes looked up at the Constellation Killer.

-But there's a condition.

-What is it?

-Stay with me until the child starts to walk. Protect me and the child. And when the child is born, announce to the world that it's your offspring. If you find these conditions difficult, I will never...

-Accepted.

...Um, I'm not sure if it's my place to say, but didn't you agree too easily? I thought I was being quite demanding.

-It's an easy condition.

The maid looked at the Constellation Killer with mixed feelings, then sighed.

-Alright, you madman. Just wait until I finish my work for today. The children are suffering from spring fever, so I need to take care of them meticulously.

-As you wish.

-Madmen can be heroes too...

Shaking her head in disbelief, the maid picked up her shovel again. Thud. Thump. As she resumed moving the pile of soil in a corner of the garden, the Constellation Killer suddenly spoke up.

-I still don't know your name. What is it?

-Ivansia.

The maid turned and answered.

-A commoner, so just the last name.

-Ivansia. That's my name. Long ago.

Red pupils reflected in the blue flowers.

A total of 13 slaughtering dolls charged at me all at once.

I was stronger than the Constellation Killer. Undoubtedly stronger. However, it was uncertain whether my strength would remain effective when the Constellation Killer multiplied into 13. To put it more bluntly, I was terrified.

Utterly terrified!

Demonic Heavenly God Art.

The First Form.

Sword of Starving Death.

It's customary for a warrior to unleash their most confident strike first when they're scared. I did just that. I drew my full-power sword and lunged at the slaughtering dolls.

"How about this!"

"As expected, you're strong."

Swoosh—

A spray of blood erupted. A slaughtering doll that took a direct hit from my sword lost an arm.

Considering that I had managed to sever the arm of 'that' Constellation Killer with a single slash, I undoubtedly demonstrated tremendous martial prowess, but what did my objective assessment of strength matter? It was irrelevant. I was in the midst of battle, and only the outcome mattered in battle.

The enemy numbered 13, and naturally, all of them had both arms.

In other words, I had only managed to reduce the enemy's fighting power by  $\frac{1}{26}$ .

"The fact that you would be more powerful was..."

"Already anticipated."

A slaughtering doll that lost its right arm, along with another doll, attacked me from both sides. Although I managed to slice off a leg and an arm from each with a sword wind, damn it, it was all in vain.

The Constellation Killer had no intention of blocking my attacks from the start!

Two dolls grabbed my right and left arms. Panicked, I shouted.

"What kind of madness is this! Only Hamusutra would be happy with this kind of treatment!"

I drew upon all the aura in my body, attempting to shake off the two Constellation Killer dolls. I managed to shake off one, but as if waiting for this moment, another slaughtering doll rushed in and grabbed my arm tightly.

"Wait, just a moment...."

Meanwhile, the remaining slaughtering dolls were charging their swords with aura. Nine dolls, to be precise. Despite having dolls identical to them clinging to my body, they aimed their swords at me without any hesitation.

I felt a chill down my spine.

"You can't mean, a suicide attack!?"

"Abandon the memories of the past 30 days."

A flash of light engulfed me.

Boom-----ahhh...ahhhhh.....

What was initially an unbearable explosion quickly turned into a ringing in my ears. My vision whitened.

Somehow, by smearing my body with a defensive barrier made almost entirely of aura, I managed to survive the Constellation Killer's attack at point-blank range without dying. My body was relatively intact.

However, as soon as I regained my hearing and sight, the voice of a second slaughtering doll coldly echoed.

"Abandon the memories of the past 30 days."

Flash...

My vision flickered.

At first, there was no pain. I had withstood that strike. But the very next moment, whoosh! The blood vessels throughout my body simultaneously screamed in agony.

To block that strike, my blood vessels had been burned to the extent that my aura was depleted. Drastically.

"This is..."

Blood reeked from the gums around my teeth.

"Fuck...!"

"Abandon the memories of the past 30 days."

The third doll spoke.

The Constellation Killer's 30 days struck me once again.

"-----!!"

Excruciating pain surged throughout my body. Since becoming a Constellation and rising to the rank of an absolute overlord in the World of the Lone Child, I had never experienced such a complete depletion of aura.

I felt dizzy. I struggled to breathe.

Even as my heart screamed, I barely managed to maintain my existence.

The two slaughtering dolls that had been holding my arms were swept away by the recent strikes. I had withstood the attacks, but the dolls had not.

Unfortunately, it wasn't just the dolls that couldn't withstand the Constellation Killer's triple strike.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth vanishes.]

Madness.

I almost coughed up a lump of blood. Vanish. To vanish! Vanish, for heaven's sake!

Hisimet Cretsu was a top-tier Constellation. Although it had been severely weakened due to entanglements with me, it wasn't the type to be beaten up anywhere.

Yet, it died from the blasts the Constellation Killer just fired.

And it didn't end there.

"Abandon the memories of the past 30 days."

The fourth strike.

[A Music Box Just for You cries out in deep wounds.]

[Goddess of Protection screams for the hero not to lose consciousness.]

No, this is insane.

Truly, madly, deeply insane.

Chapter 374: Blue Blood (2)

---

For thirteen full days, the thirteen slaughter dolls honed their blades, all for the purpose of capturing me alone. The Constellation Killer, a name that evoked fear among the constellations, had marked me as an unmistakably more powerful being and had been preparing to hunt me down.

"I'll abandon the memories of the last thirty days."

And this was the result.

"Argh, ugh... Keuh, ah...!"

Ultimately, I vomited blood. It was the price for dispersing my aura to protect the fox and Hwiya. Thanks to that, both the fox and Hwiya were safe. However, the aura that once flowed nobly in my veins had dried up, and the aura that filled my heart was also depleted.

'I'm going to die. This is it.'

I fell to my knees.

'No, let's die.'

Blood kept flowing from my mouth.

'Let's die like this and return to a day ago. Knowing what kind of strategy the enemy will use next time, I can respond. Let's die. Dying is the only way to survive.'

Even amidst the excruciating pain that wracked my head, I was searching for the only path to survival, or rather, the path to death.

'Anyway, I don't have the aura to block the next strike. Let's not block it. Leave it. I'm going to die!'

Coughing up a clot of blood,

I waited for the sixth attack to strike me down. Little did I know that a hunter of the Constellation Killer's caliber would regard himself as the weaker party and me as the stronger, attacking me with full force, but this would only be this time. I was caught off guard this time. Next time, in the next battle, I would definitely...

"Cough! Keuh, huh... ugh...?"

Why, though?

"What are you doing...?"

The next attack didn't come.

"Hurry up and kill me..."

Straining, I lifted my head.

A pair of fresh green eyes,

And more eyes.

Nine pairs of blue eyes surrounded me, looking down from all sides.

"I won't kill you."

"What...?"

What does that mean?

"I won't kill you, The Heaven that Gathers Wails."

Five of the nine slaughter dolls approached. My right arm. My left arm. My right leg. My left leg. Each limb was grabbed, and even the ki point on my nape was pressed. My entire body was literally sealed by the dolls.

"I've researched a lot about you."

As the ki point was pressed, I couldn't even move my mouth freely. Breathing was difficult. No, it was made so that I could barely breathe by blocking my ki point.

"Many constellations were interested in you. I went to each of them, trying to learn what they knew about you. Only after annihilating nine constellations did a clear picture of you emerge."

Looking back, it wasn't just about deploying all thirteen to capture me; it seemed he had also exterminated nine constellations to gather information. This madman.

"You're strong, and you've grown too fast."

"Keuh, hrmph..."

"To think of it as growth within a limited time, it's abnormally fast. It could mean you have tremendous talent, but I came up with a more logical hypothesis. It's that [time is not limited for you]."

Damn it.

I remembered the conversation I had with the Constellation Killer before the fight began.

『We have definitely met before.』

『I see. So you are a master of time.』

At that time, the Constellation Killer had reacted quite blandly.

I thought it was because of his inherently calm nature, but could it be, that before the fight even started, he had speculated that I possessed time-manipulating abilities?

Was his bland reaction because he had already anticipated it?

"Of course, I couldn't figure out how you were manipulating time. There were too many possibilities, but regardless of the method, it was clear that [time] was your resource and strength."

Thinking about it,

The Constellation Killer was originally a hunter.

He always made sure to know what kind of entity he was dealing with, its strengths, weaknesses, and only then would he engage in battle.

Long ago, when I first encountered the Constellation Killer on the 50th floor, didn't he say this while hunting monsters?

『To kill [those who split and die], one must precisely [split them in half].』

『The true body of the Screamer lies in its scream, kill it by burying it in sound." 』

A meticulous strategist who studied the enemy's weaknesses.

That was the Constellation Killer.

And this time, he had thoroughly studied me before making his move.

"Therefore, I won't kill you, The Heaven that Gathers Wails. I'll merely seal your time away."

Seal.

"How would you..."

"It's simple. I'll cause a rift between this space-time and the outside world. Then, I'll encase you in ice and leave you here. This isn't ordinary ice, but ice that will never melt."

"You will be forever trapped in this place where time has come to a halt. I will make sure of it."

Damn it.

"To trap a person... in eternal torment... you say it so casually...!"

"I don't understand what you mean."

The Constellation Killer tilted his head slightly as he drew a dagger from within his cloak.

Thrust!

A cold sensation sliced through my chest and pierced my heart.

[‘The Claw Stained in the Dawn - Replica’ begins to seal you.]

The dagger the Constellation Killer had plunged into my heart was made of ice. Having wandered through worlds for countless years, he must have acquired all sorts of curious items. It seemed this ice dagger was one such item in the Constellation Killer's collection, and as soon as it penetrated my chest, it triggered an extraordinary effect.

[Warning. Once the seal is complete, only conscious thought will be possible.]

[Your world will soon be sealed.]

[Time remaining: 61 seconds.]

Crack, crackle, snap.

From the point of impact, ice formed. It started with my chest, then spread to my collarbone and shoulders, expanding around my chest like the blossoming of a blue flower bud.

"You're too late even if you try to send a message to your comrades now, asking for reinforcements."

Sensations faded away.

"In 60 seconds, no one will be able to reach this place in time to rescue you. And after a minute, this stage will be isolated. I will make it so."

As I became numb, I realized that I had felt this sensation, this chill, this coldness somewhere before.

"Winter..."

"What did you say?"

"The martial realm... The sealing technique used on 'The Golden Dragon Dwelling in the Great Lake'... Is this it?"

The Constellation Killer slightly tilted his head.

"That's right. I'm surprised you knew."

"....."

"When I was searching for a way to defeat you, I came across this item. I used several items to seal the 'Golden Dragon,' and the records clearly state that this item was also used."

How could I forget? This sensation. This chill. This coldness.

It was none other than the ice and snow that had forever trapped the world of my master.

'The Golden Dragon Dwelling in the Great Lake' was originally the ruler of my master's world. The dragon had an empathetic sword embedded in its chest, eternally unable to die, merely decaying. It was the Constellation Killer's doing.

Now I knew that not only the empathetic sword but also the item currently impaled in my heart had been used by the Constellation Killer to seal the dragon.

So,

The winter that killed my master's world was now trying to kill me.

[Time remaining: 21 seconds.]

If I had the strength to clench my teeth, the grinding noise would have resonated throughout the space.

[Time remaining: 20 seconds.]

Yes, Constellation Killer.

I acknowledge it.

You are a fearsome hunter. Now I truly understand why the Sword Emperor couldn't kill you, how you managed to draw with the Sword Emperor.

The Constellation Killer, who went all out deploying thirteen bodies, is undoubtedly on par with the Sword Emperor. You're comparable even to the only one who reached the 99th floor.

[Time remaining: 19 seconds.]

And so, you have led me to defeat. Not just a simple death, but a true defeat in every sense. Soon, I will be frozen in time, and the 81st floor stage will be isolated, becoming a deserted island unreachable by my comrades.

Yes.

If I had been a lone being.

[Time remaining: 18 seconds.]

If I had been a solitary existence like you.

[Time remaining: 17 seconds.]

Raviel.

[The Heaven that Gathers Wails sends a message to Silver Lily Duchess.]

I'm sorry.

[The Heaven that Gathers Wails asks Silver Lily Duches to bring about his death.]

Now, please die.

".....?"

The Constellation Killer looked at me once more, tilting his head in confusion.

"I can't comprehend."

Ice had now covered my entire body. It was cold. My whole body was freezing. Only my face, specifically my eyes and mouth, remained unfrozen by the ice. The Constellation Killer watched the last bits of my exposed skin being enveloped by ice.

"Why are you smiling?"

"Ah..."

Is that so? Am I smiling?

Ice had crept up to the very edge of my mouth, and I hadn't even noticed, but surely, my lips were curved in a smile. Not a mocking one, but a genuinely happy smile.

"Can you imagine..."

"What?"

"Someone who can die upon being asked— within 10 seconds."

My left eye was covered in ice.

"Do you have such a person?"

My right eye was sealed by ice.

"You don't."

My nose.

"Despite having the chance, throughout centuries, you chose to remain alone... Always."

Finally.

"That's why you lost to me Constellation Killer."

My lips.

[Time remaining.]

[5 seconds.]

My heart.

[4 seconds.]

Just before being completely frozen.

[A Certain Returner's Love (EX) has been activated.]

[3 seconds.]

My breath stopped.

[You share a timeline with the other party.]

[The timeline ends.]

[2 seconds.]

Death closed my eyes before the winter could engulf me.

[You have died.]

[1 second.]

In my mind, two voices overlapped.

[Seal complete. You have been sealed—]

[You will return 24 hours back to the past.]

.

.

.

.

.

.

.

.

.

.

.

Once again, I opened my eyes.

"What should we eat today to get a good reputation for our meal?"

"Well, personally, I'm in the mood for some fish and chips after a long time."

"Ahaha, that's an unexpectedly interesting choice!"

It was a place all too familiar to me.

The communal living quarters.

A space where my comrades, friends, and family gather when they wish, chat when they desire, and eat what they crave, there I was, seated on the sofa, awakening once more.

"....."

I had returned to 24 hours prior.

"What do you think, Master?"

The Heretic Inquisitor, seated across me on another sofa, turned to look my way.

"Fish and chips might be a bit too... Oh? Master, your expression seems unusual."

"Huh?"

Following the Heretic Inquisitor's words, the Black Dragon Witch, Countess, Viper, and Paladin, all who shared and promised to continue sharing their time with me, were gazing at me.

"That is indeed an odd expression."

"Indeed. It's as if you're a tuna who realized too late that it bit into a plastic bag instead of prey."

"Hey, what kind of expression is that...?"

"Nisha, this is all because you suggested such a peculiar dish as fish and chips. I firmly believe it would be better to just have fries separately."

"Ah, fries sound good. Let's go with fries. It's been quite a while. There were days when I used to survive on burgers for all three meals."

"Hmm. That's a story from a very long time ago!"

I smiled.

"Ahaha...."

Really.

It doesn't feel like I'm going to lose.

"Bambolina."

"Yes, Master?"

"Could you bring me an alarm clock, please?"

The Heretic Inquisitor pulled out a smartphone and activated the alarm clock app. Handing the phone over to me, the Heretic Inquisitor tilted his head in confusion.

"I shall, but why do you suddenly need an alarm?"

"Um, not exactly an alarm but I need a stopwatch... Let's see."

I pressed the timer.

The clock, previously displaying 00:00:00, immediately started racing.

I nodded with a smile.

"Yes, that should do it. Now, let's see how long it takes."

"...? I don't understand what's happening, but if Master needs it, please, feel free to use it!"

"Thank you."

I leaned back into the sofa.

My friends looked at me as if I was odd, but since I wasn't typically any less odd on other days, they soon returned to their chit-chat. The night snack was decided a day early to be fries. Viper, along with Silvia, headed to the kitchen to fry some potatoes.

One minute.

A comfortable time passed.

Three minutes.

Paladin and the Countess started a verbal spat that was more like a display of affection.

Six minutes.

The Black Dragon Witch slapped the back of their heads with a slipper, telling them to stop, despite wearing sportswear and slippers – in fact, the Black Dragon Witch was missing one slipper.

Seven minutes.

Eight minutes.

Nine minutes.

And when the phone screen displayed 00:09:21----

"Th-this is not allowed here!"

The outside became noisy.

One of the Four Demon Lords who was on guard duty outside the quarters raised his voice urgently. Thud, thud. The sound of more than one person's footsteps, no, the footsteps of dozens, traveled through the corridor to this living room.

The Black Dragon Witch and the Heretic Inquisitor immediately stood up. Despite being in sportswear and slippers, with the Black Dragon Witch even missing one slipper, both wore expressions full of vigilance. They stared down the corridor beyond the living room door, from where the approaching footsteps came.

"This is a place where the top brass of our tower gather. It would be troubling if you were to behave like this..."

"Shut up. You're noisy."

Boom!

The living room door was blown off its hinges.

Thinking it was an attacker, my friends were about to rush in, but they froze when they saw the person who appeared where the door had been. They stared at the intruder, eyes wide with shock.

"Hmm."

But the intruder didn't care about the gazes of the homeowners at all. Leaving behind dozens of knights, the intruder slowly turned their head, scanning the living room.

Our eyes met.

The moment our gazes locked, I couldn't help but give a bitter smile.

"It took 9 minutes and 43 seconds, Raviel."

"You took 13 minutes and 27 seconds. It's proven that I'm considerably faster than you, Gong-Ja."

Raviel smiled.

Her red eyes slightly narrowed.

"So, which son of a bitch do we have to beat up?"

---

Chapter 375: Blue Blood (3)

---

"Hold on. What in the world is going on?"

Black Dragon Witch asked in confusion. Raviel's visit had already stirred up the lodging.

For the friends who were enjoying a peaceful evening after work, it was like a bolt out of the blue.

"Did something big happen in the empire? Something like a rebellion or a surprise attack. Is that why you're here all of a sudden...."

"Both a rebellion and a surprise attack occurred, on top of which there was also poisoning, Black Dragon Master."

"What!? Really!?"

"And fortunately, all three issues have been resolved recently. I'm here for a different matter now."

Raviel sat down on the sofa naturally and looked at me.

As if to say, explain yourself.

Although she didn't show it outwardly, I could tell from the sound of her heart and her breathing that Raviel was quite unsettled.

"Even if you say it's for a different matter, you probably don't know the details either. But the one who wants to ask 'what in the world is going on' is me. Gong-Ja, I wonder why you made [that request] when you would hesitate to lose your life even once more if mine were to be taken a thousand times. I can't help but be curious."

Before long, not only Raviel but all my colleagues were looking at me. Raviel demanded an explanation, and my colleagues wanted one.

"Hmm."

I took a deep breath.

The strategy meeting had begun.

"Yes, Raviel... If it was a matter that could be resolved by me fading away a thousand times, I would never have asked such a favor from you."

"Then..."

"I would have never been able to meet you again."

The gazes of those sitting in the common living area pricked my face.

"24 hours from now, I was on the verge of being sealed away permanently."

Silence fell.

The speed of people's reactions varied. Of course, Raviel was the first to understand. Holding her fan, she leaned on her chin and murmured, "....so it was that kind of thing."

"Hmm."

Surprisingly, or perhaps not, the next person to grasp the meaning of my words was Paladin, Patricia.

Patricia crossed her arms and looked sharply in this direction.

"Indeed. An enemy has appeared wielding the most effective tactic against Gong-Ja. Does '24 hours later' mean you've just returned from a day's regression?"

"Yes."

"If someone can guess your abilities to some extent and if they're powerful and formidable enough, it's an inevitable obstacle you'd eventually face. Don't worry, Gong-Ja."

As Patricia and I conversed, the other colleagues began to guess the situation after a delay. The Countess nodded with an "aha," and the Black Dragon Witch sighed, "Ah..."

Having revealed to the gathered colleagues that I could regress, they quickly grasped the situation. Only Viper looked around blankly.

"Hey, what? What are you talking about? Why are you all making faces as if you understand? I don't get it at all."

"It's simple, Liǎofàn. Gong-Ja cannot be killed, and the more he dies, the stronger he becomes. So, the only strategy is to seal him away, regardless of the means."

Patricia explained as if it were nothing.

"Isolate him so no one can help him, seal him so he can't take his own life, and paralyze him for an eternity."

"Ah... Oh. Yeah. I get it, but how did you grasp the situation so quickly after hearing about Gong-Ja?"

"Well, it's because that strategy was included in the plans I had devised to eliminate Gong-Ja. It's a tactic I personally concocted, so how could I not know?"

"Uh... ..Eh? What?"

"Never mind. It's become irrelevant now."

Patricia shook her head once and looked at me.

"So, Gong-Ja. Who is it? Who tried to seal you away? Sealing you is easier said than done and extremely difficult to achieve. Is there such a formidable enemy?"

I nodded.

"Yeah. It's a person known as the Constellation Killer."

The explanation of who the Constellation Killer was went on for some time.

"....."

"....."

Throughout my explanation, my colleagues' expressions grew serious. Even the worst fashion combination of gym clothes and three-striped slippers couldn't hide their seriousness, well, not entirely anyway.

Because my removal would mean the collapse of the entire World of the Lone Child.

It might sound arrogant, but realistically, my existence is far too important for the World of the Lone Child. I'm too central to everything.

First, the 5 great guilds have settled their past grievances and cooperated with me at their center.

Second, the Aegim Empire worships the [Goddess of Protection] as a deity, and the [Goddess of Protection] calls me the Hero and follows me. Thanks to this authority, I can interfere in the Aegim Empire.

Third, it's the same with Raviel's empire. In fact, thanks to the political marriage between Raviel and me, both worlds are communicating smoothly, aren't they?

Fourth, the other world where Uburka was born is even less worth mentioning.

I am a pillar of the World of the Lone Child.

The harmony among the numerous other races and other worlds hangs solely on my life.

It cannot fall, nor can it disappear.

"...What a peculiar fate."

Raviel broke the heavy silence.

"The Constellation Killer we're talking about now is an ancient ancestor of mine. Our family was originally commoners but rose to the core of power overnight by receiving the favor of a hero who saved the nation. The Constellation Killer left our family the Prayer Sword before departing."

The Prayer Sword.

The very sword that Raviel used to stab her heart while facing the mirror.

"Using the Prayer Sword, I became a Constellation. Because I became a Constellation, my world was recorded in the Revelations. Because it was recorded, Gong-Ja, I was able to meet you."

"Yes, Raviel... I always feel that fate is mysterious."

And thanks to the director, Kim Yul became the catalyst for the orphanage's creation, and because of the director, I became who I am now. Isn't this a strange and mysterious cause and effect?

"Yeah. I get the bizarre fate part."

Anastasia, who had been frowning the whole time, finally spoke.

"So what's the plan now?"

"Obviously, we plan to pay it back."

With that single statement, our night was gone.

We gathered around the table in the living room, and the deities needed for the operation were summoned. The Countess even brought out [The Cate that Bites Gold Coins]. To seek advice against a foe that was a natural enemy of Constellations, it was best to hear from the mouths of the Constellations themselves.

"Constellation Killer, huh... Well, to be frank, it's tough."

In response to the question of how to exclude Constellation Killer, the tri-colored cat flicked its tail.

"The Constellation Killer has officially cleared up to the 90th floor as a hunter, and hunters who have cleared up to the 90th floor are basically granted their own sanctuary."

"I know. Like sanctuaries such as the Great Library. We just need to invade that sanctuary, don't we?"

"Meow. Yes, but..."

The cats made a complicated expression. They exchanged glances and cautiously observed my reaction.

"That's where the problem arises, Wailing Heaven. So far, not a single hunter or even a Constellation has set foot in the Constellation Killer's sanctuary. No, there are hardly any Constellations who have even the slightest information about the Constellation Killer's sanctuary."

"Why is that?"

"Because the essence of the Constellation Killer's sanctuary is [concealment]."

Concealment.

"Meow, more precisely, it's closer to [ignorance]. As you know, Wailing Heaven, the Constellation Killer throws away his memories more easily than a tissue paper from a giveaway. Even the Constellation Killer himself doesn't know about the Constellation Killer. What kind of life he lived, what kind of person he is, why he has to go around killing Constellations. No one knows, and probably the Constellation Killer himself doesn't know much either."

"....."

"Therefore, [ignorance] is the essence of the Constellation Killer. Meow. We don't know where he is. Even if he's right in front of us, we don't know who he is. Even if we have his location right in front of us, we probably can't go there."

I sighed.

No one knows that child, just like when Kim Yul sat at the classroom window seat, unchanged.

"Snake."

I looked down at the snake wrapped around my wrist.

"Ssss?"

"Do you know the coordinates of where the Constellation Killer's sanctuary is located?"

The thin snake flicked its tongue.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth boasts that there is no sanctuary whose coordinates it does not know!]

The cats seated at the table perked up their ears.

"Ahhh, certainly. If it's Hisimet Cretsu, coordinates should be obtainable. Ignorance is not knowing the truth, and a secret is hiding the truth. Both share the common point of the truth being ignored, meow. And Hisimet Cretsu is a Constellation that exposes the truth. ...Or so it goes."

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins look at you anew.]

"If you have Hisimet Cretsu, almost no world is inaccessible. We can buy anything. Meow. You've really collected the best Constellations. Total cheats."

"Knowing the coordinates is enough to go?"

I ignored the cats' sighs and asked.

The thin snake, which had been confidently flicking its tongue, slightly bowed its head.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth denies that.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth compares it to not being able to infiltrate a military facility in front of you, even if you know it's there.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth confesses that it only knows that something exists there, not how to get there.]

Of course.

The Constellation Killer didn't hide the secret; he erased the memories that could become secrets.

While the snake can sense "there was something there," it can't expose "what is there."

'But.'

I turned my head.

'Even what the Constellation Killer abandoned and lost is by my side.'

Across the table.

There sat the people that gathered here in response to the summon.

Among them, I called the name of the man who had to be the key to this operation.

"Kim Yul."

"....."

"Perhaps you have the authority to enter Constellation Killer's sanctuary."

Kim Yul, the [origin] of the Constellation Killer, silently looked at me.

Yes.

It's unknown how tight a security system the Constellation Killer's sanctuary has. Even if we knew, there's no guarantee we could break through.

However, it's too clear who would automatically be allowed by that security.

"Our plan is simple. Hisimet Cretsu will reveal the coordinates, and you, Kim Yul, will cross over to those coordinates. Please establish a foothold for us there. We, including myself, will immediately rush over."

"Understood, My Lord."

As Kim Yul nodded, [The Cat that Bites Gold Coins] urgently spoke up.

"W-Wait a moment, please. Wailing Heaven. Firstly... I understand he has access, but the Constellation Killer's sanctuary is, after all, of the 90th floor stage!"

"Is that so?"

"Meow! Of course! To access such a place, conditions are needed."

The cat spread its pink jelly-like toes wide.

"First, if one offers their sanctuary to the tower. Like [The One with the Delicious Tail] did for your 20th floor, and I did for the 70th floor, connecting my world."

"Who is The One with the Delicious Tail?"

"Also known as Hamusutra."

"Why is he called that..."

"Is that important right now?! Please focus on the story!"

It feels extremely important. So much so that it seems to be the only important thing at this moment.

Everyone seemed desperate to know, but the cat continued its explanation without caring.

"Second, if one connects their sanctuary, it feels like the 60th floor stage. Usually, subordinate worlds are connected, but there are cases where one's own world is directly connected. [The One with the Delicious Marrow] is such a case."

"And who is that..."

"Also known as Mutia."

Delicious, is it?

Is Mutia's marrow delicious...

"First is a kind of duty to the tower, while the second is a means of business for accumulating power as a Constellation."

"It seems similar..."

"Well, it actually is similar. Regarding this, you will learn more when you actually reach the 90th floor... But these two methods have a common point in a different sense. They can set their own access rights to the sanctuary."

I nodded.

"What's the other method?"

"Third, the overall manager of the tower. For example, a pillar provides an access route. [The One Who Becomes Delicious Alcohol] was caught by you guys this way."

Hisimet Cretsu let out a screech. The cat looked at Hisimet Cretsu and smacked its lips before continuing.

"Other than that, well, someone of the same class. Wailing Heaven would qualify, but that human wouldn't."

I smirked.

In other words, [Kim Yul has the authority to enter Constellation Killer's sanctuary but not the qualification to enter the 90th floor stage.]

On the other hand, [I have the qualification to enter the 90th floor stage but not the authority to enter the Constellation Killer's sanctuary.]

Each of us lacks one necessary condition for the other.

"It's okay."

But in other words, we can make up for what the other lacks.

And Kim Yul and I are already bound together.

We can call each other our own.

"Kim Yul is my Apostle. My limbs, so to speak. So, go not as [a Hunter] but as [an Apostle of the Constellation Wailing Heaven]."

"Ye-? ...Ahaa! Indeed!"

The tri-colored cat looked back and forth between me and Kim Yul and then opened its mouth.

"If he truly is an Apostle, it's possible! Apostles gain the same rights as the Constellation if the Constellation permits."

Kim Yul regained his memories because of me and was nurtured by me. Now that I've completed my role as a Constellation, it's not an exaggeration to call Kim Yul my Apostle.

Not just Kim Yul. Ester, Silvia, the Four Demon Lords, and the followers of the Demonic Heaven, those who received life through me, are now all my Apostles.

Therefore, this operation becomes possible.

"Kim Yul will cross over first. As my Apostle and as our vanguard."

Just as [The Ruin-Harvesting Cow] sent Goldencup as its vanguard when invading Raviel's world—

This time, I send Kim Yul as my vanguard to invade the Constellation Killer's sanctuary.

"And as soon as you arrive, please call me. Summon me. Then, I will rush over with my Apostles and followers."

All the pieces were in place.

We know the coordinates because of [The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth]. We can enter the sanctuary because of Kim Yul. I can respond to his call because I am Kim Yul's Constellation. The others can cross with me because they are either my Apostles or followers.

Everything I achieved from climbing from the 10th to the 80th floor makes the current operation possible.

"Meow. As far as we can see, there's no problem!"

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins] also guaranteed the success of the operation.

So, now all that's left is to execute the plan, but...

"Apostle? Follower?"

The Black Dragon Witch muttered blankly.

"Wait a moment. I wasn't called when Gong-Ja conquered the heavenly floors! I'm neither an Apostle nor a follower or anything!"

"Then you can watch the house from here."

The Countess fanned herself leisurely.

"For reference, of course, I have already obtained the certificate of being Gong-Ja's follower. Being recognized for clearing the heavenly floors is equivalent to becoming Gong-Ja's follower."

"Hmm. The first follower was me."

The Paladin leisurely fanned, not herself but the Countess.

"Thinking about it, Anastasia wasn't called as a judge. Is that so. She doesn't meet the qualifications... It's regrettable."

"Ahah. Sometimes she brags about being the first to befriend Gong-Ja, but true camaraderie is proven in places like this, right?"

"Ahahaha. For starters, I'm definitely Gong-Ja's follower!"

One after another, the Paladin, Viper, and the Heretic Inquisitor spoke.

"....."

As Black Dragon Witch looked around, she suddenly glared at me with eyes burning with some emotion.

And then, as if betrayed by me, she shouted in a voice full of such sentiment.

"I'm converting!"

You were atheist, weren't you?

Volume 16 – Chapters 376-400

Chapter 376: The Place Called a Sanctuary (1)

---

The Black Dragon Witch's declaration of conversion was no joke.

[You have gained a follower.]

[The Black Dragon Witch becomes your follower.]

[You can now bestow your protection and power upon the Black Dragon Witch.]

Our contract was sealed merely through an exchange of "Are you really going to believe?" "Yes" "Really?" "Yes, really, so hurry up and seal the deal." That was the end of it. There were no other formalities.

Is it always this easy to form such agreements?

"Wow. I never thought it would be like this...."

[The Cat That Bites Gold] looked at us with disbelief in its eyes.

"To form a follower contract without even offering a skill card. That's unbelievable. Something's strange about your sword."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. Above all, Constellations and their followers must trust each other. Followers must believe they won't be stabbed in the back by their Constellation, and Constellations must trust their followers not to betray them. And they usually require a significant connection....."

It seems we are an unusual case.

But to me, this felt normal. Not just the Black Dragon Witch, but Paladin, the Countess, and others had all easily agreed to become followers.

"This isn't normal. Duh. What kind of life have you been living?"

The tricolor cat made a disgusted face while our preparations were completed.

The raid team gathered in the vast garden of the communal dormitory. A total of 12 members. Among the vassals, Kim Yul, Ester, Uburka, Silvia, and the Four Demon Lords were selected. Among the companions, the Black Dragon Witch, the Heretic Inquisitor, Viper, and the Paladin participated.

Including me, that made 13 members.

It was exactly the number to correspond one-to-one with the puppets of the Constellation Killer.

"...With this lineup, we could end most worlds."

Surveying the raid team's imposing presence, Silvia clicked her tongue in amazement.

Frankly speaking, Silvia, the Four Demon Lords, and the Paladin were not skilled enough to confront the Constellation Killer. However, they could buy us some time. While they held out, I would quickly dispatch the puppets to come to their aid.

"The Constellation Killer is a foe capable of decimating average worlds, after all. It can't be helped. If only he didn't resort to overwhelming us with numbers, I would have faced him in a fair one-on-one battle."

"By the way, Master. If what Ester told me is correct, you overwhelmed the Demon King with numbers when you defeated it...."

"Is everyone ready? Hey, Silvia, the maid, everyone else is ready to dive into battle, why are you the only one dawdling? Get ready."

"Damn. This is so disgusting I might just quit my position as a maid someday."

Silvia grumbled and stepped back.

I turned my gaze and looked down at the snake wrapped around my wrist.

"Hisimet Cretsu."

"Sssss."

"Pinpoint the location of the Constellation Killer's sanctuary."

The snake nodded its head then slithered off my wrist. As I felt its slimy touch wrap around my hand, I walked toward Kim Yul.

And then I grabbed Kim Yul's right hand.

[You temporarily transfer the ownership of The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth to another.]

Ssssss.

The snake slithered from my fingertips to Kim Yul's fingers.

".....Hmm."

Perhaps unfamiliar with the touch of the snake's scales, Kim Yul slightly furrowed his brow.

"It feels strange. My chest feels a bit tight. Is this what it's like to be surrounded by a Constellation's presence?"

"Ah, yes. It's like a feather's weight is added to your breath."

"That's right. ...Master, have you always been burdened with this?"

"You get used to it surprisingly quickly."

Kim Yul just stared at me intently without saying anything else. Silence ensued. Only the snake wrapped around his wrist kept hissing softly.

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth manifests its authority.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth searches for the sanctuary of the Constellation Killer.]

[Searching.]

I remained silent. Could the snake really find the Constellation Killer's sanctuary? It confidently assured it could, but was it truly possible?

Time enough for a droplet of candle wax to melt and fall passed.

[Search complete.]

[The Eyes Dwelling in the Labyrinth has pinpointed the sanctuary of the Constellation Killer.]

'Good.'

I exhaled the breath I had been holding. But it was too soon to relax. A troop aiming to conquer a fortress had only just discovered the location of the fortress.

"Don't worry, Kim Gong-Ja."

Kim Yul broke the silence.

"The enemy won't be expecting our surprise attack. This operation will definitely succeed."

"...Yes, but the Constellation Killer is a hunter who prepares for all possibilities. Even if he hasn't anticipated this, he probably has a manual prepared for when his sanctuary is invaded."

"There probably is. However, he definitely hasn't prepared for [an invasion by himself]."

Kim Yul pulled something out of his pocket.

A hair tie. Not the yellow rubber band mockingly given by those vile beings, but the hair tie I had gifted him when I accepted him as a vassal.

"The Constellation Killer will definitely hesitate for a moment. All we need is that momentary lapse. If you need a second, I will buy you that second."

Kim Yul tied his hair with the band. Thousands of strands of hair were gathered into a single braid. As if to signify his resolve, Kim Yul murmured softly.

"Transfer."

Flash!

White light enveloped Kim Yul's entire body. As he was swallowed by the light and disappeared, I began counting in my mind.

My lips barely moved.

'1 second.'

At this moment, Kim Yul would have arrived at the sanctuary of the Constellation Killer.

'2 seconds.'

The Constellation Killer would have noticed the intruder from outside and immediately launched an interception.

If it were an ordinary Constellation or hunter, they would first panic at the fact that their sanctuary, which had never allowed an outsider, was breached. But not the Constellation Killer. He would move according to the pre-entered manual.

'3 seconds.'

But the identity of the intruder was someone no manual could ever prepare for. Himself.

At this point, the Constellation Killer would momentarily halt the interception to confirm if the intruder really was an identical person to himself.

Therefore.

'4 seconds.'

Kim Yul could keep his promise to me.

[Your Apostle calls out to you desperately.]

A voice echoed in my mind.

I pushed my aura to its limit and extended my sense of time. Regardless of how my own time flowed, the voice coming from the 1st floor, isolated from all stages, flowed solemnly.

[Your Apostle wishes for you to be where he is.]

[Will you descend?]

Despite this being a message I encountered for the first time, I didn't hesitate. To inform the waiting raid team of my sortie, I deliberately opened my mouth and shouted.

"Yes!"

A dark shadow covered the top of my foot.

Under normal circumstances, I would have merely perceived it as "black light enveloping me." However, in this vastly extended time, I was able to look closely at the "black light."

It resembled human hands.

Arms rose from the shadows. Fingers caught on my toes. Palms grabbed my ankles. Numerous arms, painted black like noise, crawled up.

'.....'

Although there were countless hands, for some reason, I could distinguish each one of them. They were differentiated. These were the hands, the arms, of those who had been killed by me— the hands and arms materialized from the traumas I had glimpsed.

Among them was Kim Yul's hand.

I reached out and grabbed his plea.

[You respond to your Apostle's call.]

Countless palms crawled up and covered my entire body.

[Descending.]

And so, I was transferred, buried in the black hands.

'6 seconds.'

The next moment, what greeted me was a scene that felt familiar if one could say so.

It was a junkyard.

Outdated scrap metal and plastic containers that had emptied their contents were merely waiting to be picked up by someone. No one picked them up, so the trash formed a tomb. All the way to the horizon.

Summoned from the high skies, I looked down at the junkyard that stretched to the end of the world and fell rapidly.

[You have entered the sanctuary of the Constellation Killer.]

The sunset was dazzling.

The sunset bypassed me and illuminated the junkyard on the ground.

'7 seconds.'

Like the ancient mounds left in a city of ruins, the trash was piled up into mounds. At the top of those giant tombs, like an orange partially peeled and left behind, plastic PET bottles hung with their labels flapping loosely.

The labels of the PET bottles, originally blue, had faded to a grayish hue. The metals had their skin peeled off, revealing the raw insides.

In that place where all colors declined and all metals degenerated, there were those who swung their silver swords with silver hair fluttering.

They all looked the same.

'8 seconds.'

But they were not the same at all.

Twelve puppet bodies were rushing towards one human. They were in the middle of rushing when they simultaneously sensed my presence and all at once raised their heads. From high above, falling down, my gaze met with 12 pairs of eyes.

I drew my holy sword.

'9 seconds.'

And I murmured within my mouth.

[The Heaven that Gathers Wails summons its Apostles and followers.]

[Several Apostles respond to your call.]

[Several followers respond to your call.]

Dark shadows formed around me, still descending from the sky.

[The Apostles of The Heaven that Gathers Wails manifest.]

[The followers of The Heaven that Gathers Wails have been summoned.]

There were eleven shadows.

We fell fiercely, like fragments of a meteor split into many pieces. The strong wind brushed my cheeks.

Initially buried in dark shadows, my companions, exposed to the wind, shed the blackness. Their true faces were revealed. Some blinked in wonder, some furrowed their brows against the strong headwind, and others gripped their sword hilts, looking down at the ground.

"—Teleport!"

And the Black Dragon Witch unhesitatingly used her ability.

Employing her instantaneous teleportation skill, the Black Dragon Witch collected each of the scattered, falling companions one by one. She was also a hunter skilled in aura. The Black Dragon Witch didn't waste even a few seconds to link all eleven members of the raid team from hand to hand.

"Kim Gong-Ja!"

The Black Dragon Witch reached out to me last.

"Grab on!"

Why hesitate?

I grasped the Black Dragon Witch's bare hand.

'15 seconds.'

The next moment, we were on the ground.

The Constellation Killer had taken a defensive stance against our arrival.

But he had only been granted a mere 6 seconds.

Initially, he spread a net to attack Kim Yul alone, then changed formation to intercept me, and finally, had to adjust again for 13 intruders.

'16 seconds.'

Thrice. Unexpected situations consecutively hit him three times.

Three times, the Constellation Killer was deprived of breathing time by us.

'17 seconds.'

And we were not so weak as to fail to hunt someone who showed an opening three times.

Shwaaaaaah!

My sword was the first to slash through a puppet. It was the one closest to Kim Yul. A strike, a second strike, a third strike, three directions of sword waves smashed the puppet's limbs.

"Ughhhh!"

Next to swing his weapon was Uburka. He swung his axe and simultaneously chopped off both legs of another puppet.

Under normal circumstances, the Constellation Killer could have fought Uburka on equal footing, but the Black Dragon Witch's teleportation was a surprise. The Constellation Killer couldn't assume a proper stance and fell.

The battle that started 13:13 instantly turned to 13:11.

"So it is."

One of the Constellation Killer's puppets muttered.

"Wailing Heaven, were you a prophet?"

The balance of the battle sharply tilted.

The remaining 11 puppets were forced to scatter and face us individually. Uburka and Kim Yul joined forces to cut down another puppet.

13:10.

"Did you foresee my plan to seal you and preemptively invade this place?"

"No. I'm not a prophet. I'm a returnee."

Kim Yul, Uburka, and Silvia joined forces to rush at a new puppet. By this time, the puppets had barely regained their composure. Battles erupted all over. The Black Dragon Witch's sharp voice and Paladin's shout tore through the sunset.

"A returnee? Impossible. I anticipated you were a time manipulator and prepared nearly perfect countermeasures."

"It would have been perfect if I were alone."

I charged at the Constellation Killer.

Seeing me rapidly approach, the Constellation Killer bit his lip for a brief moment.

What calculations were going through his mind now? How quickly was he reviewing the numbers?

I couldn't know what was in his mind.

But the voice that the Constellation Killer let out was clearly audible.

"I abandon the memories of the past 29 days."

Chapter 377: The Place Called a Sanctuary (2)

---

-Why do you keep erasing your memories?

Leafanta Aegim turned his head toward the source of the voice. A woman was looking at him intently, her chin propped on her hand.

Her name was Ivansia, wasn't it?

-To prevent change.

-To prevent change...?

-Have you ever seen someone who resolved to live for over a thousand years?

Leafanta Aegim flipped through his notebook to read about the woman. There wasn't much written.

「Originally a maid tending to a garden, she was elevated above the nobility.」

「She likes my face.」

「She bore my child.」

Leafanta Aegim's gaze lingered on the last line for a moment. A child.

Even now, the woman had a newborn baby on her lap. The baby reached out with a "Ah," and the woman teased it with a finger.

-No. A hero like you is rare.

-Special determination is needed to live a thousand years. Everything changes. Portraits drawn to remember someone fade, and swords forged to kill someone rust. A thousand years is enough time for everything you wished to preserve or destroy to change.

That was a passage Leafanta Aegim had written in his notebook. Every time he lost his memories, he would read this passage. And each time, he would slowly nod and accept it.

-I am weak.

-.....

-I don't have the confidence to endure a thousand years. There's no basis for me to believe I could. So, I discard time. Even a thousand years become merely a moment once discarded. If the fear of betrayal looms, simply eliminate the very time in which betrayal could occur.

The wind blew, carrying the scent of spring.

Spring wind differed from winter's, being slightly more humid, and that moisture wrapped softly around the tip of the nose. On the woman's lap, the baby waved its hands, trying to catch the wind.

Time dissolved away.

-That's my way.

-That's...

-You must think of me as a fool.

The woman opened her mouth. No, she attempted to. By standing up, Leafanta Aegim brushed aside the woman's attempt to intrude on his time.

-Change is the privilege of humans. While I desired to remain human by having a child and leaving a lineage, I also wanted to never change by discarding memories. I sought to be human yet refused to be human. A contradiction indeed.

The woman opened her mouth again, but Leafanta Aegim turned his back even quicker.

-But it doesn't matter.

-.....

Leafanta Aegim couldn't see it as he had turned away, but at that moment, the woman trembled slightly for an instant. From the tone in which he muttered, 'But it doesn't matter,' the woman felt something entirely unfamiliar for the first time.

-After all, everyone lies about being human. As long as such people live in this world, I will always be more human than they are.

The woman didn't know, nor could Leafanta Aegim himself know, that this was akin to the last vestige left by an entity named Kim Yul.

Watching Leafanta Aegim's receding back, the woman barely managed to open her lips.

-Are you leaving like this?

-Yes. Wasn't the promise to stay until the baby could walk?

-Why won't you allow anyone to stay by your side?

-Because I don't need them.

Leafanta Aegim glanced back briefly.

-Maybe there was a time when I needed someone else. If that were the case, I can only say this to you— it's too late.

-.....

-I know you used me to become a noble. That doesn't matter either. Just make sure you use your power for those who are still not too late.

That became the lasting motto of the Ivansia Duchy.

It was unthinkable for the woman to have any love or compassion for the empire's citizens. She merely found a way to satisfy both her tastes and her lust for power. Yet, why did Leafanta Aegim's words remain as a motto?

-I will erase all memories of Ivansia.

With those words, Leafanta Aegim walked out of the garden.

-Transfer.

The wind blew.

Where spring had arrived, he was no longer there.

---

"I abandon the memories of the past 29 days."

A flash of pure white light attempted to pierce through me in an instant.

I countered with my holy sword. While countering, I wondered where the puppet bodies had gathered 29 days' worth of memories. One might have fought with the Sword Saint, but where were the other 12?

They must have been here. In this junkyard. Wasting time meant only for discarding.

"Over here!"

The Black Dragon Witch shouted. Just before the flash emitted by the Constellation Killer and my sword were about to collide, the Black Dragon Witch's mirrors intervened, blocking between us.

"If you want to kill Kim Gong-Ja, you need my permission first! He's a pricey one!"

Crash, clang, shatter!

Three mirrors shattered upon receiving the flash. However, from the fourth mirror onwards, the flash was obliquely reflected. By the fifth, sixth, the flash was increasingly deflected with each reflection— finally, it turned back towards the Constellation Killer.

"...!"

The strike, though immensely weakened compared to when the Constellation Killer had launched it, was still not something to ignore with a sword. Seizing the moment when the Constellation Killer had to block his own attack, I plunged towards him without hesitation.

"If you had gathered memories for a year instead of a month, we might have been defeated."

The puppet couldn't withstand the combined attack of Anastasia and me. The holy sword slashed across the puppet's shoulder.

13:9.

The difference in numbers between us and the enemy widened again.

"But you couldn't bear to spend even a month, could you?"

Kim Yul and Uburka, leading a separate unit, actively utilized the advantage in numbers. They aided the Paladin who was struggling in battle. Whenever any of the puppets attempted to discard time, Kim Yul and Uburka jointly confronted them.

"Because life starts after more than a month."

Explosions sounded from all directions.

"The longer you live, the more you need to gather as much time as possible to face an unknown formidable enemy like me. But the longer you live, the more the time you don't erase accumulates, and the more anxious you become."

I rushed towards the next puppet. The puppet didn't just stand there as I charged. Boom! The puppet's flash exploded like a meteor shower.

I stepped into a small gap that opened. As I veered left, the meteor shower skewed leftward.

Boom!

Where the flashes landed, trash was torn apart.

A PET bottle with its waist crushed soared into the air.

Snack bags were ripped into fragments, fluttering around.

Piercing through the trash, which could no longer hold or confine anything, I reached right in front of the puppet.

"Because you didn't want to risk not wanting to discard."

"The memories of the past 29 days...."

"I have a rough idea why you ended up as 13 puppets."

The puppet attempted to erase its memories, but this time my sword was slightly faster. Unlike when I was ambushed yesterday, or rather, tomorrow, there were no puppets clinging to my limbs; instead, my companions stood all around.

13:8.

"You are a hunter who cleared up to the 90th floor, but to ascend to the 90th floor, you had to break through the heavens starting from the 80th."

I turned to search for my next prey.

"To break through the heavens, you need a judge. You need others to become your followers. But not only do you refuse to have followers, but you also outright reject the notion of others being connected to you."

Flash...

A red beam surged a short distance away. The crimson beam, resembling a spurt of blood, pierced through the mounds of trash and split the setting sky. Glancing over for a moment, I saw Ester breathing heavily, gripping the sword hilt tightly.

In front of Ester, a puppet fell limp.

13:7.

"That's why you needed puppets."

Ahahahat!

The Heretic Inquisitor's laughter echoed through the junkyard. His laughter, unlike any trash, was so cheerful that it seemed rather eerie.

The Heretic Inquisitor formed signs with his fingers, and six types of divine miracles combined into a storm. Wrapped in miracles, the Black Dragon Witch pierced the heart of a puppet with her right hand.

13:6.

"You must have relied on puppets every time you ascended through the heavens. No, you had no choice but to rely on puppets. Not only do you not trust others, but you also dread the thought of others trusting you. Only the existence of puppets was something you could barely tolerate."

Oohraaaa! Chachachach!

Viper's spirited shout filled the air. The Four Demon Lords caught a puppet, and Viper dove into the gap. Carrying a small bit of happiness that humans, as people, could enjoy in their daily lives, the master of Celestial Martial Clan struck down with his sword.

13:5.

"You always want to remain human until the end,"

13:4.

"But you never trust anyone."

13:3.

"You don't believe in the connection between any two people. That's why I said it. If I had been alone, you would have won."

13:2.

"I don't think you're wrong. The ones at fault would be those damn bastards. The aimless wanderers and beasts that incessantly roam this world. But..."

13:1.

"Don't think everyone is just like you."

I aimed my sword.

"Don't think only your blood is blood, Constellation Killer."

The last remaining Constellation Killer knelt, his chin raised by the tip of my sword.

"I, too, have earned my current self through shedding my own blood."

"....."

The plastic bottle crushed under the Constellation Killer's knee made a wheezing sound as they crumpled. He gasped for breath, looking up at me. Then, my companions standing behind me.

".....Constellations."

A thin voice leaked from the Constellation Killer's lungs.

"They already empower the strong, making them stronger."

Everyone present knew.

The Constellation Killer was starting to leave his last words.

Perhaps it was a warning, or maybe a curse, fragments of words spilled from his bloodstained lips.

"Only those who have something left to offer turn to Constellations for power. Be it money, secrets, connections, or souls. Those who still have something, in the end, continue their lives enveloped in the starlight of Constellations."

There was no desperation in the Constellation Killer's voice. His expression was not earnest. It was merely fading away, like the sunset lingering in the junkyard.

Losing its blood-red color bit by bit.

".....There are those who have nothing left to give. Those who add day to day in a world where no response comes, whether they raise their voices or hold their breath. For them alone..."

Only for them.

"It's an insult to live enveloped by Constellations."

Why?

The Constellation Killer looked up at me expressionlessly.

"If everyone can not reach heaven, then at least everyone should start from hell."

"....."

"You must think I'm foolish. But it doesn't matt....."

"No."

It wasn't me who answered "No."

A man, identical to the Constellation Killer, pushed me back by the shoulder and stepped forward to face the Constellation Killer.

Kim Yul looked down at the Constellation Killer.

"Kim Gong-Ja doesn't consider you foolish. He thinks he has no right to do so. I'm the one who considers you foolish."

"And at the same time, it's also you."

The Constellation Killer's lips twitched.

What he realized from seeing Kim Yul, identical to himself was beyond conjecture. The Constellation Killer had no way of knowing why a human identical to him was here, whether he truly was the same person, and if so, why he was hostile.

Therefore, the Constellation Killer's counter-question was more instinctual than logical.

"Aren't you afraid?"

The Constellation Killer simply asked.

He looked up alternately at my face and Kim Yul's, asking in an infinitely small voice.

"What are you trying to do? You..."

"What exactly?"

It was only after a long while that Kim Yul nodded.

".....I'm scared."

And he raised his sword.

"But... it doesn't matter."

The sunset was cut.

The sword sliced across the sunset, severing a life slightly redder than the evening glow.

[The Constellation Killer has been extinguished.]

That marked the end of the hunter once most feared among the stars.

Chapter 378: The Place Called a Sanctuary (3)

---

[The Constellation Killer has been extinguished.]

Thud.

Lost on his path, the Constellation Killer buried himself in the junkyard's floor. His silver hair fluttered as if spreading on the surface of water.

It was as if looking at a pile of cut threads from a puppet.

[There is no Constellation in this world.]

A serene voice echoed through the world.

[The first condition for world destruction has been satisfied.]

[There is no Apostle in this world.]

[The second condition for world destruction has been satisfied.]

[There are no followers in this world.]

[The third condition for world destruction has been satisfied.]

Somewhere, the sound of a beast's roar rumbled.

[Warning.]

[All conditions have been satisfied.]

Initially, the beast's roar echoed only from the outskirts of the world, but soon, it rapidly converged from all directions. The ground shook, and the heaps of trash that soared to the horizon trembled.

Rumble!

Trash tumbled down from the top of the heaps.

It wasn't the roar of a beast.

It was the sound of this place collapsing and sinking.

[The world is heading towards destruction.]

The sunset was torn apart.

The sky turned into a pane of glass and shattered upon becoming glass. The pieces of glass, split right before shattering, fell with the sunset imprinted on them.

Boom!

A quarter-sized piece of the sky fell onto a distant trash heap. The heap spewed out countless plastic bottles as it collapsed. The glass shard also shattered, spraying billions of glass fragments. Each piece still bore the imprint of the sunset, making them appear red.

Thus, the junkyard seemed to sprinkle droplets of blood into the air.

".....Beautiful."

It wasn't hard to understand the comment inadvertently muttered by Paladin.

With cuts all over her body from battling the puppets, Paladin looked up at the broken sky, clutching a wound on her forearm.

"It's as if the world is blessing its own end. Such destruction wouldn't be so bad. If this is the last scene to be seen....."

"What are you doing holding a critique session!"

The Black Dragon Witch shouted.

"Run for it, you idiot! Unless you want to be covered in glass shards and die!"

"But Anastasia, look. To run away from such a spectacle, as a human, I simply cannot....."

"Stop talking nonsense! Nisha made me promise! If I don't bring you back safely, know that my life will be miserable!"

The Black Dragon Witch forcefully grabbed Paladin's wrist.

"Kim Gong-Ja, I'll consider this a debt for your help this time. I'm going to drag this fool back to Babylon, so do as you please!"

"Ah, such a pity. I really do pity. Imagine, if I must die, I'd want my cause of death to be impaled by the sunset. If I could just stay here a bit longer....."

"Teleport!!"

White light enveloped the two. The Paladin, filled with regret and reluctance to leave, soon vanished into the light.

"Um! Then I'll take my leave as well, Master!"

"Father, I will withdraw first."

Pop! Flash!

The other comrades and retainers quickly escaped from the collapsing world.

In the next moment, only Kim Yul and I remained.

"....."

Silently, we watched the world crumble into red.

Suddenly realizing we were the last two left in this world, I felt an urge to linger here a bit longer, despite knowing we should escape. Was it the Paladin's eccentricity rubbing off on me, now that we were reduced to the minimum unit that a world could be?

"Why was it a junkyard?"

Kim Yul's voice came from beside me.

I didn't turn my head. We simply looked up at the redness of the world together.

Some relationships require eye contact to communicate, while others are content with merely sharing the same air.

"Why here of all places?"

"....."

"I don't have good memories of home. I lost my indoor shoes on a wednesday and had to wear my outdoor shoes to school until Saturday. After school on Saturday, I searched the junkyard near my home to see if anyone had thrown away any indoor shoes."

In this world left with just the two of us, Kim Yul's tone of voice was... slightly different.

Perhaps it hadn't changed but momentarily returned to its original state.

"I found one shoe but couldn't find the other. I couldn't go to school wearing just one shoe. I gave up after searching all weekend, but on Monday morning, I found the other shoe placed there. My father found it overnight."

"I see."

"Yeah, but the pair didn't match. They were different sizes. I don't think my father was worried or cared for me to have stayed up all night. He probably felt accused by his son wandering the junkyard all weekend."

Kim Yul murmured.

"That's the best memory I have of my father."

Kim Yul moved his hand. That's when I turned to look at him. Kim Yul was putting the tie that had been tied in his hair back into his pocket.

"If the Constellation Killer erased all memories related to being Kim Yul, why did he choose this landscape for his sanctuary? How could he have chosen it? It's beyond me."

As the tie was removed, Kim Yul's tone returned to normal in that brief moment.

"Maybe it's imprinted on the soul, even if it's forgotten from the mind. Sounds like nonsense."

"But it adorned a corner of the tower with this landscape. Including you and me, thirteen people have seen it."

".....Yeah."

And then, I thought I saw Kim Yul smile very faintly.

"After that day, a corner of our house always had several pairs of unused indoor shoes piled up. When I think about it, it doesn't seem like such a bad memory."

Kim Yul nudged me with his elbow.

"I'll go ahead, Master. This is no longer my home."

With the word "transfer," Kim Yul was enveloped in a swirl of light.

And so, I was left alone in the world.

The horizon had completely crumbled. The glass that had been stripped from the sky collided with the ground and shattered, scattering plastic and metal fragments into the air. Darkness enveloped the world from its edges.

Lastly, I looked down at the remains of the puppets.

"....."

After capturing the last view of the thirteen severed puppets, I let my voice, the last to be recorded in this world, flow.

"Transfer."

[You are being transferred to the 81st floor.]

And thus, the world closed its eyes.

Embracing the pitch-black darkness.

---

Upon returning to the 81st floor, what greeted me was the somewhat lethargic voice of a mage.

"Good work, Wailing Heaven. Even for you, I thought this time you might face defeat, but annoyingly, you've killed the Constellation Killer."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] stood there, leaning on a broken staff.

In the stage still filled with nothing but darkness, soon to be decorated as my sanctuary, the mage seemed like a white orchid in bloom.

"You were too busy fighting, weren't you?"

"Too busy? If Raviel had hesitated even slightly, I would have been eternally displayed here that day."

"That's true. Just so you know, all the Constellations residing in the tower are in an uproar because of you. The news of the Constellation Killer's death was just announced."

I shrugged.

"It's not the first or second time I've caused a commotion. The Constellations should be getting used to my existence by now."

"Annoying..... Do you only act so annoyingly in front of me, or is it just my imagination?"

"By the way, I have something I'd like to consult about."

The mage sighed.

"Well, the loser must willingly accept humiliation. What's your consultation about? Is it related to the sanctuary?"

"Yes. It's about one of my skills, [Ghoul Reincarnation]."

I opened my palm.

"Skill card, open."

Whoosh.

Golden sparks overflowed from the palm of my hand, forming the shape of a card.

+

[Ghoul Reincarnation]

Rank: SSS

Effect: You summon those you've personally killed. The deceased do not inherit their abilities from life. However, if you wish, they can inherit their memories and appearances from when they were alive. If you do not wish it, they will only be summoned as monsters.

+

The mage looked at my card and nodded.

"Right. That's your trademark skill, the one you've used and relied on the most. Now you're consulting me about it?"

"Yes. Especially about this part... [If you do not wish it, they will only be summoned as monsters]."

"What about it?"

"Can I decide what kind of monster they are summoned as?"

The mage blinked.

"That's..... um, let me think."

She pondered for a moment, then glanced at me.

"I don't know why you asked this, but normally when you summon a ghoul as a monster, it takes the form of a skeleton. It's obviously to balance things out. If the same monster could be summoned as a true dragon, it would be disastrous. So, you being able to decide the type of monster..."

"Oh, that part is not a problem."

I waved my hand dismissively.

"I'm thinking of summoning them in an even weaker form than a skeleton."

".....Weaker than a skeleton?"

The mage frowned, unable to imagine my intentions.

"If that's really the case, there's no problem, but why? What are you trying to do? If it's a monster weaker than a skeleton, only slimes come to mind. And how does that relate to building your sanctuary?"

"You'll see."

I smiled.

"Let's start by defining a monster. How about [a life form that lacks reason]? Would that suffice?"

"It doesn't really matter, but... don't use this for some prank. Remember that the Tower Master has already shown you favor regarding your skills once. Don't forget that."

"Of course."

"Alright. I'll temporarily modify the skill for you."

The mage tapped the floor with the tip of her staff.

[The authority of the skill 'Ghoul Reincarnation (SSS+)' is being modified.]

[Note: This modification is temporary.]

Despite losing to me and having her staff broken, it seems she still has the unilateral power to handle such matters.

I half-closed my eyes.

Feeling a sense of calmness, as if washing my face, I brought my hands together.

"....."

I focused on the 13 puppets, the remains of the Constellation Killer, which had just been abandoned and shattered in the world.

The more precisely I recalled the puppets, the darker the ground beneath my feet became. It was a shadow.

Just like when I invaded the sanctuary of the Constellation Killer, the same black-painted arms were climbing up my legs.

The difference this time might be that there were 13 pairs of arms.

'Come up a little more.'

I let the arms climb.

Whether they heeded my thoughts or it was the instinct of the shadows, the arms sluggishly climbed up my body. I concentrated all my nerves on guiding those arms to one place.

The shadowy arms grasped my pelvis, climbed my elbows, traveled my wrists, and finally gathered in my palm.

When all 13 pairs of shadows gathered in my palm,

".....Ghoul Reincarnation."

I made a wish.

[Activating skill.]

Squirm,

From the shadows at my feet to the long arms extending to me, they were gradually sucked into my palm. They converged. The pitch-black mass swirled, gathering at one point, slowly taking shape.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial], watching what I was doing, opened her lips in wonder. She might have been curious about what kind of monster I was summoning, but what reflected in her eyes was something entirely unexpected.

".....A flower?"

It was a Silver Bell Flower.

The Silver Bell Flower in my palm was withered. It was dried and twisted. It stretched its neck long, with 13 withered bells hanging on its stem.

"Yes."

I carefully placed the withered Silver Bell Flower down. Squelch. The soil of the 81st floor, covered in mud-like darkness, softly accepted the bellflower.

"This is the Constellation Killer."

"A monster is defined as [a life form that lacks reason], so there's no need to summon only beasts."

I planted the flower with 13 bells in this world. Transplanted from a world that had just perished to this, still shrouded in darkness.

"From now on, I will either resurrect the ghouls in human form or merely transplant them as flowers."

I turned to look at the mage.

"Thus, this world will bloom with flowers that couldn't bloom elsewhere, flowers withered and died in other worlds. Only one sprig has been planted now, but soon hundreds, thousands, millions of flowers will rot here."

"....."

"A garden of withered flowers."

I smiled.

"That will be my sanctuary."

Perhaps the mage wasn't the only one listening to my vow.

[Your skill is being renamed.]

The Tower Master always watched over me, and this time too, she extended her hand as if blessing me. White light wrapped around my skill card.

When the light subsided, the final destination of my skill was drawn there.

+

[Withered Flower Reincarnation]

Rank: SSS+

Effect: You summon those you've personally killed. The deceased do not inherit their abilities from life. However, if you wish, they can inherit their memories and appearances from when they were alive. If you do not wish so, they are simply summoned as flowers.

+

Someday...

This place will be where a million flowers dream of reincarnation.

Chapter 379: The Gardener of the Withered Flowers (1)

---

So, now let's plant flowers in the world.

"Okay... Let's get to work."

After stroking the Silver Bell Flowers of the Constellation Killer, I stretched mightily.

From now on, I would have to travel around quite busily. In this world, where nothing yet exists, almost akin to a void, a lot would be needed to bloom a single flower.

-What do you plan to do?

The Guardian Spirit inquired.

Thinking about it, the Guardian Spirit had been quiet lately. Even when I was almost sealed by the Constellation Killer, and even when I ultimately counterattacked and defeated the Constellation Killer, the Guardian Spirit said nothing. It just watched from a few steps away.

If you ask whether I felt let down by this, not really.

I had a hunch about why the Guardian Spirit didn't interfere. Even without any conversation, I could understand the Guardian Spirit's heart. Unlike when I was climbing the 10th floor, I am now strong. I have reached a realm barely half a step behind the Guardian Spirit.

'This is as far as my teachings go.'

'The rest is for you to figure out on your own.'

Had I been defeated by the Constellation Killer and trapped in eternal seal, that would have been the end. It would mean that my journey towards the pinnacle of the tower would have ultimately ended there.

Advice is unnecessary between rivals who are on equal footing.

"That's right..."

I took off my coat and rolled up my sleeves.

"First, we need the sun."

-The sun?

"Yes. There needs to be light. It's quite dark here, isn't it? Even if only withered flowers are expected to bloom here, it would be too sad for the flowers if it's just darkness."

The Guardian Spirit looked at me as if it were looking at a madman.

-How do you plan to create the sun? Just so you know, it might be possible to create something resembling the sun with a tightly packed orb of Aura, but maintaining it continuously would be difficult.

"Well, we'll figure something out somehow."

There's plenty of time.

"And I have a feeling I might be able to get it from a specialist."

---

"No can do, no can do. Absolutely not."

Unfortunately, upon descending to Babylon and consulting with a specialist, what returned to me was a pinkish cat vigorously shaking its head in front of me.

"Is it impossible?"

"Meow. Even though we decided to bark, we should at least have some conscience, right? With your budget, 'the sun' is a bit, actually, quite a stretch."

[The Cat that Bites Gold Coins] looked at me like a real estate agent looking at someone asking if they could rent a new apartment within a budget of 50 million won. It hurt because it was so realistic.

"Woof, I can offer you a long-lasting light bulb..."

"Ah, that's not cool. Even though it's a garden. It needs to be natural light, not artificial."

"Hmm... How about a phoenix then? If you hang a cage from the ceiling and put a phoenix in it, it might somewhat create an atmosphere like the sun."

"Would that be natural light?"

"Wouldn't it be similar? It's all about how you perceive it, and the world is essentially a series of appropriate compromises."

Hmm.

I was momentarily tempted by the cat's words, but no matter how much I thought about it, the image of a phoenix hung above the garden crying 'Kee-ah Kee-ah' seemed somewhat foolish.

'But.'

The cat's offhand remark that the world is essentially a series of compromises inspired me.

"That's right. There's no need to bring the sun just to get some light. In fact, the sun might be too dazzling for the withered flowers."

"Yes, yes, that's exactly the kind of self-justification a Constellation should have! Well then, let me explain in detail about the current price of a phoenix, but ever since Taotie went extinct, the price of creatures with fire attributes has dropped quite a bit..."

"Thanks for the consultation. Goodbye."

"Meow?"

I bought a pair of work gloves, a sack, and various equipment and returned to the 81st floor.

".....You look like you're about to go dig up potatoes or something?"

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] gave me a look that seemed to regard me as a lunatic upon seeing me equipped with work gloves and carrying a sack.

Huh. Did people make a new law in my absence that dictates they must look at me like that?

"I heard you talking about needing the sun and light earlier. You're not going to stuff the sun into that sack, are you?"

"Something like that."

"What?"

"More importantly, could I stop by the Constellation Killer's sanctuary for a moment?"

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] blinked.

"What are you talking about? The sanctuary of the Constellation Killer has already been destroyed. You saw it with your own eyes just yesterday."

"Yes. But the voice of the tower said the world would end, not disappear. From what I know, the Tower Master doesn't completely erase a world, even if the Constellation, Apostles, and all the believers have vanished and the world has ended..... It just stops in the state of destruction somewhere."

Could you let me stop by there for a moment?"

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] pressed her forehead.

"Wailing Heaven... You really are a strange person. What do you hope to pick up from a place that's completely finished? Trash? Or the corpses of massacre dolls? I'd understand if you asked for a legendary item. What could you possibly find in a place where only trash remains?"

"Ha... Just wait a moment."

The mage glared into the dark void.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial requests entry to an already ceased sanctuary.]

[Approved.]

[You may enter the Constellation Killer's sanctuary.]

The mage nodded, albeit reluctantly.

"Permission granted. The Tower Master seems curious about what you're doing. Gaining her favor isn't always easy; you're quite talented."

"Just live kindly, that's all."

"Funny. Living like you would not only cost you your life but also rot your soul."

What's wrong with my soul?

"A person planning to decorate their sanctuary with withered flowers must be out of their mind. Imagine someone planted flowers on their apartment balcony, and they all turned out to be withered. Would that be normal?"

Is that so?

Hearing that made it seem a bit strange.

Perhaps there was a reason why everyone ranging from Guardian Spirit to the others looked at me as if seeing a madman, but I didn't change my plans.

Teleportation.

[You have entered the Constellation Killer's sanctuary.]

Thus, I set foot in the world I had destroyed yesterday.

The landscape hadn't changed.

The wind was bitter, and time had stopped. The setting sun had vanished, and the red of the shattered glass sky had broken into countless pieces.

In the void, trash crumbling and shattered glass-skies were preserved like still frames.

"Here you are, as you requested."

This time, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] followed me. She had stubbornly refused to show herself when other companions were around, but now that I was alone, she readily appeared.

"What do you plan to take from here? I must ask once again."

"The sky."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] furrowed her brows.

"Ha? The sky...?"

"Yes. I will take the sky with me."

I began to rummage through the mountains of trash in the frozen world.

What I was looking for was glass. Originally, it was the sky marked by the sunset, but now shattered, leaving only fragments.

The world had been destroyed, but the glass still retained the red color it had been dyed at that very moment.

I carefully picked up each piece.

The very small shards of glass were hard to use. I looked for pieces at least as large as the upper half of a human body. I carefully placed them in the sack, and within the dark sack, the glass shone red and yellow.

[You have been transferred to the 81st floor.]

I returned to the 81st floor, the sack filled to the brim with sunset.

This place was still empty, except for the Silver Bell Flowers.

In a space filled only with darkness, I ascended through the air as if stepping on stairs using [Aerial Movement Technique]. It didn't take long before I reached the pitch-black ceiling.

"Good."

I took out a piece of glass from the sack and carefully made a small hole in it with my fingernail. The hole made by Aura was impeccably clean.

I threaded the hole with the string I had prepared in advance. [The Cat who Bites Gold], who I had commissioned instead of buying a Phoenix, had assured me this string would never break. I guess I could trust it.

"Tying it like this and hanging it from the ceiling... Done."

Swing—

The glass of today's sunset hung in the darkness.

It was as if a candle had been lit in the middle of a basement without a single light, shining faintly but distinctly in red and yellow, illuminating the remnants of a sunset.

"It's still too dim, but it'll be fine soon."

"....."

I continued to collect fragments of the sunset, traveling back and forth between the Constellation Killer's sanctuary and the 81st floor.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] silently observed my actions, no longer grumbling, but strangely silent with lips tightly sealed.

[You have entered the Constellation Killer's sanctuary.]

[You have been transferred to the 81st floor.]

[You have entered the Constellation Killer's sanctuary.]

[You have been transferred to the 81st floor.]

[You have.....]

How much time had passed?

Strings dangled from the ceiling.

At the end of each hanging string swayed a sunset. Ranging from glass shards as large as a person to pieces as small as a palm. But all of them retained the sunset light of a world that had perished, shining quietly.

Despite the varying lengths of the strings and the different sizes of the glass,

"Looking up from below, it's just like a grapevine."

I was satisfied.

The 81st floor was no longer dark, but if you ask about it being bright, it wasn't. The once brilliant sunsets had lost their grandeur, merely fading.

Faded sunsets.

That's why I liked it.

With such light, even the withered flowers would not find it burdensome and would gladly accept it.

"...Right."

Looking up at the hanging glass sunsets in the sky, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] murmured,

"So this is the light of the world you create."

And so there was light.

I was probably the only Constellation who gathered such unsightly light to decorate the sanctuary. My believers were lost flowers' corpses, and my sun was a trace of a world that could no longer shine upon anyone.

Trash.

Ruins.

A place where life doesn't bloom, but the remnants of life linger, existing rather than truly being.

"Yes, it's not too bad, is it?"

"....."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] did not respond. I hadn't really expected an answer, so I just shrugged.

I brought a PET bottle from the Constellation Killer's sanctuary for the last time. Among the heaps of garbage, it was one of the few intact plastic bottles.

"Hmm. It's been quite a while since I've made one of these."

I sat cross-legged and held the scissors.

Snip.

The scissors cut through the waist of the PET bottle crisply. It split cleanly in half. As I shaped it, memories flooded back.

"I used to make these quite often when I was at the orphanage..."

What I was making was a flower pot.

A vessel for holding flowers.

Flower pots are surprisingly expensive when you try to buy them. So, at the orphanage, we used to cut PET bottles and turn them into flower pots. They're pretty when made, you see.

"I'll fill this with soil..."

I pondered quite a bit over which soil to use for the flower pot.

In the end, I chose soil from the world where Kim Yul had lived, the world where Kim Hwang Tae was struggling through his studies.

I went to the landfill where Kim Yul's house had been, dug a hole, and brought back the dark, withered soil.

"Phew."

After compacting the soil into the flower pot, I carefully planted the Silver Bell Flowers. Thankfully, the Silver Bell Flowers were safely transplanted into the flower pot.

The red light flowing from the glass in the sky slid across the transparent surface of the plastic flower pot, brightly shining.

"Okay."

Thus, I hung the light in this world and planted the first flower.

After placing the flower pot with the Silver Bell Flowers in the center of my sanctuary, I turned to look at [The Staff of Time Immemorial].

Smiling broadly at the still silent mage.

"In this way, I'll create the sky here, carve out waterways, and plant more flowers, lots of them. It might not be an exciting sanctuary to visit, but, um, I think I'll come to love it here."

"Shall we move on to the next? Mage."

[Light has come to your world.]

[The 81st floor has been cleared!]

[Land has come to your world.]

[The 82nd floor has been cleared!]

It's time to ascend to the 83rd floor.

Chapter 380: The Gardener of the Withered Flowers (2)

---

The plastic flower pot, filled with black soil, was bathed in rusted sunlight. Inside, the Silver Bell Flowers quietly slept, their roots immersed.

As I gazed at it, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] spoke up.

"Having shaped the sky and crafted the land, it seems it's time to create the sea."

"Exactly."

"Yes, the order of creation... Wait. What kind of response was that?"

"You'll see."

Though [The Staff of Time Immemorial] raised an eyebrow, I proceeded without further reply and summoned Ester.

[The Heaven that Gathers Wail' summons its Apostle.]

[Your Apostle responds to your call.]

[The Apostle of The Heaven that Gathers Wails manifests.]

The woman who once was hailed as the Saintess of the Weak and now served as my family's advisor appeared. Her voice spread across the world even before her feet touched the ground.

"Lord, what brings you to call upon me this time?"

Ester's voice was vibrant, still riding the adrenaline from a recent battle.

I raised a hand to calm her and said, "Ease your spirit, advisor. This isn't a call to arms."

"Oh, is that so?... I regretted not playing a more significant role in the last battle..."

"Have you become a bit of a brawler lately?"

"The Chamberlain is akin to an online game, influencing those around to become more aggressive. I am but one unfortunate victim of this."

Isn't that an insult to online games?

While it's debated whether online games increase aggression, it's a repeatedly proven fact that Silvia does. Unlike online games, which can relieve stress, Silvia only tests one's patience...

"Having a fighting spirit is good, but save it. There will always be battles to fight, and it won't be too late to draw your sword then."

"Yes, Lord... um. So, why have you summoned me?"

Ester blinked hesitantly, her violet eyes finally reflecting not me but the place where we stood.

"Um, this place is...?"

"The world I'm creating."

I continued.

"The place our family will call home."

"I see. This is our Nazarick."

"What's Nazarick?"

"A location from an old novel of your world recommended by Viper."

That gentleman, is he planning to collapse our family from the inside...?

"I see. So, you plan to fortify this place. Excellent. Let's place a [Gardener] in each garden. The gardeners, each wielding powerful skills and items, will possess absolute power within their domain, surpassing even you, Lord, within..."

"I'll need to talk with Liǎofàn later. Um, Ester. I didn't summon you to discuss security systems."

"What is it, then?"

"Ester, can you bring rain?"

The Demon King of Autumn Rain.

Once hailed as the Saintess of the Weak, now serving as my family's advisor, and previously a girl who submerged a world under a crimson flood, blinked.

"Rain, you say?"

"Yeah."

I recalled a skill card of Ester's that Guardian Spirit had once read to me.

[Resentment Flows Like Rain]

Rank: S-

Effect: You do not see. It becomes invisible. People believe that if something is not visible before their eyes, it does not exist. 'They are blind.' Yes, 'they are ignorant.'

Then, show them.

Show them vividly how many lives have died in their ignorance. As much as the innocent blood that flowed in this world, the sky will willingly pour down red rain.

*However, only the blood you have witnessed yourself will become rain.

+

"Bring rain to this garden."

I requested.

---

It resembled a prayer.

Ester closed her eyes and bowed her head. Platinum-blond hair cascaded down, covering her neck and chest, pooling over her clasped hands.

Her lips parted.

"Ah."

They closed briefly, then opened again.

"Ah."

Again.

"Ah—"

It was akin to ruminating.

When something unbelievable happens, when one witnesses the unbelievable, the action of chewing over it multiple times to digest and accept it internally. Thus, each time her lips opened, the sound emanating seemed to overflow from deep within her heart rather than her vocal cords.

A scene she had seen countless times in her trauma.

"---, ---, -----."

And so, the scene I first witnessed upon entering the world of the Aegim Empire unfolded before me.

Crimson rain fell upon my garden.

"....."

"....."

It was a deluge.

The rain, falling heavily across the garden, quickly enveloped it. Droplets clinging to the hanging sunsets scattered chaotically. Where the crimson rain met the red fragments, oddly enough, dark blue rainbows bloomed.

I quietly observed the droplets seeping into the plastic flower pot.

"Intense."

"Yes."

Responding to [The Staff of Time Immemorial]'s comment, I nodded.

"It's like a squall."

"....."

"The rain was initially received as a squall."

I quoted from a book I had read long ago.

"An ordinary rain, countless before. As fierce as it was, it would soon cease. They thought it just another shower to discuss under umbrellas with neighbors or to play a game of chess indoors until it passed."

These were quotes from various books.

If a person is a book, then I've lived a reader's life. Though not a Librarian, I had many books to quote from.

"But it wasn't so."

"....."

"It wasn't like that."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] inhaled deeply, as if holding a broken staff in her mouth.

The image reminded me of a smoker calming their nerves with a beloved pipe, and the effect seemed similar, as the magician spoke in a cool tone.

"It happens everywhere."

"....."

"Underestimating the resentment of others. Failing to consider that the hurt party might not be a cat but a tiger. Being negligent and off-guard until the leash is torn or the innards rot. It's a lesson every empire learns, a path no mighty can avoid... Why are you smiling?"

"Just because."

As I spoke, I took another PET bottle, cutting it in half.

"Even beings as immense as pillars have lives hardened in their hearts."

"Are you saying I'm putting on airs?"

"Are you not?"

"...I suppose my past deeds were quite detestable."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial], who had served as a judge in the underworld for an incalculable time, took the staff from her mouth and then replaced it.

The rain pouring now felt colder than the blood running through my body, nearly freezing, and the mage's disgust manifested as white puffs of breath.

"Yeah, but regardless of my intentions, isn't it the truth? The Aegim Empire fell because it was complacent in its strength."

"Yeah."

I nodded and then shook my head.

"No."

The autumn rain, naturally soaking the entire land, accumulated. It didn't take long for the rising water level to seep inside my shoes.

Each raindrop had its own weight, and as some overflowed from the plastic flower pot, naturally creating variations in strength. The once-flat ground began to rise evenly at first, but then started to undulate with the force of the water hitting its surface.

It was the sea of this world.

"And additionally, they forgot two facts."

Standing with my feet soaked in a sea of tears, I spoke.

"That someone is crying."

Then added.

"That someone is crying for someone else."

I addressed [The Staff of Time Immemorial].

"Just as the Tower Master does."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] hesitated.

Heat gathered in the broken staff. Like an archmage, she quickly grasped the crux of my words.

"Are you saying what the Tower Master does is commonplace?"

"Isn't that why you were drawn to the Tower Master?"

"Yeah."

Even in a world ruled by a merciless being, where despair reigns, someone will cry, and someone will cry for someone else.

"It's something that must not be forgotten."

The Aegim Empire was established by Leafanta Aegim. The empire's transformation has always been in a landfill, where no one was invited, weeping with a sword for others, not for oneself.

Someone is crying. Someone is crying for someone else.

The fall of the Aegim Empire was simply because it forgot such sustenance.

"-----."

Within the empire's founder's blooming flower pot, the tears of the Demon King who caused its downfall overflowed.

The overflowing autumn rain mixed with the sea, leaving dark crimson traces on the translucent flower pot's exterior. Despite its recent emergence, the sea performed its duty as a sea. It silently accepted everything that overflowed in the world.

And it gave.

I bent down, scooped up seawater with a newly made plastic flower pot, and declared with open hands.

"Withered Flower Reincarnation."

[Activating skill.]

Inside the swaying flower pot, like water from a well bucket, a tiny lotus bloomed.

The frayed lotus, like curtains in an old ruined mansion never walked through, had no weight. The lotus petals, tattered and torn, surrendered themselves quietly to the waves created by alternating heavy and light raindrops.

"...This flower."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] quickly recognized whom the lotus represented.

I nodded and pointed to the flower pot containing the Silver Bell Flowers.

"If this world needs a sky and land, it was solely for that child's sake."

"Similarly, if this world needs a sea, it's because this child needs it."

I placed the flower pot on the water's surface, which had risen to my ankles. It was the first boat to float on this world's sea.

The flower pot, like the lotus it contained, seemed weightless, entrusting its body to the movement of the waves. It climbed the hills created by the waves, then smoothly slid down, repeating the process.

Appearing precarious, as if it might capsize at any moment, it gradually found its rhythm, beginning its own voyage.

It drifted somewhere, eventually fading from sight.

---

[The sea has come to your world.]

[The 83rd floor has been cleared!]

And so, I continued to cultivate my sanctuary.

"Withered Flower Reincarnation."

[Activating skill.]

"Withered Flower Reincarnation."

[Activating skill.]

First, I bloomed flowers. I transplanted them one by one into prepared flower pots.

Then, I summoned my vassals and assigned them tasks.

"Ugor. Daddy, are you asking me to punch the ground now?"

"Exactly that."

"I'll do it, but... what's the point?"

"This flower prefers higher grounds."

Holding the tattered Cloud Chrysanthemum, I explained. My family's Chief Warrior looked at the flower blooming from the plastic flower pot filled with soil wrapped in white plastic and snorted dismissively.

"Got it. It's always hard to understand what daddy wants. Ugor, step back."

"Thank you."

"Krum!"

Uburka swung his fist. Bang...!! The previously flat ground and the undulating sea above it exploded vertically.

After the towering water column re-wetted the world with rain and then subsided, the floor of my sanctuary was no longer flat.

[A mountain range has come to your world.]

[The 84th floor has been cleared!]

It was done in such a manner.

[A spring has come to your world.]

For a flower that cherished the spring breeze and another weary from the perpetual winter, I brought spring.

[A summer has come to your world.]

For a flower that considered the boiling heat its homeland and another that wished to see the sea with its family on a summer day, I created summer.

[A fall has come to your world.]

For a certain flower.

[A winter has come to your world.]

Just for a certain flower.

[Congratulations! Seasons have come to your world!]

[The 85th floor has been cleared!]

[In your world...]

I filled my world with things each and every flower needed.

"Bloom."

I bloomed flowers.

"Cherish, feel at ease, and rest deeply in what you've dearly missed."

I planted flowers.

"As long as you wish, as much as you desire."

Forever, if they desired.

But.

"When that time comes."

When the spoiled petals heal.

When the holes in the leaves close by themselves, when strength returns to the broken stems.

When they wish to bloom once again, entirely by their own will.

"Then, you will leave the flower pot."

Thus, I tended to the garden.

Chapter 381: The Gardener of the Withered Flowers (3)

---

A garden is different from a forest. A flower garden is not like a meadow.

In the withered buds, seeds don't grow, and there are no bees to carry pollen, so every flower in this garden was planted by hand, one by one.

"The garden is now fully furnished."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] sat cross-legged atop a hill, sucking on her staff.

"It's like building a house: the foundation is laid, the structure is up, and the walls and insulation are all done. Plus, built-in furniture, lights, and air conditioning are all installed."

"Do mages use air conditioning?"

"Why wouldn't a world with magic have air conditioning? Why do you think mages are so temperamental? It's all because they don't have air conditioning."

"There must be a Constellation in charge of air conditioning then."

"Want me to introduce you?"

It's hard to tell where the joke ends and the seriousness begins. That's so characteristic of a mage.

"So, when is the housewarming?"

"Housewarming?"

"Yeah. Or a funeral? Which do you prefer?"

The mage again made such a mage-like remark.

With nothing but swordsmanship and martial arts in my background, I could only look at such a mage with a questioning gaze.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] sighed and removed the staff from her lips.

"Constellations at this stage usually split into two groups."

"That sounds dangerous."

"First, there are Constellations who show their sanctuary to their loved ones, planning a happy future. Second, there are those who gather their followers to spout long speeches about future visions."

"Constellations aren't much different, I see..."

The first is like a homeowner showing off a new house, and the second is like a CEO unveiling a new corporate building.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] silently stared at me. Hmm. That look could mean, 'You're a Constellation making such lame jokes yourself.'

Continuing with that gaze, [The Staff of Time Immemorial] said.

"You'd belong to the former, wouldn't you?"

"Do I seem like that?"

"Yeah. Aren't you going to show it off to your spouse? [This is our home, Raviel. Our place of rest together. This sea was made by making our advisor cry, and these tall mountains are the marks of our child wreaking havoc at home...] Something like that."

Indeed.

"Why do you say that? You know very well I wouldn't do that."

"Oh, is that so? Why not?"

"Because then naturally it would lead to [Speaking of this flower, imagine. In a place not here, in a time not now, during a minor ice age, there was a group of sailors in despair...] Something along those lines."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] shrugged with the staff in her mouth.

Feigning ignorance. Typical of a mage. Knowing full well, yet still making such remarks. I saw right through the act, yet waved the head of Hisimet Cretsu tied to my wrist.

"I once said to this basilisk."

-Humans are not dolls to be displayed in your glass garden.

-Nobody lives to be displayed by someone else, and nobody has the right to display another.

"Having said that, how could I do the same?"

Hisimet Cretsu hissed softly as its head drooped.

I withdrew my wrist and concluded.

"I didn't plant these flowers to display them to someone."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] once again detached the staff from her lips.

"Even if that someone is Raviel?"

"Even if it's Raviel."

No.

"Especially because it's Raviel."

I'm sure it would be enjoyable.

To hold Raviel's hand and explain this world I created. To talk about the ideas and considerations that went into making this place.

To explain once more what kind of person I am to Raviel, and for Raviel to acknowledge that once more. To be acknowledged from the bottom of my heart that I am such a person would undoubtedly be a sweet sensation.

Would she admire it? 'Truly, you are my consort.' Would she empathize? 'To have a kind soul as my partner, I am indeed fortunate.' Would she join me? 'Yes, wounded flowers. I too, along with them, will care for you.'

How happy that would be.

That's why I won't do it.

It's something that shouldn't be done.

"I will not invite Raviel to my sanctuary."

Forever.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] put the staff back in its mouth.

"Isn't that a bit too much? Wailing Heaven, you even overcame a pillar like me. Why not trust yourself a little more? It might not be as scary as you think."

"Because I'm scared."

I continued candidly yet firmly.

"Sure, I'm strong. Undoubtedly, there are only a few stronger than me in the entire tower."

"But, Raviel is my [exception]."

No matter how much I resolve not to, how long will it last?

If I invite Raviel here, if I walk with Raviel through this place, I might, even unconsciously, treat the flowers I planted here as rare exhibits.

That's truly, truly terrifying.

"Shouldn't you resist such temptations as part of your duty? True faith manifests in times of trial."

"If it were something I could handle, it would be a trial. Undertaking such a task when it's impossible is foolish."

"Hmm."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] clicked her tongue.

[It's not working], I interpreted from her expression and looked at her with incredulity.

"Mage, you really are a true wizard."

"Oh, is that a compliment?"

"The Constellation Killer said there shouldn't be exceptions in the life of a god. The Tower Master said if one becomes a Constellation and has to bear eternity, one should ponder several times before locking their skill set."

I scratched the back of my head and continued:

"Then, this conclusion becomes possible. Although I'm still inexperienced in climbing the tower, wouldn't there be more Constellations fallen from grace due to not keeping their word than those who were physically overpowered? Attempting to lay a trap of downfall with such cunning temptation. True wizard acknowledged."

"Yeah, it's a compliment then."

"It wasn't much of a cunning temptation, to be honest. It was too blatant. What are you trying to do?"

I looked straight at [The Staff of Time Immemorial].

"You said if I give up climbing the tower or fail along the way, you'd get your pillar position back. Is that why? Do you want to try a comeback even like this?"

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] also looked straight at me.

"What if it's true?"

"Then, despite being a pillar, you'd become a petty person unable to escape your desires. And knowing that such a petty person was a pillar, we'd know the level of other pillars and, consequently, the level of the tower supported by such pillars, but you wouldn't want that, would you."

"Why do you think that?"

"Because you were a pillar of the tower."

I stated.

"You should have that much dignity."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] wiped her staff on her sleeve and smiled faintly.

"In the end, it's a compliment. Being praised by the person who ousted me isn't so bad."

"Why are you doing this?"

"I wish for you to reach the 100th floor."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] declared.

"I hope the Sword Emperor's wish is fulfilled, that you officially become a pillar, and that the other pillars do not obstruct you."

"So why...?"

"To prevent you from tripping over a stone like a fool."

It was a statement loaded with implications.

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] flicked her sleeve and added.

"Especially such a clearly visible stone, even if it glitters like gold, you should avoid it."

Otherwise, you might not even make it to the 100th floor, it seemed to say almost audibly.

I remained silent for a while. In this place where there are variations in the ground and the rustle of the waves, where there's a difference in the air temperature, the only things that remained still were the flowers. I quietly listened to the sound of the wind caressing the red surface of the water and wetting the petals.

I spoke.

"Why do you wish for me to reach the 100th floor?"

"There are three reasons for that."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] took a half of the broken staff into her mouth, as if nibbling on a halved Pepero.

"The first reason is easy to understand. If the person who defeated me doesn't even make it to the 100th floor and loses, um, wouldn't that be a bit embarrassing? Imagine the gossip among the pillars and Constellations. Returning to work in such a situation, um, wouldn't that feel like being ostracized by the Magic Tower's branch manager every day?"

"Should I ask if pillars also gossip among themselves, or if the Magic Tower has something like being ostracized..."

"You're the one who said Constellations are all the same. What's different about pillars or mages?"

[The Staff of Time Immemorial] pulled one staff out of her mouth.

The saliva-drenched tip of the staff pointed at the flowers I had planted.

"The second reason is for these children."

"....."

"It would be better for these children, and therefore for everyone, if you remain a pillar rather than me."

[The Staff of Time Immemorial]'s demeanor always had an air of a mage about it.

Deception. Secrets. Subtext.

Even in a casually thrown word, there was bone, at least a fishbone, but the words just now were gentle. Like fish flesh carefully deboned for a baby, they were safe to swallow without chewing.

And I, when I don't know what to say, just speak bluntly.

"You tried in your own way."

"Is that supposed to be consolation? It makes me want to brew some barley tea and pour it into your nostrils."

"Well then. ...What's the third reason?"

"For the Tower Master."

That statement was also utterly gentle.

With a tender face and soft voice, the mage said,

"I couldn't do it. It would be impossible for the current pillars as well."

The same reason the princess hinted at me.

The reason why she had her eyes on me from the beginning, the mage spoke gently.

"So, someone else has to do it."

"Whether it's you, the Sword Emperor, or someone entirely different. Someone who's not a pillar, but preferably you."

The mage's lips closed and then opened again.

"I wish you would---"

Bring peace to the Tower Master, it seemed to say.

The voice of [The Staff of Time Immemorial] lightly settled in the garden of frayed flowers.

---

I held a housewarming.

I called my vassals. I didn't call Raviel.

There's nothing more to say about the latter. The conversation with [The Staff of Time Immemorial] says it all. This garden belongs to the flowers, and this flower garden does not entertain visitors.

"In the future, it may receive [Mourners]."

I stated.

"Some of these children might have families or loved ones. If these children wish to reunite with them, then we should facilitate that reunion."

"Indeed. So, mourners?"

After raising the water level with another cry, Ester, drying her eyes with the handkerchief Silvia handed her, continued.

"A kind of cemetery... No, a rehabilitation hospital might be more apt. Rather than mourners, perhaps visitors would be more appropriate."

"Ah, that makes sense."

"However, to receive visitors, doctors, nurses, and community service workers are needed."

Ester blew her nose into Silvia's handkerchief as she went on.

"I will naturally take on the role of Head Nurse... or [Gardener]. As I mentioned earlier, gardeners will wield absolute power within their protected gardens, surpassing even the Lord..."

"Silvia, just so you know, she's blaming you for becoming like this."

"That's absurd!"

Silvia, barely managing to hold the handkerchief with her thumb and index finger, showed a look of utter disgust.

"No way no way no way no way. Really, really, rea---lly absurd! Advisor, really! You were already! Somewhat! Strange!"

"Maid, do you want to be hit?"

"This is exactly what I mean! Advisor. Aren't you supposed to be a person of counsel, resorting to physical solutions for everything?"

"All wars are extensions of political solutions. And everything that happens in this world is physical. So... do you understand what I'm saying?"

"You're asking for a beating!"

"Mass and velocity are key. The direction is somewhat flawed."

For a moment, there was a standoff where Silvia brandished a hammer and Ester swung a greatsword at each other's heads.

Uburka munched on his salt-vanilla popcorn, as white as his skin, and said.

"Ugor. Daddy, aren't you going to stop them?"

"My son, before asking your father, shouldn't you learn to do things on your own?"

"Father, what do you think I've been doing while you were gone? Ugor. Now that the house has been left to you, it's time for you to experience the hardships I've endured."

"My family was already in ruins before the housewarming even started."

I lamented deeply.

Ah, but I didn't really stop Silvia and Ester from fighting. Kids grow up by fighting.

Letting them be, I looked at the others present.

"Director, Mr. Kim Yul."

I said.

"Would you take care of this garden?"

Chapter 382: The Gardener of the Withered Flowers (4)

---

"Would you take care of this garden?"

The first to react to my words were neither the director nor Mr. Kim Yul, but Ester, who had just parried Silvia's hammer. She exclaimed in shock.

"Lord, that's impossible!"

I looked at Ester. My family's advisor immediately offered his counsel.

"Firstly, Kim Yul has prior commitments. The Holed-Up Head Librarian didn't wish for Kim Yul to be a librarian, did he? Recently, Kim Yul has been absent frequently, which has already caused dissatisfaction from the Holed-Up Head Librarian. Moving Kim Yul's residence completely would send the wrong signal to him."

At these words, Silvia was taken aback.

"What the hell? Since when do you sound like an advisor?"

"That's because I am an advisor. You're the Head Maid, so you do the cleaning, cooking, and tea brewing."

"If cleaning the household is the maid's job, then cleaning you up should be my top priority..."

"The first thing you should clean is yourself. Shall I swallow you up?"

Before they could start measuring their killing intent against each other again, I quickly spoke.

"The advisor's words are worth considering. Someone I know well once said that if a Constellation harbors poison, all sorts of strange things can happen."

The Guardian Spirit snorted from behind, arms crossed. Ester, unable to see him, sighed and rested her chin on her hand.

"Yes, strictly speaking, the Holed-Up Head Librarian is no longer a Constellation, but..."

"He's still one of those who require caution and care. Even if it's not just for preventing dangers, I have a responsibility to him. You're right."

I nodded.

"Let's address that immediately. What's the next issue?"

"...Wouldn't it be a bit too burdensome for your elder, Lord?"

The tone was cautious.

Even the director, who had been listening silently, agreed with this.

"Can I handle it?"

With a voice tinged with suppressed emotion, the director spoke.

"Gong-Ja, I am weak. I can't use martial arts skills like Aura or Ki, and I can't use magic either. The only sword I know how to handle is a kitchen knife."

"And you weren't even that good with it."

I remarked.

The director smiled faintly, then continued in a slightly lighter tone.

"Right. Blades have always been difficult for me to handle. The flat side of a spoon was about the only thing I could manage without much trouble."

"The rice you mixed and the apples you peeled were delicious."

"Thank you... but the skills required to protect your house aren't those, are they?"

The director's voice grew heavy again.

It wasn't hard to see that the heavy stone pressing down on him was a profound sense of powerlessness.

'The director has seen how violence happens.'

The very first flower that was planted in this world was a friend that the director couldn't protect.

Moreover, as the master of this world, I was once a child that the director had to protect. There were many who targeted me. Even if we don't mention the Constellations, Pillars, or hunters from other worlds, a significant number of media outlets on the 1st floor were banding together to beat me down.

As Anastasia and I had discussed, this was necessary. If there's one thing I agree with the Tower Master on, it's that there are many people in the world who need a target to point their fingers at.

The Tower Master chose to become such a target out of his own will and necessity.

But the saints, the Pillars, would feel heartache seeing such a Tower Master.

A similar thing must be happening to the director. Even if you think you should live with the responsibility for yourself, can a parent's heart be so easily settled, reading critical articles about their child every morning?

I decided to start with what needed to be said first.

"Director, I'm fine."

The director's expression relaxed a bit.

I continued.

"And it's okay if you can't use a sword. What I expect from you isn't violence."

On the contrary.

I hoped the director would always keep his distance from it.

"I'll make sure you never have to hold a sword."

I put that into action.

First, I looked at Kim Yul.

"Mr. Kim Yul."

Kim Yul was also looking at me. Ever since he cut himself, the world reflected in his eyes seemed clearer.

I spoke to the world reflected in his eyes.

"Would you be able to protect the director and this garden?"

"I'll do my best."

Kim Yul responded immediately.

Looking down at the snowdrop flower he had been, and beyond that to the friend who stood across from it, Kim Yul declared.

"I'll protect what needs to be protected."

"Yeah."

I accepted his words... and drew the Holy Sword.

'Shiny.'

Since acquiring it in the Aegim Empire, I had never let go of the Goddess's Holy Sword, which had always been in my hand. I drove it into the center of the garden.

Light erupted.

[The Goddess of Protection manifests!]

The Goddess of Protection, Hwiya, revealed herself.

Wings made of light unfurled. The rusty sunsets seemed to whirl in the wind, dyeing the entire garden a crimson hue.

"Hwiya."

Though the flower was withered, it was still a flower. Though the red light dominated, the world originally full of blooming flowers lacked no color from beginning to end.

The only thing it lacked was brightness. All the petals were faded, drained of color, or thinly spread. Light filled such a place. Petals coated in pure white brilliance became distinct one by one. The flowers existed in this world not through twinkling, but through flickering.

"Yes, Hero."

"I want to entrust you with the care of this garden too. It would be great if you could assist Mr. Kim Yul."

Referring to the person she had once summoned and wielded, I continued.

"Would that be alright?"

The Goddess of Protection, Hwiya, looked at her old partner, who had torn her into five pieces and sealed her away. As when Leafanta Aegim was first mentioned, there was no resentment in her gaze.

"Sure."

But there was worry and concern.

Her gaze, holding both emotions, swept over Kim Yul and then settled on me.

"Would that be alright with you?"

I smiled bitterly.

"It's regrettable."

"That's right, you'll need to find a new sword. Have you considered which one...?"

"There is, but it's not just about the sword."

I bowed my head.

"Thank you for being with me all this time."

Hwiya smiled. Her smile was bright and pure.

"Why such grand words? It's not like we're parting forever."

"Well, that's true, but..."

"Then it's alright. I am, after all, a guardian."

The Goddess of Protection said, spreading her wings like a true goddess.

"I will protect your home."

Hwiya slowly turned to Kim Yul. The light from her gradually closing wings was no longer illuminating the entire world but was now focused solely on Kim Yul.

"I ask for your kindness once again, old Hero."

Like a stage actor facing the spotlight for the first time, Kim Yul faltered. A complex expression rippled across his face before settling.

"I should be the one saying that."

Just as the director and Kim Yul had a long story to tell, Kim Yul and Hwiya would also share a lengthy tale. Hwiya and the director could have their long conversations as well.

But that could happen at any time, not necessarily in this moment.

I turned to Ester.

"Advisor, I want to entrust you with the security of this place as well."

Ester, who had been looking at Hwiya and Kim Yul with a complex expression, hesitated and then looked at me.

"Me?"

"Why? Didn't you want to be a gardener? If it's in a garden you're protecting, then you'll be more powerful than—"

"Upon reflection, that seems like a rather embarrassing idea."

Thus, the world's light novel readership decreased by one. Ester, shaking her head like a Pomeranian shedding water from its fur, hesitated.

"I am... in many ways different from these two."

"That's exactly why."

"I suppose from your perspective, Lord. But please consider mine as well."

A former Demon King who brought down the empire established by Leafanta Aegim and destroyed the world guarded by the Goddess of Protection was desperate. Not even a cat resisting a bath could struggle more.

"I'm asking you."

".....Uh."

Ester hesitated, sighed, and shrugged her shoulders. Eventually, she let her arms fall.

".....If you commanded me, I might feel more at ease."

"I'm asking you."

"Understood... Yes. Gardener. Upon further thought, it doesn't seem too embarrassing... I have a village to take care of, so I'll be taking a lot of holidays, but well, an advisor should be at the family's main residence anyway... in any case."

Ester took a deep breath and then bowed slightly towards Hwiya and Kim Yul.

"Please take good care of me."

"Welcome."

Hwiya greeted her with flapping wings. Truly a dazzling goddess.

Perhaps it was because Leafanta Aegim had spared Hwiya's life, not just out of gratitude for old times. Kim Yul, too, nodded in welcome to Ester.

Their welcoming gestures seemed to make Ester even more uncomfortable. Like a snake placed on a snowy field, she twisted and turned before finding a target.

"Come join us."

Silvia, who had been watching Ester with a villainess-like smile, was taken aback.

"Eek. Me too? To be in this... this place that feels like it's going to drain my SAN (Sanity) points in real-time based on how long I stay?"

"If the Chamberlain isn't guarding the family's mansion, where else should she be?"

"Uh... I have a crucial mission to brew tea for the Silver Lily Duchess..."

"Shall I ask for your opinion? Brewing tea for her or cleaning this garden. Which do you think the Silver Lily Duchess would prefer more? To put it more plainly, which feels more like you're being screwed over?"

"Damn it..."

Silvia sighed.

Ester, with the greatsword resting on her shoulder, lifted her chin.

"But you were named after a flower, weren't you? Then shouldn't you belong in a garden?"

Silvia made a grunt. Then she grumbled back.

".....That's an old story."

"Even more fitting since it's decayed. Come on."

"Damn it....."

In the end, Silvia surrendered. She trudged over to stand beside Ester, looking just like one of the flowers that had sprouted in this world.

Okay.

With that settled, I turned back to the director.

"As you can see, others will be wielding the swords."

"....."

"Everyone here is in need of help."

It wasn't just about the flowers.

Excluding Hwiya, Kim Yul, Ester, Silvia, and others who would come from the King of Death's family were all in need of help. Shadows deepen with the depth of wounds, and only those wounded by the world can deeply engrave the doctrines of shadows within themselves.

"I hope you can help."

I spoke as the Vice-lord of the Demonic Heaven.

"Because that's something the director can do well."

The director's silence was brief.

His response, too, was like that of a friend, brief and to the point.

"I'll do my best."

With that, everything was in place.

[Deputies will be appointed to your world.]

Quietly, the declaration rang out.

[The 89th floor has been cleared!]

This place,

Where the rusty sunset is draped over the red sea.

Where petals, exhausted from enticing bees,

and leaves, never possessing such tricks,

droop and fall asleep.

The land guarded by the Goddess of Protection and the Demon King of Autumn Rain.

A garden tended by my mentor and his friend.

The resting place for my family to take root.

[From now on, the withered Flower Garden will become a sacred space that gathers wails from the heavens.]

[May fortune be with you all.]

And, the path to the 90th floor was laid out in my world.

---

As always, there's an epilogue to this story.

"No, no, no, no! This is too much, isn't it!"

The Holed-Up Head Librarian flapped his sleeves like a butterfly flapping its wings.

"I object! Firmly object! If Kim Yul leaves, who will take care of the books? I'm going too! I must!"

"Oh my! The Librarian is flapping about!"

"Out of the way! I'm going to be the first to take a shot this time!"

Beside the Holed-Up Head Librarian, the Assistant Writer from the 50th floor and the Librarian's stalkers were causing a commotion. What a mess.

As if adding a Shiba Inu to that mess, the manager of the cafe, the Medicine King, yelled out.

"Ah, if you're going to make a fuss, go outside! There's a limit to disrupting business!"

"Sorryyy..."

"Always these young ones. Eh. How come they're just like me when I was young..."

"But I've said it many times. There's not a single person here younger than you. When will you finally get that into your head?"

As the Librarian's stalkers faced off against the Medicine King and started growling at each other, it was yet another day's usual affair here.

The Holed-Up Head Librarian pushed his stalkers aside and looked at me. His eyes were filled with sorrow.

"Look at this. See the miserable state you've put me in."

"Strictly speaking, it's a mess you made for yourself."

Hamusutra was one of the few who could address me so informally. One would think he wouldn't be pleased to be treated similarly to Yoo Soo-Ha by me, but Hamusutra seemed somewhat appeased as he averted his gaze and grumbled.

"Hmm. Well, yes, but even so, taking Kim Yul away is too much, isn't it...?"

"Don't worry."

I stirred Hamusutra's frappuccino and handed it to him.

"Strictly speaking, you don't want to employ Kim Yul as a librarian. You just want to be with Kim Yul."

"Well, yes, but... uh... um? Ah, indeed. Then I could be one of the gardeners in that garden—"

"No, that won't work."

If I wouldn't let Raviel into my sanctuary for fear of the flowers becoming mere exhibits, there's no way I'd let this voyeur in.

"Then...?"

"I'm planning to link a path to my sanctuary in this library."

I briefly explained the structure I had in mind. As a high-ranking Constellation who had played around with floors in the Tower, the Librarian quickly understood.

"So... you mean to use this place as a sort of cafeteria?"

"More like a lounge."

Basically, it was like fitting out a building.

In that architectural plan, my sanctuary would be the garden set up on the rooftop. The 20th floor, where I originally resided, the paradise where Ester lived, and the 22nd floor where my teacher's grave was located, would become the floors leading up to that rooftop.

A tower within the tower.

Thus, this planetarium, where the Holed-Up Head Librarian resided, would serve as a lounge where gardeners and visitors could rest and recuperate.

"Hmm... in that case, I could see his face at least once a day."

"Right. Not bad, is it?"

"If I said I had no complaints, it would be a lie, but... I understand."

The Holed-Up Head Librarian glanced at Yoo Soo-Ha, who was wrapped around my neck, with a somewhat jealous look, then sighed.

Sipping the frappuccino I had handed him, Hamusutra had been silent until now but suddenly asked.

"Why exactly are you climbing the tower?"

It was a sudden question.

"To be honest, I've been curious since I heard you had reached the 80th floor."

"....."

"Kim Gong-Ja, you have proven everything you needed to. As a complete Constellation, you've corrected almost all the injustices in your tower to your liking."

The Holed-Up Head Librarian leaned his chin on his palms and gazed at me intently.

"Do you know what a Constellation in such a position usually does?"

"They stop challenging the tower?"

"Exactly. From this point on, they focus solely on gathering followers safely, increasing their divine power, and collecting items. If they see another world that seems easy to plunder, they might even join a raid."

The Holed-Up Head Librarian stirred his frappuccino with a straw.

"Then, when they feel there's no more content to explore or they're tired of living in rented spaces, they start building their own sanctuary. Climbing from the 81st floor to the 90th floor to create a sanctuary."

"Indeed."

"That's the difference between a top-tier Constellation and a regular one. Just that. Nothing more... but it's not like you can't live without your own house, right?"

The sounds of the Librarian's followers arguing with the Medicine King continued. Hamusutra glanced at them, then looked back at me.

"You could've spent the next 20 million years dressed in sweatpants, dipping fries in a shake, sucking your fingers afterward, and no one would've said a word, but you deliberately chose to challenge yourself. And I heard that because of that, you nearly died, or worse, ended up in a situation worse than death. Was it worth taking such a risk?"

Perhaps it was a natural question.

The Holed-Up Head Librarian looked deep into my eyes and asked.

"For the sake of becoming a Pillar?"

"Who did you hear that from...?"

"I still have a few connections left in the world, so I hear things, albeit annoyingly... Anyway, what about it? Or is it..."

Was it for the Tower Master? Even the Holed-Up Head Librarian seemed to keep those words within.

I said.

"In your opinion, wouldn't a me not climbing the tower be unlike me?"

"From a character-selling perspective, of course, it's better for you to climb the tower, but fans' feelings and reality are different."

He spoke calmly, then, ah, pressed his palms against his cheeks.

"Hmm. Of course, if you say here, [For you... For my fan, to make you happy, I decided to climb the tower...!] then I'd be overjoyed and faint right away—"

"I made a promise to someone."

The Holed-Up Head Librarian paused.

I told him.

"To climb the tower."

"....."

"If you've been paying close attention to my book, you'll know who I made that promise with."

I stood up.

The Holed-Up Head Librarian stared blankly at me, then his eyes widened suddenly. His gaze was directed at a man who, though invisible to him, was undoubtedly by my side.

"Indeed."

He murmured as if sighing.

"Indeed, so that was it."

That's right.

"Let's go."

With only the duct-tape-wrapped dagger at my waist, the man who had taught me swordsmanship since those days accepted my words.

"Let's move on."

The next step would be the 90th floor.

Only 10 floors left to the very top.

And only 9 floors left until the realm where the Sword Emperor had met his despair.

Chapter 383: Nine Keys (1)

---

Snip.

As if it were just any other day, hairdressing scissors crossed through the air.

"So, you're really planning to head straight for the 100th floor?"

"That's right."

I spoke, reflected in the large window.

Over my shoulder, the director sighed as he held the scissors.

"You could rest a bit longer before ascending."

"Hamusutra said the same thing. Or is it that Hamusutra is echoing you?"

"Either way, it's sound advice. Spending time together, it's natural to influence each other."

Hamusutra, Kim Yul, and the director had spent time together in the planetarium. Time being a two-way street meant influencing each other was inevitable, even for someone as significant as Hamusutra.

And so did I and the Guardian Spirit.

"Yes, I'm going up right away."

Guardian Spirit waited quietly beside me as I got my hair cut.

"Alright."

The director then focused more on his scissoring without further words.

Scissors.

"Now you truly have become a director."

The director frowned.

"If you're about to add, [Since you've become the manager of the garden, you're a director now,] I'd rather you didn't. I don't want to find out that the child I once cared for has become a grown man in such a manner."

"I just wanted to contribute to preventing global warming."

"This isn't Earth, you know."

Even as banter continued, the director kept cutting my hair... and then said,

"150 years ago, a journalist asked a mountaineer a question."

-Why do you want to climb Everest?

"It's not hard to guess why the journalist asked that question. It was similar to when journalists rushed to ask Marcus Callenbury why he was entering the tower a few years before."

-Why forsake safety when you can live comfortably as you are?

-Is there something promised to you in exchange for reaching the top?

-What drives you to challenge yourself?

-I'm just curious. Explain it to me.

"The mountaineer simply said this."

-Because it's there.

"Ah, that phrase. I've heard it before."

"Yes. When I was your age, it was a well-known saying. It spawned many parodies. About gaming because it's there, or ordering chicken because it's there. Various lame jokes were popular back then."

"The Earth must have been quite warm then."

"It was around the time when global warming was starting to take off."

The director's scissors snipped away a stray lock of hair.

As my hair was trimmed, the fallen strands scattered in the wind.

"Bringing up this story now, are you trying to ask me why I'm aiming for the 100th floor?"

"No, Gong-Ja. I don't really want to ask that."

As always, with a slightly grim expression, the director quietly spoke.

And then he added,

"Because you have the luxury to."

That was somewhat unexpected.

"Me?"

"You have a splendid home, don't you?"

As the director said, this place was indeed my home.

Not the sanctuary, the [Garden of Withered Flowers], but the mansion where I originally lived.

20th floor.

In terms of connection by stairs, it was one floor below the Garden of Withered Flowers, but in terms of connection to the Tower, it was 60 floors below.

"And you also have such a beautiful garden."

There was a reason for choosing to cut my hair in the non-sanctuary house.

I intended not to leave even a single grain of soil or a drop of water in the garden that wasn't needed by the flowers. Thus, my trimmed hair intermingled with dandelion seeds in the yard of my house, not the garden.

"Having a home means you have a fortress to protect yourself and your family. Having a flower garden means you have the luxury to fully care for and consider not just your family but others as well."

"....."

"Someone like you, with such luxury, must have a good reason to challenge yourself. You have the means."

"Luxury, you say."

"Only those with the luxury to spare can prepare for something new. Only those with the luxury to accept themselves can accept others. Only those who have everything in place can challenge something new. I have no doubts about someone capable of doing more."

Snip.

"Rather, I have doubts about those who can't challenge themselves."

Snip.

"Why did that person wander in the desert? Why did that child starve? Why."

Why indeed.

"So I don't wonder why Marcus Callenbury or Shawn McCallister dropped everything to enter. Similarly, I don't wonder why the Heaven that Gathers Wails aims for the 100th floor. I just,"

With a heavy sigh, the director continued.

"Can't help but wonder why Kim Gong-Ja, at the age of twenty, entered the Tower."

Hmm.

I twisted my head this way and that, checking the shape of my hair.

"Because the Tower is here... how about that?"

"That mountaineer ultimately failed to summit."

Snip.

A chill ran down my spine as the cold blade of the scissors grazed my skin.

"He stepped out of his tent into a blizzard for a moment and vanished without a trace. Not even his body was found, and his friends and family had to hold a funeral with an empty coffin. It wasn't until almost a hundred years later that his body was discovered."

"That's... new to me."

"People's words tend to spread wider and last longer than the people themselves."

Snip.

"Gong-Ja."

The director spoke in a soft voice.

"Why did you enter the Tower?"

The director, reflected in the mirror, looked straight at me.

"Was it really just because the Tower is here?"

---

At the crossroads where my sanctuary and the 90th floor met, the Staff of Time Immemorial greeted me.

"Welcome, King of Death. You're dressed refreshingly."

"Yeah."

"Your expression isn't as refreshing, though. What's wrong?"

If even this mage, who defaulted to a grumpy face since his defeat, said so, I must be quite obvious.

I wiped my forehead and said,

"No, just reminiscing about the past."

"Sounds like something an old man would say. You're at an age where you have nothing but days ahead, yet you speak like this?"

The Staff of Time Immemorial spoke, holding the staff in its mouth.

"No, should I say you have nothing but days left to die? Which do you think is correct?"

"If possible, I'd like to hear that only happy days are left for me."

"That's a nice thought, but the one who should tell you that isn't me."

True that.

"Let's go."

The Staff of Time Immemorial snorted and started walking ahead, leading the way.

I followed. We ascended the staircase that seemed like an umbilical cord connecting the floors.

As always, the fox was wrapped around my neck like a scarf, and the serpent bracelet clung to my wrist. And by my side floated the Sword Emperor.

The only place that felt empty was my waist, where the Holy Sword usually hung.

'Sword Emperor.'

-What?

The Sword Emperor responded immediately.

I asked both out loud and in my heart.

"What lies beyond this?"

The Staff of Time Immemorial didn't look back. The Sword Emperor didn't glance at me either.

But both answered simultaneously.

"The Tower Master was an artist."

-I'm a fighter.

Step.

"The Tower Master's life showed that she was a warlord, a politician, a noble, but equally a gladiator, an actor, an architect."

-You've seen me so far, haven't you? Pondering and measuring isn't my style. Sometimes my taste clashes with the world's, but eventually, my taste becomes the world's.

"She especially loved fugues."

-This tower is the same, Gong-Ja.

"In composing, melodies and rhythms are connected to create a piece, ensuring the start and end are connected, enjoying the different starting points converging at the same endpoint."

-If those nasty beings playing with memories tried their tricks while I climbed the Tower, their heads would've been crushed by me. Just like you did. You have to admit it, right?

Then.

Both spoke as if in unison.

"So."

-So.

"What lies beyond is an extension of what has been."

-Nothing new lies beyond.

The world began to blur.

As if mixing dozens of colors of Play-Doh, the distant ground below melted away first. The sky followed. It melted. The speckled sky eventually turned into countless grains of sand and poured down like a waterfall.

"Perhaps you could reach the 100th floor."

-I hear Grey Spider reached up to the 94th floor, right?

No.

It wasn't a waterfall.

"Anyone who has climbed from the 1st to the 90th floor could reach it."

-For her, starting from the 50th floor, it must have been hard to climb any higher.

It was a gigantic hourglass.

It resembled Mutia's sanctuary I once saw. An expansive desert spread far and wide. The distorted sky, like a mirage under the scorching sun, was due to the incredibly thick glass. In the center, a slow sand waterfall flowed, much like blood seeping from a serpent's heart.

I stood in the middle of the hourglass.

A familiar voice greeted me.

"Welcome, King of Death! Or should I say, the person who should now be called Wailing Heaven!"

I looked at the figure with a dumbfounded expression.

"Princess?"

"Yes! It's me! Long time no see!"

The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages greeted me with bouncy jumps. She was as lively as ever.

"It doesn't feel like it's been that long... Ah. Did you come to guide me?"

"Yes! Exactly."

The princess grinned, spun around on the spot, letting her hair fly, and then waved at the Staff of Time Immemorial.

"I've taken over from here, auntie. You've worked hard."

"Alright, alright. This old woman will take her leave."

"Yeah, yeah. Help out Miya if you're free."

"That kid doesn't like others meddling in her work."

"Auntie... that's exactly why you should help."

"Really now....."

The Staff of Time Immemorial retreated with a look of disgust but also a strangely satisfying smile. It seemed she had found the perfect stress relief.

Hmm.

"Advisor Gu Won-Ha sure has it tough..."

"Advisors are meant to suffer. Doesn't Wailing Heaven's advisor also suffer?"

"Maybe, but I think I've suffered more because of her."

"That's exactly it. Liu Bei must have thought of exploiting Zhuge Liang to the fullest when he had the chance."

Casually making a statement that would split fans of Shu into two, the Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages, with a chirp, pulled something out.

*E/N: Liu Bei was a Chinese warlord in the late Eastern Han dynasty who later became the founding emperor of Shu Han, one of the Three Kingdoms of China.

Zhuge Liang, courtesy name Kongming, was a Chinese statesman and military strategist. He was chancellor and later regent of the state of Shu Han during the Three Kingdoms period.

It was a small slate.

"That is....."

"Yes."

The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages grabbed both sides of the slate and lifted it with all her might.

"Wailing Heaven, I'll tell you what you need to do from now on."

The slate had nine holes in the middle.

"Collect the nine keys!"

The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages declared.

Chapter 384: Nine Keys (2)

---

Collect the nine keys.

Tilting my head at that declaration, I inquired,

"What keys are we talking about?"

"Hmm! Let me explain."

With a flick of her finger, the Princess conjured an image on the cascading sand waterfall, as if it were embroidered with platinum threads. The image resembled a cross-section of an anthill or a tree with countless sprawling roots.

"This is....."

"Yes! Wailing Heaven. It's a cross-section of your tower.

Looks quite different from this angle, doesn't it?"

Indeed, it was a side-on sectional view of the tower's map by layers.

Even during my days as a newbie Hunter, maps of the early floors circulated among hunters, and recently, the Black Dragon Guild and the Temple had collaborated on mapping efforts, so I recognized it easily.

The Princess, grinning, took up a baton.

"Let's skip the 'Basement 1st floor' where you were summoned before, and the 'Ground floor' where your homeland is located, and start from here."

Her baton tapped the tower's 1st floor drawn on the flowing sand.

"The 1st floor is the 'Refuge'."

Refuge.

"A forward base, a hub, a shelter, etc. Many terms could apply, but 'Refuge' fits best. A place that gives respite to those fleeing from something, a breakwater that ensures they are no longer harassed by what they've escaped from. That's the role of the 1st floor."

The baton then smoothly sliced across the 1st floor and moved sideways.

The tower's city of Babylon.

The baton lightly pressed on the depiction of the great river that flows through Babylon.

"Here, water flows. Rain falls. The water contains... um, well, some nutrients. Though colorless and odorless, it sustains life."

"....."

"But for those who feel merely surviving isn't quite living,"

The baton's tip ascended against the sand, pointing to the tower's 2nd floor.

"They can choose to become 'Warriors'."

The Princess's baton swept across the 2nd floor.

"Fruit from trees, timber, stone and ore from rocks, herbs and vegetables from plants. Defeating monsters like wolves and goblins yields meat, hides, items, and gold."

"Yes, I know."

"Right. You've walked this path yourself, but then again,"

The Princess tilted her head.

"Was all this really necessary?"

A sudden question indeed, but in a way, a very old one.

"Why not just give everything? Fruit, timber, ore, herbs, meat. Wouldn't it have been simpler to just provide everything on demand?"

"....."

"What do you think, Wailing Heaven?"

I pondered.

Not that it wasn't a valid question; what the Princess just mentioned was something many had wondered about in the tower's early pioneering days. It was one reason why cults related to the tower never ceased, as Bambolina had said.

"I suppose it's due to a lack of resources."

"Hmm."

"To meet the basic needs of so many people indefinitely... that would require vast resources. So, out of necessity....."

As I got to that point, I realized something.

Sighing as if to signal my realization, I said to the Princess,

"Indeed."

"Hmm?"

"Is it intentional?"

At my question, the Princess smiled slightly.

Pressing my forehead, I confessed,

"I might not fully understand yet, not being a complete Pillar, but if I had to answer..."

The Princess's smile deepened, as if to say, try answering as a tower Administrator-to-be.

"The Tower Master wants to be seen as the root of all evil. By deliberately placing threats like monsters and inciting trials, the Tower Master appears to refuse unlimited salvation, despite being capable, thus attracting criticism....."

No.

Wait. That's too ideological. There must be a more tangible reason.

"Having a visible enemy helps unite those who've fled to the tower, perhaps? ...Hmm. That doesn't quite fit either. Then..."

The Princess watched me with her hands behind her back, willing to wait as long as needed.

After much thought, I spoke frankly.

"I'm not sure, Princess. Why is it?"

"If."

The Princess began.

"Before your world became as hot as it is now. When the director who raised you was just your age, if the Guardian Spirit had been born in your country, what would have happened?"

I glanced at Guardian Spirit, who was snorting with his arms crossed. The answer came naturally.

"Ah... a lunatic?"

"And?"

"And, um... a bully? A gym owner? A fighter, perhaps?"

"Right."

The Princess nodded.

"He might have gone abroad to become a mercenary, but ultimately, that's about it. No more, no less."

"....."

"But Wailing Heaven, what if the Sword Emperor had been born in the ancient era?"

I glanced at the Sword Emperor.

And my answer flowed just as naturally.

"He would have been a hero."

"Not a king?"

"What king? That guy making laws and governing? People might have idolized him into forming a nation, but after the Sword Emperor's death, it would've fragmented. Maybe even during his lifetime."

"Hehe, exactly."

The Princess laughed. Standing with her hands behind her back, she kicked at a mound of sand, innocently.

"But wouldn't that be a more fulfilling life from the Sword Emperor's perspective than living as a fighter?"

"...Perhaps."

"In a world, an era where the age of warriors and heroes has ended, where sword-wielding heroes have given way to gun-toting armies, how would someone like the Sword Emperor be treated?"

An obstacle.

A maverick.

A madman.

A social misfit.

"The Sword Emperor himself wouldn't care."

Indeed.

"If someone pitied him, he'd look at them as if they were mad."

Likely.

"But would that truly be a fair world for the Sword Emperor?"

Yet somehow, it felt slightly heartbreaking.

"Every society must discard something to grow. Every civilization stands on countless discarded possibilities."

"So..."

"The Tower Master wanted to create a place that wasn't left behind by any era, at least a place with that potential."

Once more, the baton skimmed over the 2nd and 3rd floors.

"An era of warriors and heroes. A world where one's life is affirmed through the act of cutting."

The baton reached the 10th floor in its upstream journey.

"An era of priests and priestesses. A world where those cut off find solace."

The baton paused once at the 11th floor.

"Thus, if the 1st to 10th floors represent the 'Golden Age,' then the 11th to 20th floors correspond to the 'Silver Age.'"

"Silver..."

"You met the Aegim Empire here, right? In other towers, the 11th to 20th floors also encounter 'other worlds.'"

Other worlds.

"Completely alien entities. Places utterly disconnected from you from start to finish. ...Although, since it's still below the 50th floor, you face 'worlds that have already perished' rather than 'complete otherworlds.'"

The baton resumed its movement.

"An era of travelers. Exploring the ruins of fallen kingdoms, contemplating the lives of those people."

12th, 13th, 14th floors...

"An era of generals. An era of merchants. An era of soldiers..."

Ascending against the sand waterfall, the baton finally reached the 20th floor.

"Now, we enter the 'Iron Age.'"

"In our tower, it was the Grand Library."

"Yep. Hamusutra was akin to Zhuge Liang. Mother said he became more flavorful the more he was used."

Though it seemed rather pitiful, recalling Hamusutra's face magically dispelled any sympathy.

"What about other towers?"

"It's often Hamusutra as well. Next are Mutia and Mahos. Ah. Occasionally, Babbit takes charge, and once, even the fox around your neck did."

"I was tempted to object to Babbit's involvement, but 'heh, a fox, you say,' I'll opt for a nonchalant response."

"Yep, yep. And I'll choose not to respond."

The Princess kept her word, moving on to explanation.

"In the Golden Age, they learn the cost of their own survival. In the Silver Age, they learn how to interact with others. In the Iron Age, they finally meet the king of their own world."

"King..."

The voice of Anastasia, who had once asked if I was ready to be our king, briefly crossed my mind.

"So, from there, only the high-rankers can participate in the conquest."

"Right. If you wish to proclaim yourself the king of a world, you must first represent that world."

"In that sense, the Sword Emperor also became a kind of king."

-Kid. You just called me 'Sword Emperor' again. Does that 'Emperor' sound like a mere 'subject' to you?

Guardian Spirit interjected. And I responded even before his words fully registered in my brain.

"Do you know the Hanja for 'mad dog,' Emperor? I didn't either until I looked it up once."

-You managed to find a Hanja that's likely to display as ■, just like your head, in Unicode characters.

"So it would be written as Sword■. Sounds like fodder for speculation."

-I really want to beat you until you turn into actual mochi...

I awkwardly scratched the back of my head.

The Princess waited until our banter ended, then continued,

"And in the 30th floor range... the 'Bronze Age.' Here, you all..."

"End up with children."

The Princess smiled faintly.

"Yeah. Though most towers interpreted it simply as gaining a 'Below.'"

I bowed my head, reminded of the Grey Spider.

But I seemed to grasp the structure.

"In the Golden Age, focusing on oneself. In the Silver Age, on others. In the Iron Age, on what's above. In the Bronze Age, on what's below."

"Right. And then there's the 40th floor. The Stone Age."

The Stone Age.

"Here, you all become 'the ones being evaluated.' I don't need to explain further, do I?"

"Yeah. I've already skimmed through it once when voting last time."

"Right. This way, the 1st to 49th floors form one cycle. So, the next cycle repeats one layer deeper. Mother loved music."

As the Staff of Time Immemorial had said, the Princess's baton, swishing, pointed to the 50th floor.

"However, from this cycle onward, a more aggressive meaning is added. The 50th floor functions not just as a refuge but a full-fledged 'Base,' a 'Forward Operating Base,' and from the 60th floor on, you start clashing with other worlds in earnest."

"The 70th floor was the underworld... Indeed. That too, in some sense, is 'Above.'"

"Yep. You probably know by now what the 80th floor and above entail."

"Yes."

I nodded.

"I understand... and now I see why cleared floors remain in place, accessible to others. To ensure no era disappears."

"Exactly."

"Your explanation is fascinating, but I still haven't heard about the most crucial thing."

I looked straight at the Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages and said,

"So, what exactly are the nine keys you told me to gather?"

"All the hints are in what I've said so far!"

The Tower Master's daughter beamed, spinning around.

"Wailing Heaven, reflect on the worlds you've passed through. Examine them. Look at the traces you've left while climbing the tower, the path you've lived until now."

Eyes resembling the Tower Master's, yet distinct in their violet hue, gazed at me.

"The keys to the 100th floor lie right there."

"Indeed."

And then I finally understood.

"From the 90th to the 99th floor, it's not about ascending..."

"Yeah."

The Princess Who Strolls Through Mirages snapped her fingers. The sand waterfall parting in the middle of the 90th floor revealed a staircase.

But this staircase was not leading upwards.

"It's time to start [descending]."

Chapter 385: The Garden of Time (1)

---

The curtain of sand parted left and right, revealing stairs on which I began to descend slowly.

Thud, thud.

The material of the stairs was unknown, but they sturdily supported me. With each step I took, the sound of me being propelled back resonated through the air.

The place where I had conversed with Princess was on the 90th floor.

Naturally, below that was the 89th floor, which was my sanctuary.

"....."

A Garden of Withered Flowers. I set foot in that place.

Servants of the King of Death family, assigned as gardeners, were wandering around. All were dressed sharply in uniforms designed by the exclusive tailor of the Ivansia Duchy, woven meticulously by the mermaids of the Aegim Empire. In their hands were gardening tools such as shears, shovels, and watering cans.

‘Eek.’

Upon seeing Silvia approaching with garden shears, I hastily hid behind a rock.

-King of Death, what are you doing?

Princess asked, looking at me as if she had seen something curious.

I scratched the back of my head, feeling awkward.

-It’s nothing. Just thinking how embarrassing it would be to come down so soon after getting all dressed up and even having my hair cut... Oh. I stopped mid-sentence and shut my mouth.

-Oh... Hm? The state of my voice...?

What came out of my mouth was a mere whisper, as if only my lips moved, or the kind of sound you'd imagine in your head, barely audible, as if it wasn't there at all.

-Uh....

It wasn't just that.

Stepping back a bit, I realized that I couldn't hear my own footsteps.

-Huh?

Even after stamping my feet a couple of times, it was the same.

Until just a moment ago, the floor returned the sound of my weight with a thud, thud, but now there was no sound at all.

-Heh.

I then did a standing jump on the spot.

Neither the sound of the jump nor the thud when landing could be heard.

It wasn't just sound; not a single grain of sand or a leaf moved.

-Could it be?

-Yes. That's exactly it.

Princess grinned widely. Only then did I realize that her voice and movements also had no effect on the surroundings.

And so, I understood.

-Are Princess and I in the same state as the Sword Emperor?

-Yes! Exactly.

Princess nodded. Feeling intrigued, I twisted my body this way and that, then looked at Silvia approaching me.

-And that means....

“Sigh.”

Silvia sighed right in front of my nose.

“It's been roughly 2 hours since the Lord went up.”

Just as expected.

Silvia was completely unaware of my presence!

“It's driving me crazy. Really, what's with the rush to go up as if there's something to gain from it.”

Sitting on the ground, Silvia grumbled as she jabbed the soil with her planting spade.

Someone responded to Silvia's words.

“Ugor, Head Maid. What if someone hears and thinks you're talking behind their back?”

Uburka, dressed as a gardener, came walking with a large bucket on his bald head and spoke up.

Silvia shrugged her shoulders.

“Ha. There’s absolutely no one listening aside from you. After all, I've made sure of that much, so I can afford to talk behind their back.”

“Are you so sure about that?”

“Absolutely. I’ve been a Lady twice at Sormewin Academy, even managed to get one over on the Duchess of Ivansia. And what does that tell you? That I'm as sharp as they come.”

Silvia boasted with an air of arrogance.

‘I’m right here listening to you, though.’

It was a moment as pitiful as Silvia herself, but it also meant my stealth ability was functioning perfectly.

‘Anyway, this is interesting.’

I circled around Silvia and Uburka.

I walked around, stood on my hands and walked, hopped around, and even danced the Cossack dance.

The Guardian Spirit made a face as if it was embarrassed for the first time.

-Zombie... Why are you drooling like a yellow dog in front of a charcoal-grilled rib bone?

-I appreciate your observation. When I was learning Aura, you did the very same thing. I felt exactly the same way you're feeling now.

-Is that so, you little... I didn't realize. Now that I know, I'm deeply reflecting on it, but that's beside the point. Just because I did it, doesn't mean you should do the same. It's always the younger generation and disciples who have the opportunity to break the cycle of evil.

-I wanted to break the chain of evil too... But I wasn't strong enough. A monster living deep within me, a snake coiled around my heart, kept whispering to me... [Do the same. Are you just going to take it? Do it now. This is your chance to pay it back...] I kept succumbing to the devil inside me. In other words, that's my incompetence and inability, so to speak....

-You win.

-Victory achieved.

Even as we exchanged such banter, Uburka and Silvia showed no signs of noticing us.

At this point, even I started to feel a bit awkward.

-Princess, Sword Emperor. So, what should we do now?
Where is the key?

-Hmm, why not take a look around the places that come to mind?

Princess suggested with a grin.

Hmm.

‘Hearing that with such a face makes me a bit uneasy....’

I suppressed my unease.

Leaving Uburka and Silvia, who were still chatting away, I started walking.

-Where are you going, Wailing Heaven?

-Oh, well... You said to check out the places that come to mind, right? That's what I'm doing.

-You're so active! Yep, yep. That's good. Very good.

Although that was also a disconcerting comment, I continued walking, holding back my feelings.

First, I thought of visiting the director.

---

When I arrived, the director was just giving instructions to Kim Yul.

“Mr. Kim Yul, Please gather the gardeners.”

“Alright.”

Following the director's orders, Kim Yul summoned the gardeners. Ester was the first to rush over, and the Goddess of Protection flew down with a flap of her wings. Silvia and Uburka, who had been lazing around in a corner, had no choice but to come and stand before the director.

The director spoke.

“Hello. I've taken charge of managing this garden.”

The director began speaking in his characteristic calm voice.

“I am quite inexperienced.”

"....."

“Just calling you all here like this, no, even thinking of holding a regular meeting... Some of you may find it displeasing. In those moments, just think, ah, he's an old man... No, not even old compared to you all. Just think of me as someone lacking and pity me, I would appreciate it.”

The gathered people showed little reaction to his words. More accurately, it wasn't the kind of reaction that was outwardly visible.

Just like me.

-Director....

I murmured with a lump in my throat.

Of course, the director didn't notice me. He just continued talking to the people in front of him.

“As you may know, Gong-Ja has ascended to the next floor today.”

"....."

“I’m barely a rookie, not even worthy of being called a hunter. If you put me on the 2nd floor, I probably wouldn’t make it back alive. So, I don’t know what the 90th floor is like. Does anyone here know?”

At that question, someone raised their hand.

It was Ester.

“I know a very little about the 99th floor. I can't speak in detail due to the contract with the tower....”

“Is it dangerous?”

“...Yes, extremely.”

Ester replied.

The director took off his glasses and pressed his nose bridge with his thumb and forefinger before speaking.

“Can you return?”

“If the Lord decides to come back, he could do so immediately.”

Ester replied and then slightly bowed her head.

“However, in that case, as a general rule, you can’t attempt it again. That’s why most of the distinguished Constellations are stuck without ascending to the 100th floor.”

“I see....”

The director sighed lightly.

“It’s somewhat relieving to know that he can come back if he chooses.”

“Yes, I think so too.”

“But, that boy will definitely not return.”

The director's sigh grew heavier.

Ester, the Goddess of Protection, and even Uburka sighed in a similar manner... What's with this united front of the King of Death family?

“He was quite a stubborn child since he was young.”

The director said.

Silvia perked up her ears.

“What was he like?”

“Chamberlain, I sense something ominous from your curiosity.”

“No, no, advisor. Aren’t you seeing me in too negative a light? I’m hurt. I’m just curious about what kind of person our family’s head is. And you, advisor, don’t you also look very curious?”

“I, as a advisor, wish to know more about the Lord.”

These vassals....

“I’m also curious. Ugor. What was daddy like as a child? Or did he even have a childhood?”

This son....

“Everyone seems curious about Gong-Ja. Naturally, they would be.”

The director smiled wryly and put on his glasses.

Most of the family members, probably, or rather, definitely, were eager to delve into my dark history, their eyes gleaming brightly as they looked at the director. However, the director proved that he wasn't a specialist in child care for nothing over the decades.

“Let's continue this story at the next assembly.”

“Ah.”

Just when their curiosity was piqued, the vassals made a sound of disappointment as the story was cut off.

“Take your time. Please wait patiently.”

The director said with a smile.

“We'll be seeing each other's faces here for a long time.”

With that, the assembly ended. Watching the gardeners disperse with regretful faces, I raised my hand to wipe my forehead.

-I need to get out of here quickly... preferably today.

-Hmm. Even so, you don't want your dark history to be exposed right in front of you, huh?

-Yes, yes. So... uh, the key?

I looked around, but nothing caught my eye.

I even checked the director's pocket just in case, but it was the same.

-...There's nothing here?

-Seems like it's not here.

Princess said with a bright smile, which also triggered a sense of unease.

Then, the Sword Emperor's voice rang out.

-Zombie.

-Yes?

I turned towards the Sword Emperor.

And I saw him looking at me with a pitiful expression.

-Cheer up.

Uh....

-Sword Emperor, what does that expression mean?

-What do you think?

-It's shitty....

-Yeah....

-Hey, wait a minute. Get angrier or something... What's with that expression? Are you upset because I played a prank earlier? If that's the case... no, really, why that face! You should at least mock me, what's with this...

The Sword Emperor remained silent.

He just looked at me with a face that seemed to pity something.

‘This unease is creeping up on me like the smell of manure from a dungheap....’

Ugh.

I clapped my hands together with a smack and, after calming my breathing, began to walk.

-Anyway, it's not around the director, that much is clear. Hmm. Then it must be there.

My sanctuary is a world of its own, but since some parts were newly created, it wasn't too vast. I thought that if I searched the areas that came to mind one by one, I would find the key or whatever it was....

To put it bluntly, I was mistaken.

---

My sanctuary, the Garden of Withered Flowers.

Sitting crouched on the seashore where the red waves rolled in, I spoke with a weary face.

-I was wrong.

I wasn't sure if my face really looked weary. After all, my reflection didn't appear on the surface of the sea.

And it wasn't just because the sea in my sanctuary was red. I had also set up a greenhouse for flowers that needed warmth, but my figure didn't reflect in the glass of that greenhouse either.

-Keuh. You're quick to notice, zombie.

The Sword Emperor sat down next to me, flicking his fingernails.

-To realize that in just about [a week].

That's right.

Since I entered this place, the 89th floor, or rather, what should be called the 91st floor, a whole week had already passed!

-Why isn't there a single clue anywhere!?

I exclaimed with the fury of spitting fire... Did I exclaim? Damn it. In this place where I couldn't even use my real voice, even that felt ambiguous.

It was like my very existence was becoming ambiguous, akin to the expression that a seal or a Shiba Inu usually has!

-I thought there would be something next to the director. Or maybe near the Heavenly Demon's flower, the first Silver Bell flower I planted, the surroundings would start sparkling or something. But this is... Do you know how I feel right now?

-[It's like being dropped in a test map where event processing hasn't been done.]

Princess said as she jumped next to me.

-That's how some climbers put it.

-Who is that climber?

-Mahos.

The very Warhorse of the Eternal Plains.

-That person talks like that....

-Mm. Since Wailing Heaven doesn't like treating the inside of the tower like a game, you might get angry at that analogy....

-Yes, no, no. I get the feeling. Sword Emperor, you know too, right?

-Of course, I know, zombie. How could I not?

The Sword Emperor lay back, supporting his head with his interlocked fingers.

Above, the sky tinged red by the broken sunset had square clouds drifting by.

-I've been going through that hell for 140 years.

Chapter 386: The Garden of Time (2)

---

140 years.

I had heard of a similar span of time before.

-You once mentioned enduring 130 years alone during a debate with your master... Was it about this?

-Ah, exactly that.

Such a carefree voice it was.

It felt as though a breeze was leaking from my heart as I listened.

-My goodness. So, Sword Emperor, you...

[Ah, no. Suddenly, the thought that I too could fail at around the 99th floor crossed my mind.]

A conversation I had with the Sword Emperor in the Heaven of Truth flashed through my mind.

[Sword Emperor, but even someone like you died at the 99th floor.]

He had reacted peculiarly to those words.

[Hmm. Well, death...]

I remembered him repeating that.

And the subsequent exchange that followed.

[What's on the 99th floor?]

At that time, the Sword Emperor hadn't given a straightforward answer.

On the surface, he said, 'I just don't want to tell you,' but there had to be more to it than that.

[Can't you tell me now?]

To that question, the Sword Emperor had responded:

-Let's take a walk.

I blinked.

Before I knew it, the Sword Emperor had risen from his seat and was looking at me with the same expression as before.

-Uh....

-Follow me, kid.

And the Sword Emperor started 'walking' just like before.

"....."

Since entering this stage, which should be called the 91st floor, my body had lost its weight. The world no longer tried to hold me, and no matter how hard I stomped, no sound of footsteps echoed.

It felt as though I had been isolated from the world.

Thus, over this week, I gradually stopped performing the act of [walking]. Floating around aimlessly, just as the Guardian Spirit usually did, was more comfortable.

-Mahos mentioned it seemed like you're experiencing TCL.

The Gong-Jass said.

-I'm not exactly sure what TCL means, but I have a rough idea.

With gravity not applicable in this place, all physical forces lost their meaning. If I wanted, I could even pass through floors or walls.

Thus, I realized how difficult the act that the Sword Emperor was performing, this 'natural walking,' truly was. I had felt it was a tremendous skill in the Heaven of Truth, but now that I was in the same situation, I fully understood.

-What are you doing? Aren't you coming?

The Sword Emperor glanced at me casually, as if merely looking back during a leisurely walk.

I suddenly realized this was an important moment.

-Just a moment, please.

Instead of aimlessly floating, I said that and gathered my thoughts.

First, I placed my soles on the ground. There was still no sensation of contact, but I tried my best to [stand up] naturally.

-Hmm.

The Sword Emperor patiently waited. He neither urged me on nor offered advice.

Yet, I immediately realized that what I had done was not standing but something bizarre.

-Just a bit longer.

-Take your time.

-Yeah.

I pondered in earnest.

‘How do you stand up?’

Even to me, it sounded like a ridiculous thought.

But then, a stronger conviction seized me.

‘This is important.’

This moment was significant.

‘To stand... first, put your soles on the ground. Then the ground supports you... But now, there’s no ground to support me. So, if that’s the case...’

A sensation of fluffy masses floating around my head.

A problem that seemed graspable yet remained elusive ensnared me.

I took a deep breath... Did I breathe?

‘Of course, that too was just the semblance of breathing.’

I focused my mind.

‘Right now, I am virtually a ghost. Naturally, there’s no [air] for me to inhale. And if that’s the case...’

At that moment, immediately following that thought, another question arose.

‘Wait. If there’s no [air], how can I [hear] anything?’

I realized it was very strange.

In sci-fi movies, a common point of critique is the loud explosions in the vacuum of space.

‘Strange.’

When speaking with the Guardian Spirit or the Gong-Jass, who are on the same level as me, it felt similar to imagining sounds. However, voices of people like Silvia or the director sounded just like normal voices....

‘Sound is transmitted through the vibration of air... But right now, there’s nothing like air to affect me. So, I shouldn’t be able to hear anything. That means...’

Upon realizing this, silence enveloped me.

-.....

It was a silence akin to being in space, or perhaps, even more ancient, a time before time and space existed, where nothing held meaning.

-Hmm.

The Sword Emperor, now with arms crossed instead of behind his back, faintly smiled.

However, that smile was merely a fleeting thought in my mind, not disturbing the silence I was experiencing.

I was utterly captivated by this pristine moment.

‘Pristine.’

Then, I realized that, too, was odd.

‘It can’t be white, for the same reason, it can’t be black.’

This wasn't about the abstract notion that silence can't be colored.

It was more specific and fundamental.

'How am I [seeing] this scenery right now?'

Color is a wavelength of light.

Just as sound requires air to propagate and any sound needs air to spread, to [see] something, [light] must exist beforehand.

'But I'm unaffected by anything right now. Not by gravity or by any reaction force. No physical forces affect me.'

Is light special, an exception?

Impossible. Although light might be categorized as a special attribute in games, it's just one aspect of physical phenomena.

As someone who wielded a Holy Sword named Shiny, I was well aware of this fact.

‘Then, like how I shouldn’t be able to hear anything, I shouldn’t be able to see anything either....’

Upon feeling this, light vanished.

-.....

Complete darkness. A pure absence of light engulfed me.

When I was born, Earth was an incredibly radiant star.

Cities were everywhere. Just a short walk from one city led you directly to another. Although the population had peaked and was slowly decreasing, the number of buildings was on the rise. It was as if the cities, leaving the people behind, were frantically breeding among themselves.

Each of the increased number of buildings overflowed with light. Even after people left, the light remained like a debt. While the eerie ghost towns, the dark ruins, should have made more sense, somehow that logic didn’t apply.

Some called it a singularity. But many more knew it was merely the limitless proliferation of cancer cells.

[The night sky used to be much darker than it is now.]

The director had said, but as a child, I couldn't imagine such a landscape. Throughout my life, the night sky was always shrouded in a murky haze, shimmering in purple.

[This star is sick with fever.]

So, the first darkness I saw was not in the night but in the water.

And even more so, in the hearts of people.

-It used to be like that.

I murmured without realizing.

-This is darkness.

True darkness was not black. It was merely devoid of anything.

Blankness.

Emptiness.

Thus, it could feel blindingly white or unfathomably black, but it was certainly neither.

Nothingness. I gazed at a world yet unfilled.

-It's beautiful.

-Yes, Gong-Ja.

The Sword Emperor's response was felt from somewhere.

-What's filled can only be emptied, making it beautiful. Similarly, what's empty can only be filled, making it lovely.

I turned towards the direction from which I felt his response.

-Fool. Do you realize the ridiculous thing you're doing?

-Indeed.

I groaned.

-I don't have a head right now.

-Right. But turning your head? That's not bad, but doing it unconsciously makes it no different from before you saw this darkness.

The Sword Emperor spoke, with his robe fluttering— no, that couldn't be sound— saying...

-Move knowingly. That's the only way to move correctly. Be aware and feel. That's how you can truly understand.

I nodded.

No.

First, I created [myself].

-I... Kim Gong-Ja.

Physically about twenty-five years old.

The time I actually had to endure... roughly 10,000, no, about 10,000.

‘No, that’s not it.’

[Approximately], [roughly], [about], none of those would do.

Precisely.

-.....

I thought about myself... imagined myself.

From birth to this moment, Kim Gong-Ja from the beginning to now, recalling without addition or subtraction.

-.....

A task that made my consciousness fade.

It was not an easy task.

[The voices from the tower... not automatically generated by the system, but could it be... manually done?]

[Yes. Manual work.]

But it was not impossible.

[Gong-Ja, even if events occur simultaneously for you, for me, it's just work that can be tackled one by one... Inefficiency arises only when time and space are limited... The concept of inefficiency does not exist.]

‘Advisor Gu Won-Ha.’

I thought about the character I once inhabited and the tasks she handled. Compared to that, recalling my own life was trivial.

‘Sand... Fox.’

Even the moments when the fox tampered with my memories were now a reference.

Not only that.

‘Netherworld.’

The space I reached upon death resembled this place.

‘Sanctuary.’

The experience of filling an empty world when I first built my sanctuary was quite useful in many ways.

And above all.

‘Master.’

The season that was too white and this darkness had something in common.

Embraced by darkness, I recalled myself... imagined... created... thought... and then.

Eventually, I opened my eyes.

-.....,.....,.....

I breathed.

The temperature, contours, direction, pitch, volume of my breath, all of it was perceptible.

In every detail.

Feeling the breath I exhaled, my neck, yes, I had a neck right now— shivered.

-Ah, ah... Um....

Saliva flowed from my lips.

I realized I lacked the vocabulary to describe this sensation.

It was simply a lack of experience. Despite dying so often, living countless lives in place of others, I couldn't adequately describe this sensation.

I couldn't intuit the state of my own body.

Not because it wasn't perceptible, but because it was too vividly felt.

-Sensation is supposed to distinguish between oneself and the outside, but overly vivid sensations blur that boundary.

Once.

Somewhere.

-Remember well.

The Sword Emperor's voice reached me.

-That is what it means to [see].

Thump.

With the sound of my heartbeat, the darkness faded.

Light burst forth— the dam broke— the boundaries of the world, seared by the scorching light from afar, collapsed. And just like that, the darkness faded.

-Yes.

Thus, I found myself back in my sanctuary, the Garden of Withered Flowers, the place corresponding to the 80th to 89th floors, which is also the 91st floor.

The Sword Emperor, still with his arms crossed, welcomed me.

-Let's take a walk.

As if suggesting the same thing he had just a moment ago, or rather, certainly, it was something that had just happened.

-Yeah.

Shaking my still dazed head, I nodded.

-Let's walk.

Slowly, I extended my foot towards the ground, towards the Sword Emperor's side.

Thud.

I stepped.

Thud.

I started walking with the Sword Emperor.

Thud!

Chapter 387: The Garden of Time (3)

---

Having left the Garden of Withered Flowers, the Sword Emperor slowly meandered.

Beneath the gradually setting sun, among those who lay like flowers in their eternal slumber, the Sword Emperor spoke.

-Nicely done.

Instead of retorting with some nonsensical preamble, I responded.

-Thank you.

Instead of asking why I was being so agreeable, wondering if I'd eaten something odd, the Sword Emperor said.

-Even the soil here seems dead, which is nice.

-.....

-On the day I awakened my ki, I placed a grain of soil on my palm and observed it closely. When I concentrated my senses of sight and hearing, I realized soil is a rather noisy entity. On that tiny grain, inside it, many beings were bustling and competing.

The Sword Emperor crouched and gently caressed the rotten soil with the tips of his fingers.

Though his touch merely grazed the surface of the earth, a gust of wind scattered the grains of soil, creating a scene as if the ground was tenderly caressed by the Sword Emperor's hand.

-I saw and heard more that day than I ever had before.

-.....

-But the soil here is exceptionally quiet. And perhaps that silence is precisely what the flowers here need.

The Sword Emperor straightened his back and turned to look at me.

-Even before I experienced that true silence, I was amazed that you had already created such a place.

This time, I refrained from speaking back.

I merely nodded silently once.

-Thank you.

-Right.

For a moment, we continued our walk in silence.

The area we strolled through was known as the [Summer Section]. As Ester, with her hands clasped, prepared to summon rain in this place where the air was tepid like breath under a blanket, I remarked.

-This too, is wonderful.

-Yeah.

I nodded in agreement.

Passing by the weeping Ester, the Sword Emperor said:

-Gong-Ja.

-Yes.

-Did I ever tell you that if you can't reach the 99th floor, one day, Marcus the gramps might ascend in your stead?

Of course, I remembered his words.

-Do you also recall what I added to that?

Naturally, I remembered.

-That saying "instead" is ridiculous. Sir Sword Saint isn't my substitute.

The Sword Emperor nodded.

-Despite that, I added that I believed you would understand what I meant by it.

Indeed.

-So.

The Sword Emperor asked.

-What do you think I meant by saying that?

-It's something I've thought about numerous times.

Thus, my answer came easily.

-Was it simply encouragement, telling me to cheer up because you believe in me? Or was it a consideration, suggesting that it's okay for me to rest if things get tough because Sword Saint Marcus will handle it better?

-Neither, I presume.

Walking side by side with the Sword Emperor, I looked at him.

Before I knew it, my steps had become as natural as the words flowing from my mouth.

-Because I also remember what you added next.

『Honestly, you can fail.』

『.....』

『Faith is the belief that both parties will give their best. And the best is not determined by the other, but by oneself. Thus, a trusting relationship means each decides on their best and accepts the other's decision. That's all there is to it. That's all.』

-The important point isn't the permission to fail.

-It's the part where you explained what [faith] means right after saying you believe in me.

Therefore,

I was able to respond.

-[Either is fine.] ...That must have been the meaning.

-Whether I overcome this trial, or become an eternal prisoner of the desert in failure. Whether Sir Sword Saint ascends the 99th floor bearing my will, or he too meets an unexpected disaster and becomes a visitor never to return. You meant that it truly didn't matter which it was.

The Sword Emperor did not halt his steps. Much like in the Heaven of Truth, his pace quickened instead.

However, unlike those times when I had to grit my teeth and run to catch up, I could now follow by his side and continue my words.

-And it's not because you don't believe in me. Nor is it because you lack faith in the Sword Saint.

Thus, I continued.

-You believe in me.

And just as much, you believe in some old man who abandoned everything he had achieved to enter the tower.

-You believe in Sir Sword Saint.

And just as much, in a young man who fled to the tower in his youth and lived in seclusion in an alleyway on the first floor.

-You believe in the Grey Spider.

And just as much, in the resistance trampled by the Magic Tower.

-You believe in the Assistant Writer.

And just as much, surprisingly, in a petty villain who harassed the resistance, complained about the Mage Tower, and sought to satisfy his lust for power, even believing in a child like Charumu.

-You often say you're great. Sometimes, you boast so much I feel like hitting you. But there's a difference between your arrogance and that of the Flame Emperor.

It wasn't just about the Sword Emperor being truly great and the Flame Emperor not.

Even the Flame Emperor before regression was certainly a remarkable person. Whether it was the Sword Emperor, the Flame Emperor, or even myself, if we said we could do something, we would do it; if we said we would undertake something, we accomplished it.

But there was a crucial difference.

-The Flame Emperor believed [only he was special].

-That only he could do it. That he was unique. That only he could achieve it, and therefore, others couldn't possibly do the same... That was the driving force behind the Flame Emperor.

I looked at the Sword Emperor.

-But you, Sir Sword Emperor. If anything, you believe [you too are special].

In other words.

-You could do it. You had the potential to be special. There was no reason others couldn't do what you were capable of.

Thus.

-In a way, you believe in [everyone in this world].

So, that's why you said it back then.

-If not me, then the Sword Saint. If even the Sword Saint fails, then Anastasia or the Grey Spider. If they can't do it, then someone currently unknown to us will eventually reach the 99th floor. You believe that.

-Everyone has potential.

By the time we passed Ester, some time had elapsed. We had been swiftly walking through this garden ever since.

Over the fields.

Over the mountains.

Above the sea.

-Those who will make it, will make it. Those who won't, won't. People never change... That's something one might say only when their life has been too short and their perspective too narrow.

Thus, in the distance, we faced the land where the red rain fell.

-If it doesn't make sense to say, [That person could do it, but you can't], then naturally, the opposite, [I could do it, but others can't], is equally nonsensical.

Indeed. We had seemingly traversed the entire world together.

-That's a fair attitude.

The raindrops pierced through us and drummed on the ground.

-After all, haven't you always been like that as you looked at the crimson— the requiem for nameless deaths.

For the first time, truly able to [see] in the deepest sense, the scenery that unfolded was startlingly vivid. Rather than falling from above, the rain seemed to rise from below, gradually ascending.

-You sometimes reminisce about the days spent in that small room, saying,

『How did I end up here?』

-Others, upon seeing you during your times of collecting newspaper clippings about Yoo Soo-Ha, would click their tongues and say,

『What kind of idiot is this?』

『Nothing good will come out of someone like that.』

『I should never end up like that.』

-Yet...

As if walking through the rain was like stepping into water, where the positions of air and water seemed reversed, and red bubbles endlessly burst around us

-Here you are now.

My heart throbbed.

-People change. Given even the smallest opportunity, they transform. Isn't that what you've been proving over and over, day after day?

It was like the time I received praise from the director for the first time as a child.

-Was that all there was to it? Even the Grey Spider, who lived unchanged for a thousand years, changed.

-.....

-Because of you? Of course. But was it something only you could have done?

Certainly, that could not be interpreted purely as a compliment.

Depending on how one took it, there was ample room for a malicious interpretation. It could be seen as the typical elder's reprimand, questioning why you can't be like me, or paradoxically, declaring one's own uniqueness.

However, I knew that wasn't the intent behind the Sword Emperor's words.

-Perhaps that's why the first skill I received upon entering the tower was this.

In the absence of malice, when words bear no hidden motives and serve purely as speech, the Sword Emperor's words conveyed their literal meaning.

-Skill Card Open.

The Sword Emperor raised his hand. From within the tattered robes, a skill card slid out.

On that skill card, it was written:

+

[I Can Become Just Like You]

Rank: F

Effect: You can see all the skills possessed by your opponent.

*However, an opponent who has been defeated by you can copy one of your skills, making it their own. Opponents who have already been defeated by you once are excluded from this skill's effect. The skill to be copied is chosen at random.

+

I, as if spellbound, raised my hand.

-Skill Card Open.

I pulled out the first skill I had acquired and looked at it.

+

[I Want to Become Just Like You]

Rank: S+

Effect: Automatically activated when killed by an enemy. You copy one of the skills of the enemy that killed you and make it yours. You may not copy from an opponent you've already copied from. The copied skill is selected randomly.

*However, you will die!

+

The two cards touched.

An F-rank skill and an S+ rank skill. The two skills reflected each other like facing mirrors.

Within the similar worlds separated by the two skills, the Sword Emperor and I... we faced each other and I said.

-Sword Emperor.

-Yes.

-What is your sanctuary like?

I stood in my sanctuary and asked.

-Even the Constellation Killer had a sanctuary. And since you're here on the 99th floor, it means you've created one as well. I am...

I am.

-Curious about what your sanctuary is like.

-Hm.

The Sword Emperor raised his hand.

His robe fluttered, and then...

-Ah.

A world unfolded before my eyes.

In the lightly sunlit forest, the morning glory stretched its neck even longer.

To half its size, with half its head bowed, again to half its size, the morning glory's heroic crown shrank, and as it shrank, dawn turned to morning, morning to midday, midday to evening, from the sunset where the sun dies...

As the sun grew weary,

Into a night that made the dead descend, in the sparsely rained wilderness, the sunflower unfolded its buds even wider, and ah...

Ah.

In that lightly sunlit, rain-scarce season, those who couldn't bloom just withered away, the people's flowers and the flowers' people, and the ten million flowers they intended to embrace, the ten million flowers they could have embraced, the ten million flowers they wanted to embrace.

Morning glories, spinning flowers, frost flowers, peonies,
roses, globe amaranths...

The world...

A man sitting in a lotus position was there.

'.....'

A man dressed in tattered robes.

Sitting cross-legged, with a sword as tall as himself planted on the ground, amidst a flowerbed blooming with millions of flowers, there he sat. I knew that man— I knew him very well. I had seen him. Witnessed him.

Countless times, yet,

For the first time, I truly saw this non-translucent man.

The Sword Emperor.

The reason I couldn't speak his name was perhaps because I was not truly here.

Yet, despite that, I saw. I was able to see.

Only because he was showing it, I could understand that much.

The man— the Sword Emperor, without opening his eyes, with his eyes closed, simply quietly opened his lips.

And, 'spoke.'

"Come, Kim Gong-Ja."

For the first time, I heard his voice.

"Here."

On the 99th floor.

"I will be waiting for you."

He was waiting for me.

Chapter 388: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (1)

---

In the beginning, there was that which existed alone.

There was nothing else.

It stood solitary and thus could bear eternity by itself.

But being able to and having to are not the same. Just as it needed nothing else to be itself, it also thought it need not be alone.

For one to become two, it must be split.

It chose to be cleaved. With a great sword forged from its very essence, it divided itself. The lower half, split horizontally, sank to become the earth, while the upper half rose to become the heavens.

To commemorate the birth of the heavens and the earth, people named the moment of the first cleave the ‘Year of the Sword.’

Silvia.

A former Goldencup of the Sormewin Academy, currently the Chamberlain and Gardener of the King of Death's household.

She was oversleeping again today.

“Ugh... Hmm... Did you see... My Lord, no, Kim Gong-Ja... This is, [My True Power]...”

She must be having a pleasant dream.

At a point where she was starting to confuse whether her family name was Evanair or Evanile. Dreams were the only drug this world permitted her.

But of course, the bizarre and nightmarish world crafted by the merciless evil god that had ruined her life in its entirety did not wish for her to indulge in such sweet slumber.

"Silvia."

The voice that awoke the deeply slumbering Silvia belonged to a woman with a gentle demeanor.

Once an Immortal Dragon Emperor, a Goddess of Protection, an Imperial Sword Saint, and a sword known as 'Shiny,' among other disconnected careers amassed rather impressively in various unrelated fields, this woman was called Hwiya.

Now, she spends her time in the King of Death's household, having tea with Ester, her former nemesis who drove the world to ruin, or playing old Smash Bros games with her previous partner, Kim Yul, who helped her lead a life worthy of a title like [The bullied girl in school reincarnates into another world, meets a goddess, forgets her memories, and steadily walks the path of a God Slayer with her overpowering skill]...

Among those activities, one was to wake up the oversleeping Silvia.

"Silvia, it's time to get up."

"Hmm..."

“Silvia.”

“Five more minutes...”

Silvia mumbled as she clutched her goblin doll pillow tightly.

“Just five more minutes... Please, just shut up and wait a bit longer...”

Not getting angry was one of Hwiya's virtues.

She quietly waited for another five minutes before speaking again.

“Silvia, five minutes have passed.”

"Five minutes? That's commendable... If you waited five minutes... then you can wait ten... I believe... in your... [Will to Wait]..."

Being able to be convinced logically was another of Hwiya's virtues.

After another ten minutes, she said,

“Silvia, ten minutes have passed.”

“Nyh...”

“It’s time to wake up.”

“Why...?”

“You have work to do.”

“What if... I don’t want to work...?”

Silvia showed just one hand from under the pillow where her face was buried.

“Think about it... Goddess of Protection... Hwiya... Shiny... whatever. Just think...”

“I am not Shiny.”

“Oh, come on, it’s all the same, you light bulb... Anyway, just think... If I... don’t want to work... if I have such a golden will... what will you do...? Force me to work...?”

Silvia then spread just one finger and wagged it back and forth.

“No, no, no... You wouldn’t do that... not you, Shiny...”

“I told you, I’m not Shiny.”

“Hwiya, you’ll just let me sleep... And then, you will... gladly do my work for me...”

“Hmm... And why is that?”

Could this be yet another of Hwiya’s virtues, calmly responding even to such nonsensical babble?

Or, perhaps, it’s a flaw.

Either way, Silvia answered in a dreamy voice, as if she was half-asleep.

“Because you are... a goddess...”

"....."

“Goddess... please help... If you’re going to look like Verdandi anyway, might as well earn your keep... It’s Silvia... That’s all...”

“Silvia...”

Silvia didn’t respond further. Her hand, previously raised, dropped down.

She had drifted off. Back to the world of dreams. Leaving a goddess waiting for 15 minutes.

"....."

Even after such treatment, Hwiya did not get angry. That was indeed a virtue, a strength.

Because not getting angry meant [There's no need for her to personally get angry]. Just as Silvia said, Hwiya was a goddess, and there were plenty who would get angry on her behalf.

So many that there might even be a few within Hwiya herself.

“Please, sister...”

“Understood. Leave it to me, sister.”

[The Goddess of Protection transforms into ~Sympathy Form~ of the Goddess of Protection.]

Hwiya's hair and wings turned black.

[The Goddess of Protection's Constellation is being adjusted.]

[The skill set of the Goddess of Protection is being changed.]

The robe Hwiya was wearing tightened around her, transforming from a flowing dress to a plain, dark-colored habit. Even her once platinum-like nails darkened.

A black angel had descended.

If Hwiya looked like she could be sued for trademark infringement by Verdandi, then one of Hwiya's Sword Facets, [The Stance of the Pity Sword], looked like it could receive a copyright infringement notice from the Salvation Army.

Even the personality seemed similar, judging by the way she spoke.

“Pain without injury.”

“Aaaahh!~”

Silvia leapt up like a cat that had just encountered a cucumber. The power of the Pity Sword, the ability to inflict pain, had snapped her awake.

“Ah, what is this! This is abuse of Silvia!”

“Are you awake now?”

“Awake? No. It’s like my sleep got scared off so far away that it’s never coming back. What the hell is this, really? Can’t you treat Silvia a bit more precious!?”

“Shall I give you another?”

“I’ll go wash up and come out.”

Silvia hurried off to the bathroom.

A while later, a refreshed Silvia emerged to find the original version of Hwiya had set the table for breakfast.

Silvia grumbled as she mixed her egg rice bowl thoroughly.

“Do you know? It’s because of such reluctance to get your hands dirty that the Aegim Empire ended up doing that to the advisors. Reflect on it.”

“Ah, indeed. Could that also be related...?”

Hwiya frowned, looking downcast.

Silvia stared at her, then banged her rice bowl with a spoon until it clanged.

“What... are you even talking about? You were sealed by that guy you summoned. And now you're saying [Could that also be related]? What's that about?”

“But still...”

“Stop blaming yourself. I was just ranting because I was annoyed. Gods aren't supposed to be this naive, right?”

Having inhaled the egg rice and guzzled down the sungnyung*, Silvia finished her meal in a flash. She stretched as she stood up, while Hwiya silently waited by her side, still wearing a somber expression.

*Sungnyung is a traditional Korean infusion made from boiled scorched rice.

Silvia clicked her tongue and draped her gardener's uniform over her shoulders, then asked,

"By the way, what were you fighting about?"

"Excuse me?"

"Kim Yul, or Kim Yulmu Cha, whatever his name is. There must've been a reason to summon him. You even fought with him for a while, didn't you? What was that all about? I'm curious."

"Ah, well."

Silvia had a habit of oversleeping so often that the Director changed the morning assembly to the evening. Ester was furious, accusing Silvia of inconveniencing the elders, while Kim Yul silently stood by, exerting a non-verbal pressure on her. But Silvia, embodying the spirit of this nation that bows to no unjust authority, stoically endured.

This meant there was still plenty of time until the assembly. Carrying a spade, Silvia and Hwiya, with a bucket full of sunset, walked towards the garden, chatting.

Hwiya answered,

"I fought with another version of myself."

"Good heavens. After all that tea time and camaraderie with the advisors... and now this alter form, when did the Viper virus spread that far..."

"No, no! Really, I mean it! I truly fought with another me."

Hwiya, unusually flustered, waved her hands in denial.

Silvia, skeptical, crossed her arms and said,

"Explain, please."

Perhaps due to her innate kindness, or shocked by the alarming accusation of being infected by the Viper virus, Hwiya willingly explained the fight.

According to Kim Yul, who joined them in the garden, the explanation went like this:

"Hwiya was split into two at that time. There was a bad

Hwiya and a good Hwiya."

"Are you a slime creature?"

Kim Yul, who had recently begun to reclaim his emotions, wasn't as tolerant as Hwiya. He shot a rubber band at Silvia.

Feeling the physical sting, Silvia gritted her teeth.

"Ouch! What are you doing!"

"Head maid. You may insult me, but do not insult my former comrades. That is truly testing my patience."

"Oh, right. Just a thought, but who was it that backstabbed that very same revered old comrade of yours?"

"...Above all, a slime? Either a minor monster or a formidable foe that's hard to kill without magic and fire, such ambiguous titles should be avoided. Clear language leads to a clear mind. Silvia, as the head maid, you're responsible for maintaining the cleanliness of the household. It's something you need to be more aware of."

"You're changing the subject, aren't you?"

Kim Yul cleared his throat and began rifling through his notebook.

"Anyway, there are two types of sanctuaries. There are sanctuaries that are [created] by someone, like this one or the Constellation Killer's, and those that are simply [born]."

"Oh?"

"Cheomsan World... Or Hwiya's world was a [born] sanctuary. Everything there originated from Hwiya's body. The entire mountain range covering the continent was formed from the decaying corpse of a giant dragon."

"Ho?"

"That dragon was also one of Hwiya's true forms. Thus, the long battle with herself ended with only two factions of Hwiya remaining. I was summoned by the weaker, kinder Hwiya to fight against the stronger, evil Hwiya."

Hwiya chimed in with nods and hums, crossing her wings as if they were arms.

"In a way, it was a process of [rebirth]. The battle that would ultimately decide what Hwiya would become. Just as the Lord cleared the trials of the 70th floor and became a complete constellation, Hwiya went through a similar process."

Kim Yul shared the lengthy tale of how he broke each of the evil Hwiya's wings, one by one, converting their strength into his own, how he transformed Cheomsan World in the process, and how he gathered more people under his and Hwiya's banners.

"It sounds like a story that, if the cruel parts were cut out, would make for a perfect 24-episode animation to be aired in the morning."

Hwiya reminisced with a nostalgic look.

Kim Yul tilted his head.

"Really? I think it sounds like a story that, if made into an SRPG, could sell about 100,000 copies."

Silvia merely showed a look of utter disgust, not bothering to comment on this delusional combo's self-assessment.

Kim Yul asked,

"So, that's the story. Any more questions?"

"So, you did change the subject earlier, right?"

A brief skirmish ensued, with rubber bands flying and the spade slicing through the air.

"Anyway, get to work! It's almost mealtime."

"Yessir. Oh, my fate."

Thus, the three of them delved into tending the garden.

While Hwiya fluttered about, collecting sunsets, and Kim Yul shaped a long rock with his aura-infused hedge trimmers, Silvia knelt, turning the soil and muttering,

"Ah, really... I wish I could fight myself right now. Being unlucky Silvia and having a lucky Silvia knock me down and absorb me... No, wait, that would be annoying in its own way too. If there's going to be absorption, I should be the one doing it. Sucking all the luck out of that Silvia to become the one true lucky being... Hmm."

Silvia stopped mid-sentence, her own soliloquy perhaps too pitiful even for her.

"Ugh."

At the end of Silvia's gaze lay a small marigold.

She had noticed its roots slightly exposed.

"It cried so much yesterday... not like it's some big-eyed frog. Oh. Come to think of it, there was that time I was a frog... Tsk."

Silvia scooped up some soil with her spade and covered the exposed roots, grumbling,

"Lord, come back soon. How long are you going to stay up there, leaving the flowers like this?"

Of course, there was no response to her grumbling, as Hwiya and Kim Yul were far away.

Regardless, Silvia continued to tenderly cover the marigold's roots while muttering,

"Or are you already there? Given how elusive you are, maybe you're hiding there with your invisibility skill... Oof. If by any chance you're there, please shake that carrot flower over there... Whoa, damn, that scared me!"

Silvia was startled.

A sudden breeze had shaken the carrot flower.

"That really shook me up... Are you there?"

Startled by the unexpected gust, Silvia managed to calm her heart.

"There's no way, now that I think about it."

Silvia scratched the back of her head.

"Damn."

The grumbling continued.

"You made me like this. This, well, it's not bad... not bad, but especially when I see the Crown Prince Kim Hwang-Tae turning from pollock to dried pollock, I think, ah, I'm better off... but still."

Silence.

"I'm not the only one you've made like this."

Silence.

"There are many of us... so."

And then,

"Come back soon. Please."

[Key manifestation complete.]

Somewhere, such a declaration echoed.

[All residents from the 81st to 90th floor remember you.]

[The 91st floor stage has been cleared.]

Such proclamations of the Tower did not reach Silvia.

What Silvia heard was merely this,

"Silvia, let's go have lunch together!"

"Ah, yes."

Responding to Hwiya's call, Silvia got up from her spot.

After giving the well-covered marigold one last look, Silvia stretched her limbs.

"What's for lunch today?"

"Today, we're eating out. Let's go to the Planetarium."

"Ah, okay. Understood. ...Well then."

With a flick of her finger, Silvia activated a power granted to the vassals of the King of Death's household, opening a staircase connected to another layer of the sanctuary.

"Let's go chew on some salad while looking at that annoying hamster's face."

Silvia, Hwiya, and Kim Yul made their way down the staircase, one step at a time.

And following them, someone who had heard the Tower's declarations also began descending the stairs.

[You are entering the 92nd floor.]

Chapter 389: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (2)

---

Thus, the heavens and the earth faced each other, but neither was content with just their counterpart; they yearned for something beside them as well.

So, the heavens forged a sword, and the earth did likewise. This time, with an adversary present, there was no need for self-sacrifice.

The heavens swung down their sword towards the earth, and the earth raised its blade against the heavens.

Hundreds of clashes ensued.

Winds poured down from the chasms in the sky, and water burst forth from the fissures in the earth.

The fragmented heavens were sealed into various moments like spring, summer, autumn, winter, polar night, midnight sun, new moon, and full moon. The split earth was divided into dozens of continents and hundreds of thousands of islands, each becoming a unique ecosystem preserved in time.

To honor the birth of climate and seas, seasons and life, people named the moment of the second clash the 'Month of the Sword.'

Planetarium.

In a brunch café serving as a mid-way base in the World of the Lone Child, an unexpected commotion was taking place.

"Uhehehe, miss, let's climb the tower together~"

A punk with a Mohican hairstyle roughly grabbed a frail-looking woman's wrist, insisting as his tongue, adorned with a small piercing, flicked incessantly.

"Pl-Please let go..."

The woman, wearing glasses, shrank in fear, but the Mohican punk was relentless.

"Come on, let's climb the tower~ Don't be satisfied with the floor you're on now, embrace an insatiable desire for improvement and aim for the 100th floor~ Muhehehe~"

"Uh...someone, please help me..."

Like a subordinate facing a boss who unilaterally sets impossible targets, the woman sobbed, calling for help.

But cruelly, it seemed there was no one in this tower willing to assist her.

Was it this injustice that touched a nerve of a girl who was about to quietly have her meal?

"Ah... really. Can't even let me eat in peace."

A girl, who had been enjoying her meal with a spade strapped to her waist, stood up.

It was no secret; the girl was none other than the [Chamberlain of the King of Death Family]. Her power could shroud the heavens and shatter the earth. Once she intervened, the fate of the punk was sealed to be effortlessly vanquished.

However, in the end, the girl did not need to act.

"Stop it, head maid of King of Death."

"Hmm?"

Voices called out to halt the girl.

Justice existed in the world, after all.

"You are..."

"It's our turn to step in."

The ones who stopped the girl were men.

Dressed in white doboks*, their backs emblazoned with the large character for "Heaven" (天).

*Dobok (Korean: 도복) is the uniform worn by practitioners of Korean martial arts, such as taekwondo. Do means "way" and bok means "clothing". The dobok came from the Japanese keikogi/dōgi, used in Japanese martial arts, such as judo.

"The beautiful hands of the King of Death's head maid are not meant for disposing of such trivial trash, right?"

The man in the lead spoke, and the girl took her seat.

Then, with a raised eyebrow, she remarked,

"Ah... please go ahead. Right now, I must attend to this fellow named [Seafood Cream Pasta]."

The men in white doboks smiled and crossed their arms in unison.

"Alright then."

"To prevent such petty villains from running rampant."

"That's what we're here for, after all."

The men in doboks stood up and slowly approached.

Only one remained silent, his hood deeply drawn, but they all walked towards the Mohican punk.

Thud, thud.

Their simple white attire belied the weight of their stride, reminiscent of elephants that once roamed the Serengeti when it was still a savanna.

"Hey, that's enough, okay?"

"Eh? What's this? Who are you guys?"

The Mohican punk sneered, baring his teeth.

The man in the lead shook his head as if to say it was unavoidable, revealing his face from the shadows. Seeing the lead man's face, the Mohican punk chuckled.

"What's this? All tough and then just a pretty little kid?"

Indeed.

The man leading in the dobok, upon closer inspection, seemed more a boy than a man.

A Mohican punk and a delicate-looking youth. At first glance, one might worry for the latter in this dire mismatch.

But the youth, with a smile that could steal the hearts of girls in a second, said,

"My name is Gahaeil."

"What?"

"Once the successor of the The Orthodox Path's True

Heavenly Sword Sect, bearing the [Martial Name] of [Sun Piercing Sword], but now, after various circumstances, registered in the Celestial Martial Guild with my current [Alias], Haruto."

Introducing himself as Haruto, the youth snapped his fingers.

"Let's skip the rest of the introductions. —Hunter Card, open."

With a pop, a card-shaped luminescence flickered in the air.

"Huh? A Hunter Card? At your age, your rank would be... Aaahhh! This, this rank is...!?"

The Mohican hunter, who scoffed at the card, screamed in agony.

It was inevitable, a sure thing.

What was there to hide? And even if hidden, where could it be concealed?

The Hunter ranks of the men in doboks were astonishingly, on average, [B-Rank].

And when it came to Haruto, who revealed his card---

"A, A-Rank Hunter...!!"

For context, [Hunters] refer to those who climb the tower, and among them, these individuals belonged to the [Strongest] category. Being highly regarded even within one of the [Five Great Guilds], the Celestial Martial Guild, their prowess was evident.

"I-I didn't realize!"

Like a frog encountering a snake, the Mohican hunter dropped to his knees, bowing his head.

Looking down on the pitiful sight of the petty villain, Haruto, with a face filled with melancholy, said—

"Really, it's too much to bear watching this unfold. Can we please stop this farce???"

"Why stop, junior... It was just getting to a good point..."

Haruto, looking awkward, scratched the back of his head.

The man who had remained silent under his hood suddenly burst out in frustration, throwing off his dobok.

"Enough with this bullshit! Seriously, all of you... Haruto or whatever, just all of you are a pain!"

Discarding his dobok revealed a handsome man with dark, flowing hair.

Haruto was at a loss for words.

"Come on, Yoo Soo-ha, that's a bit harsh, isn't it...?"

"Harsh? What's harsh is the mere existence of you guys!"

"What did we even do...?"

"Do what? Do what, you ask!?"

"Um..."

Haruto could only repeat "Um" and "It's not like that," as if an indoor person was being oppressed by an outdoor enthusiast's club.

So accustomed was the scene that none of the guests or staff at the Planetarium added their spoons to the turmoil. The head maid of the King of Death's household and the other two vassals who had finished their meal beside her had already returned to their own sanctuaries, no longer present there.

Perhaps that was why Yoo Soo-ha vented his frustration, pointing at others.

"What are you all looking at? Do something!"

Where Yoo Soo-ha pointed, an old man and a boy, their hands cupped like tulips under their chins, were enjoying the commotion with glee.

The boy spoke first.

"Did you know? Surströmming might seem like an odd food at first, but as you eat it, you come to understand the intricate flavors."

The old man added,

"Why would I hold back? At my age, I should have some entertainment like watching this."

"That's too much...! That's why you get called a water flea, old man...!"

The bespectacled woman, who had been harassed by the Mohican punk, scolded the old man.

The old man retorted angrily.

"What are you doing? You, who've now claimed the title of Master Alchemist, sitting here pretending to be bullied by such riff-raff!"

The Mohican punk seemed even more shocked by this.

The woman called Master Alchemist pointed at the Mohican punk, protesting her innocence.

"H-How dare you...! Look at him...! He's scary...!"

"Good grief, you're scarier!! Do you know how often your disciple comes to me, begging for leniency? 'The professor is so scary, if I go back she'll torment me again, Professor Shawn, please give me some extra lessons,' he says..."

"What...?"

The Master Alchemist pressed her glasses firmly up her nose.

This brunch café, the Planetarium, was carved from the Great Library of All Knowledge. The Great Library gathered various world fragments under the name 'Apocalypse,' thus the Planetarium was inhaling the air from countless worlds just beyond a thin sheet of paper.

Perhaps that's why, although the atmosphere of a space is usually determined by the actions of those within it, the Planetarium was particularly susceptible to changes.

When the Mohican punk caused a disturbance, it resembled a cheap bar; when the disciples of the Celestial Martial Guild intervened, it took on an inexplicably bizarre ambiance; and when Yoo Soo-ha yelled, it was as fiery as a blaze. However, with the simple gesture of the Master Alchemist, the café welcomed a winter's night.

"Ahaaaa... I see... Yes... What should I do with this ungrateful wretch... I should probably head back for now..."

Feeling a strong sense of duty, the Master Alchemist made her way out of the Planetarium.

The boy looked at the old man indifferently.

"What?"

"Don't you feel sorry for the disciple of Lady Apothecary?"

"Who asked him to take up her cause? He's getting what he deserves."

"Did you know? I'm starting to like your character..."

The old man snorted. Meanwhile, the Mohican hunter sneakily crawled away.

Yoo Soo-ha, having witnessed it all, rubbed his forehead.

"Crazy bunch..."

The former disciples of the Celestial Martial Guild looked at Yoo Soo-ha warily, worried about his reaction.

Yoo Soo-ha, realizing anew the insanity of his seniors, slapped his chest in frustration.

"Ah, really. Gong-Ja, oh you damn Gong-Ja! Do you see? Do you understand? This is the fucking world you've created!"

"It doesn't seem like such a bad world to me..."

"Senior, please, let's get the train of keeping your mouth shut moving... Departing in 3~ 2~ 1~"

"No..."

Haruto clamped his mouth shut. At his reaction, Yoo Soo-ha, once again infuriated, took a deep breath before exhaling sharply.

"We shouldn't have just let him off when he suddenly started doing the Cossack dance... Should have made him dance more. Left him in some desolate void to dance forever..."

[The God Who Dances in Emptiness expresses serious concern and mild regret.]

Such proclamations of the tower did not reach Yoo Soo-ha.

He simply pulled his hood down further and approached the old man, saying,

"Hey, boomer... pack me some food."

"What'll it be?"

"Oh, the usual... You know, the thing that old geezer likes. What's it called, risotto? That."

"As always, no respect... Reminds me of me when I was young. Ah, well."

Despite his grumbling, the old man expertly took the order, fired up the stove, and began cooking, pulling out mineral waters that Evian would envy.

Watching him, Yoo Soo-ha urged his seniors.

"What are you doing! Hurry up and get ready to go. Lunchtime is almost over, you know?"

"But we haven't even finished eating yet..."

"Then take it with you and eat on the way! Always so unreliable, my seniors."

"No..."

Despite their awkward situation, they were still considered high-ranking disciples of Martial Alliance. They skillfully continued their meal, holding bowls and chopsticks in hand.

Yoo Soo-ha looked back at the old man.

"And that... You know, the old geezer. He said to take a vacation and come visit sometime. Bring Sword Saint along too."

"Why?"

"Why, you ask? Probably misses an old man like himself. Go play some Go or something."

"That Great Axe Sage..."

The old man finished cooking while mumbling, but not without a hint of fondness in his expression.

Taking the packaged meal, Yoo Soo-ha addressed his seniors.

"Let's go."

The disciples of the Celestial Martial Guild laughed softly, closing their bowls and chopsticks.

"Yes, junior."

"Let's return to our [Fortress]."

"To the pinnacle of the Orthodox Path, [Heavenly Martial Alliance]---"

Yoo Soo-ha sighed.

"Dear God, please realize the enormity of your sins..."

[Key manifestation complete.]

[All the Apostles you recruited have offered sincere prayers to you.]

And so, once again, the Tower's proclamation echoed from somewhere.

[The 92nd floor stage has been cleared.]

Yoo Soo-ha, as before, did not hear it.

He simply muttered curses and complaints, leading his senior disciples out of the Planetarium.

And following them, someone who had heard the tower's declarations slowly walked on.

[You are entering the 93rd floor.]

Chapter 390: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (3)

---

The great slashes embroidered the world four times in total.

With the third slash, [Humans] were finally born. People named the moment of this third slash the ‘Day of the Sword.’

The fourth slash saw [Humans], who were once a singular entity, diversify into countless [Races], [Nations], [Cities], [Villages], [Tribes], and [Families], eventually giving rise to [Individuals]. This moment of the fourth slash was named the ‘Era of the Sword.’

And time marched on.

To distinguish from the Year of the Sword, the Year of the Axe, the Year of the Spear, the Year of the Bow, and more were established.

Similarly, to differentiate from the Month of the Sword, the Month of the Armor, the Month of the Shield, the Month of the Bracelet, and others were created.

Likewise, countless Days and Eras were established to differentiate from the Day of the Sword and the Era of the Sword, further dividing time into countless Minutes and Seconds.

Some called this meticulous naming of time the fifth slash, but it didn't gain unanimous support. Regardless, the fragmented moments began their own cycles.

Finally, the moment arrived when the Year of the Sword, the Month of the Sword, the Day of the Sword, the Era of the Sword, the Minute of the Sword, and the Second of the Sword interlocked perfectly like gears.

It was also the moment he was forged.

---

Temples are usually the sanctums where gods, defining the providence of their world, reside. Or they become refuge for ousted gods seeking shelter from other more domineering deities.

However, this temple was neither.

This temple was the husk of that god.

Clank!

Ruins.

In the flow of endlessly turning gears, throughout a time so vast it became meaningless to count, the temple, amidst an eternal winter that eventually arrived, was nothing more than a festering scab on the skin, impossible to shed.

Clank

Clank

Clank

Within that husk, the sound of two hard entities colliding echoed.

Clank!

One of them was a small fist.

A fist clenched as if gripping the world, striking down with matching force.

Clank...!

Each time, a shockwave that seemed to cleave the heavens and shake the earth reverberated.

Clank!

The other was a metallic fiend.

At a glance, the metal ingot seemed to be ablaze. It was that red. But upon closer inspection, it wasn't sparks that fell with each punch, but rust. The ingot appeared so vividly red because it was entirely corroded from end to end.

Clank!

The girl wielding the fist had golden hair.

It wasn't the sticky hue of dense honey, rather, her hair was so wispy that if coated with glue and flung into the air, it seemed it would scatter like dandelion seeds.

Clank.....!

Between the swaying golden wheat, reminiscent of a scarecrow left after a storm, stood two broken things.

They were broken horns.

The girl was not human.

She was one of the oldest Dragon Emperors and held one of the broadest territories in the heavens as one of the Constellations.

"Ruin-Harvesting Cow, right?"

Someone called out the girl's divine name.

The girl's fist, which had been pummeling the metal ingot, paused momentarily.

She glanced sideward, letting only her gaze drift. The rustling hair allowed an easy view through the fringes covering her eyes, making it effortless for her to see who had called her.

Her lips twitched slightly.

"Viper?"

"Yeah, you might not know who I am but— Eh!? How'd you know?!"

The man with grey hair, who had been leaning against a temple pillar watching the girl, was taken aback.

Clank!

The Ruin-Harvesting Cow, Mutia, resumed hammering the metal ingot, replying nonchalantly.

"What do you think is required of a god?"

"Uh... Diligence?"

Caught off-guard by the sudden question, Viper responded reflexively.

Mutia paused her punching momentarily, then nodded.

"You know well. It's evidence you've properly played your part as a god."

"Ah, I've had my fair share of struggles... No, that's not the point..."

"A god is essentially a servant."

Clank!

Mutia struck the metal ingot again.

"Thus, a good god is, in essence, a good servant."

"Uh..."

"So, the Tower Master would be considered the best god to everyone."

Clank!

Amidst the metallic sounds, Viper fell silent. The subject of the Tower Master was still something he couldn't grasp.

Mutia continued.

"I might not be as much as the Tower Master, but I am a good god too. And the virtue of a servant is diligence."

Clank!

"In a brief moment of negligence, due to that diligence lapsing, I lost my horns."

Clank!

"Someone from the same world as the one who cut off my horns, and even got hit by him, is you. It's only natural to remember and be prepared."

"Hmm... It's an honor, but at the same time, it's kind of infuriating."

Viper scratched his head, then murmured, "Well, I guess I should accept the role of a rival," and looked at Mutia.

"Aren't you going to ask why I came?"

"You'll explain it anyway, either through words or actions."

"Well, yes, but... you could've also gone, [You came here for this reason, didn't you?] like you guessed my name."

"Why should I show my hand?"

"Even for a good servant...?"

"I said the virtue of a servant is diligence, not some foolish swagger."

Viper clamped his mouth shut. With Mutia also silent, for a while, only the sound of the god's fist striking the metal ingot filled the husk of the god.

Viper hesitated, then spoke.

"Do you know about hammers? They could make this easier..."

As he spoke, Viper thought.

[A hammer? What's that?]

[Ah, this is called a 'hammer'... It makes it easier to strike metal.]

[Amazing, Viper...! How could the World of the Lone Child have such overwhelming techniques and dedication even for something as simple as hammering metal...!]

"Viper. Listening to that is too unpleasant even for me; can you stop?"

"I didn't say anything!?"

"You were thinking it."

"Well... Even if thoughts are my own, you can't just invade privacy like that, even if you're a renowned Constellation... Anyway, there are hammers..."

"This..."

Clank!

"Is my horn."

Clank!

"To forge my horn, it had to be with my fist. Every other metal was too soft."

"Indeed."

Having once lived among people as a god and worked as a blacksmith, Viper rested his chin in his hand.

"Hmm... So that's why it's rusted..."

"My horn can only be rusted by time. Every flame is too cold."

"Indeed."

Viper sighed.

"Time is your domain. So, only you can melt and break your own body."

"That's right."

"It makes sense, but that's all it does."

Viper crossed his arms.

"The one who cut off your horns was Kim Gong-Ja."

Clang.....!

With a sharp sound, the metal struck by the fist let out a massive scream.

It was the death throes, and at the same time, a baby's first cry.

[Congratulations!]

In a tone more vibrant than usual, the tower's proclamation echoed.

[An item of unmeasurable grade!]

[You have created the 13th World-class Artifact!]

This announcement was heard by Mutia, and by Viper as well.

Viper tensed up. Unperturbed, Mutia stood up.

After swinging the newly forged sword a couple of times, she displayed it with a snap, making a sound.

+

[Harvester of Returnees]

Rarity: World-class

Creator: Ruin-Harvesting Cow

Description: A sword of obsession forged from her own horn by the Harvester of Ruins. It is what you might call a ‘time-traveling homing missile.’ In other words, a ‘Returnee-Killing Missile’... Terrifying, right? Anyone killed by this sword and who returns (time-travels back) brings the sword along with them. So, what does that mean? They die again as soon as they return... And if they return again? They die again immediately. All hope is lost for anyone killed by this sword...

That's what it signifies.

+

Viper swallowed dryly.

"The reason I came here is because of a certain prophecy."

Mutia kept her gaze on the sword, silent.

Viper continued.

"Not a fake prophet, but a real prophet has appeared in our tower."

"....."

"The prophecy said, Mutia, that you would become a formidable enemy of Kim Gong-Ja."

While speaking, Viper activated his skill.

"Unrivaled Under the Heavens is activated."

His SS-grade skill, [Unrivaled Under the Heavens], shows the opponent's expected moves, allowing him to anticipate and counter their next actions.

Simple but powerful. It's like knowing what your opponent will play in rock-paper-scissors and then making your move.

Of course, even the simplest fight is more complex than rock-paper-scissors, almost like adding rock-paper-scissors to a subtract-one rule. However, or rather for that very reason, if wielded by someone who knows how to use it, the true value of this skill is immeasurable.

And of course, Viper was one who knew how to wield it well.

That's when it happened.

"Shut up..."

Mutia muttered disdainfully.

Taking those words to be directed at him, Viper bit his lip and prepared to adopt a full battle stance.

It was a misunderstanding. Mutia's words were not aimed at Viper.

Her eyes weren't even on Viper.

"Speak only what needs to be said, like a salvation consultant."

"Hmm...?"

Viper looked puzzled, but Mutia didn't respond.

Her attention was fixed on the item description.

Shortly after, the item description squirmed and changed.

+

Description: But that's too stiff, isn't it? As the person in charge of item messages, I dream, along with my sister who handles skill messages, of being more human-like, more approachable representatives. (Strong sense of duty) To become a more proactive tower, I'll do my best!!! (Sincere ambition)

+

Mutia pressed her forehead.

"Crazy, really. As if they weren't already from the line of the Maiden."

"Eh? Maiden? If you're talking about the Mirage Maiden, that's my line..."

Viper puffed out his chest as he spoke.

Only then did Mutia glance at Viper, sighed in a manner similar to before, raised her hand, and swung it down.

Crash.....!

With a loud bang, the sword [Harvester of Returnees] that Mutia had just forged split in two.

"What in the madness!?"

The tower's item manager was astonished.

"You've just destroyed a world-class item of immeasurable grade...!?"

Viper too looked dumbfounded.

"What are you doing....."

"That wasn't what I intended to make in the first place."

Brushing off her hands, Mutia continued.

"Your mention of him mixed in malicious thoughts. That's what created it."

"....."

"Something that has already been made. Using it as it is made might be amusing, but I am the representative of time. I cannot accept coincidences caused by me."

Thus, Mutia began to reforge her own horn, now reverted to an ingot, once again.

Clang, clang! The sound resounded starkly within the temple.

Viper watched in silence for a while.

"What were you trying to make?"

"Not a weapon."

Clang!

"Something not meant to be swung at the living."

Clang!

"Something you were boasting about being unaware of."

Clang!

"A blacksmith's hammer is what I am making."

Viper was silent for a moment before asking,

"What will it be used for?"

"Anything."

Clang!

"To create a tool for someone to use, not to use someone as a tool, just for once."

Clang!

"That way, at least, it will be closer to him who broke my horn than that trash item from before—"

Clang!

Viper took note of her answer and pondered deeply.

[Unrivalled Under the Heavens has been deactivated.]

Then, Viper asked,

"Need help?"

"Hmm?"

"Yeah. I've done some blacksmithing... You said only your fist works, but just in case, right?"

Viper rolled up his sleeves and grinned.

"After all, this fist almost pierced through his heart."

Mutia frowned.

It wasn't for long. She snorted, turned away, and said,

".....Do as you like."

So Viper did just that.

Clang!

Clang!

As different sounds filled the air, time passed.

Crash.....!

A shockwave burst forth.

Like a crack forming in an egg, fissures appeared, and from within, a sharp, clear luminescence exploded.

And then.

[Congratulations!]

The temple began to crumble.

As if a husk long shed was only now accepting its fate to collapse.

[An item of unmeasurable grade!]

Crack.

Crack!

The roof caved in, and the pillars supporting the temple buckled. Initially, the pillars swelled as if suffering from indigestion, and then, with a rumble, they crumbled, spewing dust.

The shockwave had brought down the temple from the inside.

[You are the first to create something beyond a World-class Artifact—]

That day, at that moment, it is said that everyone who set foot in the tower heard that proclamation.

[Key manifestation complete.]

But.

[The Constellations linked to you have changed their way of life because of you, and as a result, they can no longer exist in the same way as before.]

The fact that another proclamation of the tower, audible only to one, also resounded, was not known.

[The 93rd floor stage has been cleared!]

The one who heard the tower's proclamation looked down upon the ruins, at the man with an eyepatch joyfully holding up a blacksmith's hammer and the girl with broken horns.

Then, turning around, they began to walk slowly.

[You are entering the 94th floor.]

Chapter 391: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (4)

---

From the moment he was forged, he was a solitary blade.

[Oh! It's done!]

[It's finally forged!]

Many people do not remember the first moment the world gnawed at them. It is only after time has nurtured the body, and the body has made the mind resilient, that meaningful cognition arises and creates memories. But for him, the length of his existence was synonymous with his memories.

[At last, it has been created!]

[It has been tempered!]

[The Grand Magic is complete!]

[It is what we have finally forged!]

Those surrounding the completely formed person called out thus.

[The Primal Blade!]

He looked around at the people.

[Oh!]

[Primal Blade!]

The people gathered before him seemed empty. Their emaciated fingers testified that everything they had grasped in their lives had slipped away like sand.

Those fingers, quivering like countless seaweeds in the deep sea, clutched at his sleeves.

[Our]

The destitute spoke.

[Sorrow]

[Pain]

They said.

[Disappointment] [Despair]

They voiced.

[Agony] [Suffocation] [Hunger] [Thirst]

They articulated.

[Recognize us!]

[Take responsibility for us!]

Thus, the destitute cried out in unison.

[Save us!]

He looked intently at them, then turned his head away.

The people who gathered behind him seemed frail. Their trembling legs revealed the hardship of the paths they had walked thus far, and the fear of the paths yet to come.

One by one, their legs folded like logs, kneeling at his feet.

[Our]

The weak spoke.

[Future]

[Fear]

They voiced.

[Hope] [Longing]

They declared.

[Waiting] [Regret] [Fear] [Wish]

They articulated.

[Feel for us!]

[Bear our burdens!]

[Take responsibility for us!]

Thus, the weak cried out in unison.

[Lead us!]

There were many such people.

Since the Primal Strike, no light had ever penetrated this place. Inside a cave where only darkness festered and rotted, countless people had gathered. Wherever he turned his head, there was such a crowd. They beseeched, implored, pleaded, and begged him.

From the moment he was forged, he was a solitary blade, signifying that he was ready for the targets and reasons he had to swing for.

In other words, he was the protagonist of this world.

[This world exists solely for you.]

The one who governed the Grand Magic stated.

[All other humans are but phantoms. Straw men. Empty cans.]

The one who made such declarations did not seem destitute or weak. They did not resemble a phantom, a straw man, or an empty can.

Yet, the orchestrator continued unwaveringly.

[If there is any reason for the existence of others in this world, it is solely to be shattered by you.]

[To prove that you are right.]

Pointing at the destitute.

[To be saved by you.]

Pointing at the weak.

[To be protected by you.]

Pointing at himself and then at others.

[To be surpassed by you.]

Somehow, he could sense the truth in those words.

‘Is that so.’

He understood.

‘In this vast world, am I the only one who is special?’

Am I...

alone?

Dusk had settled.

The shadows left by the sun were gradually devoured. This corrosion occurred sporadically, and the dark spots claimed their places like constellations in the sky. Though everything would turn dark eventually, for now, they only spread their roots on the twilight. Beside them, a spider was dying. Next to the convulsing spider, a slender, trembling finger hovered.

It was the hand of a pale and thin woman. Following the green veins on the back of her hand up her slender wrist and arm, one could see that they extended like branches of a tree on a winter day. The woman, gasping for breath with her face buried in the dirt, was the Grey Spider.

The Grey Spider was dying.

"....."

The bitter fate built by the Magic Tower. The hatred she accumulated. The endless challenges had eventually brought down her, who was once the emperor of the 50th floor.

"We won..."

Someone next to the dying spider spoke.

"Finally. At last, we've won."

The Grey Spider knew precisely who the voice belonged to.

Even in the darkness, it didn't matter. Despite nearly losing her sight and hearing, she could tell.

Despite the multitude of people gathered around the Grey Spider, despite so many witnessing her demise, the Grey Spider could identify the owner of the voice accurately.

Because she knew them all.

“What a monster!”

The man who just spat out those words was named Rodrick.

He was a werewolf from the White Wolf World, who had lost his family to the Magic Tower. The mages of the tower cherished the Moon Circle Stones embedded deep within the hearts and brains of werewolves as materials for ornaments. The more the werewolves starved, the brighter the Moon Circle Stones glowed, so the tower made it standard practice to imprison werewolves and starve them to death to harvest the stones.

“Devil...”

The sobbing woman was named Yichunlin.

Yichunlin came from the Dragon Fire World. Her race, called Diliks, resembled trees more than humans. A rare example in the lineage of intelligent life.

The boundless expansion of power and inflated self-awareness turn the living space of others into one's own stepping stone. The mages of the tower gladly substituted the rarity of Diliks for preciousness. Renowned mages planted Diliks in their personal flower pots, trimmed their various appendages with knives and scissors to their liking. The fruit that they bore once a year, apart from tasting good, enhanced the magic power of the eater, making it a favored delicacy.

“I wanted to be the one to kill her.”

The Grey Spider knew the name of the one muttering so.

“It was my right to have that privilege.”

She knew well where the one grinding their teeth in anger had come from.

“I...”

“Only I...”

“It should have been me...”

All of them had reasons to wish for her death.

The Grey Spider had been the queen of the Magic Tower. She bore the responsibility for all the deeds committed by the tower. It wasn't as if the Grey Spider was innocent.

Her hands were stained a deep red, burdened by far too many unnecessary bloodsheds.

“It was supposed to be me first.”

“Don't joke! My right to challenge came first.”

“Why couldn't you even wait for my turn...”

Growling voices surrounded the Grey Spider, weaving a web of enmity and tension with their words and breaths.

Someone stepped forward.

“Stop it.”

The Grey Spider knew who this someone was.

She knew that this individual wished for her death more than anyone else present.

This someone was the very person who had defeated her—the challenger in the recent battle.

“What’s this?”

“You think winning the challenge gives you the right to preside over this?”

“You're not sympathizing with this monster, are you?”

People bared their teeth. For those who had lost their skin to the tower and were left with exposed flesh, everything that happened in the world felt like a biting cold wind.

But the challenger spoke calmly.

“We didn’t come here to fight among ourselves.”

People silenced themselves. They could sense the precariousness of his calm, like a tower built on ice with cards.

Suppressing his emotions, the challenger looked down at the Grey Spider.

“You’re dying, aren’t you?”

The Grey Spider’s lips parted weakly, but only a bubbling froth of blood escaped before they sealed again.

It didn’t matter. He had no interest in her response.

Or rather, he was intensely interested but was forcibly suppressing it.

“I hope you just die like this.”

The challenger crouched and whispered.

“Please, don’t try to show any will or spirit. Don’t flail about or try to leave a last will.”

“Just die as you are.”

The hushed whisper continued.

“You won’t have a dramatic death.”

The whisper was laced with a curse.

“There will be no coffin for you, no grave for your burial. No one will know the date of your death, so no one will commemorate it. I wish for you to die...”

“Lonely and forgotten.”

Silence ensued.

No one spoke. It wasn't just because of the chilling hatred. They were silently agreeing with his words.

Just as the Grey Spider couldn't forgive her own gods, they too couldn't forgive the Grey Spider. It was just that. That was the end of it. Some things in the world simply end that way.

The Grey Spider knew this too. She knew it better than anyone.

“I...”

The Grey Spider coughed.

“I-I...”

She reached out with a withered hand.

Those gathered tensed. Even the challenger who had been pouring out curses hesitated, reaching for his weapon.

It was a misunderstanding. The Grey Spider had merely stretched her hand towards the night sky. Her fingers, spread like hooks, grasped at the star-studded sky once.

And then let go.

With a light thud, it was over.

"....."

"....."

And that was the end.

The Grey Spider didn't open her mouth again. She couldn't.

Literally, she was no longer among the living.

“Is she gone?”

“She’s gone.”

People murmured. Some approached and poked at the Grey Spider’s body with the butt of their weapons. Only when there was no response did a sigh of relief spread among them.

It was brief. The relief soon turned to questions.

“What was she trying to say?”

Murmurs resumed.

“She probably wanted to act arrogantly until the very end.”

“No, she was likely begging for her life in a pathetic manner.”

“Maybe she wanted to say sorry.”

“Or maybe...”

In the darkness of the fields, those murmurs almost spread like wildfire.

The challenger shouted.

“Enough!”

People halted and fell silent.

The challenger, with clenched teeth, declared.

“Don’t speculate.”

It was as if he was stamping out the embers of a forest fire.

“Don’t try to interpret or convey. Don’t try to find meaning.”

"....."

“Understanding is necessary to harm, and comprehension is needed to kill. So, trying to understand the Grey Spider was only necessary when we were fighting. Now that she’s dead, there’s no need for that.”

The challenger stated firmly.

“Just forget it.”

People nodded silently. Someone echoed, [Right.] Another added, [Oblivion is the rightful hell for the soul of that monster to fall into.]

Following the challenger's suggestion, they resolved to forget the existence of the Grey Spider entirely.

However.

"....."

"....."

They all knew it was impossible.

The death of the Grey Spider, in the end, left an indelible scar on those gathered here, much like her life had.

“Damn it...”

Filled with resentment and reproach, the challenger could only clench his teeth and turn away.

The body of the Grey Spider was left in the field, unclaimed by anyone.

But it wasn't left alone.

[Key manifestation complete.]

A quiet declaration resonated.

[Despite facing the greatest turning point in their fate because of you, leading to their death, they hold no resentment towards you.]

[The 94th floor stage has been cleared.]

The one who heard the declaration looked down silently at the Grey Spider's corpse.

No soul or semblance of it rose from the spider's remains. There was no recognition of him, nor any confrontation with the Guardian Spirit by his side. Just as in life, there was no reconciliation or forgiveness between the Grey Spider and her victims after death.

Not yet, at least.

The one who heard the declaration knew such an event would happen. No matter how long it took, he knew it would happen, that he would facilitate it, that it was the role he had taken on long ago.

[You are entering the 95th floor.]

To make it happen, he would have to climb the tower.

Chapter 392: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (5)

---

“Ha! So, you're the zombie that the shamans of the Great Yin Valley summoned together? You look like a damn cursed soul! I shall slay you and become the protagonist of the fifth great strike!”

He cut him down.

[Amitabha Sword. New life is always forged through the clash of blades by those who love each other. That has been the unwavering rule ever since the fourth great strike embroidered this world. A product of sorcery that shatters the harmony of this world due to its very existence! I shall grant you peace with my blade.]

He cut him down.

[Sent by the divine Martial Sword King, who governs the greatest realm of swords! Hang your head in silence, vile king of zombies!]

He cut him down.

There were many to be cut down. Merely walking and breathing was enough to pile up a mountain of corpses destined to be slain by him. It seemed as though everything in this world existed solely to be cut down by him.

That couldn't be.

[Oh, Primal Blade!]

It shouldn't be.

[Once again, the Primal Blade has saved us!]

There must be something else.

[Primal Blade! Primal Blade! Primal Blade!]

[Our Beginning! Our End! Our Savior!]

There must be.

[The son of us all!]

He set out in search of that something.

He left the cave, [You,] roamed the world, [Cursed by the shamans of the Great Yin Valley,] traveled to the edge of the eastern seas on a ferry, witnessed the first sunrise, [the blade that swung towards the world.] set foot in a city of towers in the western continents that his homeland knew nothing of. [Everything in this world,] He brought down a dragon feasting on light in the divine Sword Mountains, [was waiting. For you —] and even met hermits sitting in lotus positions under a sky perpetually stormed with auroras.

[Tsk, tsk. Such a foolish fellow.]

The leader of the hermits spoke.

[Why so troubled?]

He looked at the leader of the hermits.

Most were smaller compared to his size, but the leader of the hermits was particularly diminutive. The glowing face had only the outline without eyes, nose, or mouth. Belonging to a race called True Humans or Divine Humans, he had already crossed swords with such beings several times.

A terribly strong race.

Yet, they were always a step weaker than him.

He felt sadness at this second truth. The True Humans, in particular, were a race that saddened him greatly.

He said,

[I am lonely.]

[Ho-ho.]

The True Human laughed bitterly and then spoke,

[What is there to be lonely about? All those who gathered in the Great Yin Valley to forge you are your parents. And since everyone gathered in the Great Yin Valley was forged by this world, in the end, you are the son of the entire world! Compared to orphans who are left stealthily at the doors of wealthy homes by their fathers or cling to the cold breast of their dead mothers unknowingly, how blessed are you?]

He was aware of that. Though there were many who faced him with blades, there were also many who opened their arms to him. He knew where to go when he needed a cozy embrace instead of harsh winds.

Yet, he desired.

[I wish to have a brother.]

Silence followed for a moment.

[That's a sorrowful thing to say.]

The True Human broke a reed and brought it to his face. A lip-shaped slit formed on the smooth face, holding the reed like a smoking pipe.

[Indeed.]

The True Human chewed on the reed for a while before sighing as if in lament,

[Indeed. A sword only finds its purpose when there's one in each hand.]

A sword held by one side only is merely a weapon, the True Human muttered.

While the tip of the reed bobbed up and down, he waited in silence.

Eventually, the True Human spoke,

[The sorcery that forged you is profound and potent. It can be said that the heavens, the earth, life, and principles of this world are all concentrated in you. The fact that it was artificially achieved means that human follies were also added. You will live an incomparably long life, but even so, throughout that long life, there will only ever be you who is like you.]

[.....]

[But there's no need to take such a grim conjecture as a prophecy.]

The True Human spat out the reed and walked towards him.

Thud, thud.

He hesitated. The stature of the True Human, who was surely smaller than him, grew with each step he took. Thud, thud. With each step, the sound of footsteps grew louder and heavier. Boom, boom. He felt it as a vibration before the sound, and the oppressive weight of the shadow, like a wet blanket, enveloped him.

[Lower your head.]

Soon, looking down at him, the True Human raised his fist.

[Let's see how many hits you can take.]

It was the day he entered the hermitage.

---

Blood splattered.

<Kuhuk!>

The man let out a desperate scream.

With eyes shimmering wetly with blood, he glared ahead and shouted as if vomiting blood,

<Black Dragon Witch... how could you...!>

The Black Dragon Witch, with her dark hair, laughed heartily as she unfolded her fan.

<Oh~hohohoho! My meticulous plan has come to a perfect fruition! Kim Gong-Ja! I thank you for your efforts to offer yourself to me!>

<Kuuk... Have you betrayed me...?>

<Had I done it alone, it would have been a betrayal. But!>

As the Black Dragon Witch snapped her fan shut with a thwack, a crowd of people surged forward in a rush.

<Take this! Kim Gong-Ja!>

<Kuek! Paladin, you...!?!>

<Here's a sword stab for you!>

<T-The Heretic Inquisitor...!>

<Hey, hey. Don't forget my sword too, will you?>

<Viper, aaaaaah...!>

<With this, I reclaim the top rank!>

<Even you, Sword Saint...!?!>

After being hit one by one, Kim Gong-Ja vomited blood, collapsing on the spot.

The Black Dragon Witch laughed loudly again, hiding her mouth with the fan.

<Ho! Ho! Ho! When everyone's will aligns like this, it's not betrayal but a grand consensus!>

Kim Gong-Ja couldn't respond to that ruthless statement. The laughter of those who were once his companions, who, in truth, had never been allies for even a moment, echoed endlessly as they mocked Kim Gong-Ja's end.

That's when it happened.

<Hah... W-Where is this...!?!>

With a face filled with bitter resentment, Kim Gong-Ja, who had closed his eyes, suddenly sprang up.

Before him stood a brightly flashing cross-shaped figure, leaning on a staff.

<I am the Tower Master.>

<T-Tower Master...!? Why...!?!>

<Kim Gong-Ja, you were not meant to die yet. However, having suffered such misfortune, I wish to grant you another chance.>

As the Tower Master spoke, light began to radiate from Kim Gong-Ja's body.

Trembling, Kim Gong-Ja looked at his hands.

<Oh... Ooooh... This, this power...!?!>

<It's your potential.>

<This power... that feels like it could even annihilate the Constellations, no, the Tower itself... This power is mine...!?!>

<And there's more. Open your status window. >

Kim Gong-Ja did as instructed and saw his skill slots filled to the brim with 99 SSS-class skills.

The Tower Master shone brilliantly.

<I will now send you back to the era of your choosing.>

<Understood.>

Gazing solemnly at the Tower Master, Kim Gong-Ja responded.

Soon, as Kim Gong-Ja melted into the crevice of time and space, he thought coldly,

<In my past life, I lived for others and was betrayed. I will not make that mistake again.>

Kim Gong-Ja declared resolutely,

<In this life, I will live solely for myself!>

Kim Gong-Ja.

The moment marked the return of the man who would be recorded as one who could even annihilate gods...

“Excellent!”

With a slap, the manuscript fell onto the table.

The Earth Spirit cartoonist scratched his balding head.

“Is that so?”

The Elf editor nodded.

“Yeah, really good! Especially this part around [This power that seems capable of annihilating even the Constellations]. It's amazing. I knew you were a great artist, but this is truly moving.”

“Well, I've been around for quite some time...”

“Right. It’s about time you had your own hit series, don’t you think? Can’t keep being an assistant forever. Time to settle down! Build a concrete home. Literally, and figuratively.”

The editor’s words made the cartoonist momentarily twitch his thick lips, but he soon laughed emptily and nodded.

“That would be the dream...”

“Ahh, it’ll happen. This kind of story is in vogue now. Totally trending. You know Kim Seul-Lam, right? That Mountain Calamity Tribe artist who debuted the year before last? Their first work turned into a drama and was a huge hit. Heard they built a building on the 20th floor of Paradise, not even Babylon.”

“Really...?”

“Of course, it’s true. Why would I lie?”

As the Elf editor grew more excited, the cartoonist’s face sank deeper into gloom. Regardless, the editor continued to tap the manuscript with a sugar stick while giving his critique.

“But, about this part with the Tower Master’s appearance...”

“Which part...?”

“Guess.”

Damn, why ask me? It's not like this is a classroom quiz. Just tell me what's bothering you... The cartoonist didn't voice his thoughts out loud. Instead, as he always did in such situations, he watched the editor giving him a meaningful look and tentatively spoke,

“Hmm... maybe having the godly figures as characters is too direct?”

“Nah. The godly figures are public domain, public domain. Didn't you see the stone tablet at Babylon? It's clearly written that you're free to use them as you please.”

“Then... um... maybe having 99 SSS-rank skills is too much...”

“Sigh. That's not it either. You really lack sense, author. Here, this part.”

Confused, the cartoonist looked where the Elf editor was pointing.

It was the scene introducing the Tower Master.

With a sigh full of exasperation, the editor said,

“Why would the Tower Master... What is this? What's this supposed to be?”

“Well, a hypercube... it's a 4-dimensional shape...”

“4-dimensional? Your brain works in 4 dimensions or what? Why did you do it like this?”

Mumbling, the cartoonist hung his head. The Elf editor, leaning in with his large ears, pressed, “Yes?” “What was that?” until finally getting an answer.

“Well... it seemed fitting for a god to have an unfathomable, incomprehensible aura...”

“Sigh~”

The Elf editor let out a long, world-weary sigh.

“That won’t do. Change it to a beautiful girl. Make her a beautiful girl wearing frilly clothes... oh, but wouldn’t a beautiful girl Tower Master overlap with the [Thousand-Year Viper] by the author next door? Then... how about a beautiful boy?”

“A, a beautiful boy?”

“Yeah, yeah. A beautiful boy, super pretty! Make one that we can even sell as a figure!”

As the Elf editor’s excitement grew, the cartoonist’s expression darkened further. Undeterred, the editor continued, tapping the manuscript with the sugar stick.

“And don’t just send him off like that... add something more. Since it’s going to be a beautiful boy, why not add some romance? Like, the beautiful boy Tower Master giving a kiss on Kim Gong-Ja’s forehead. Then light bursts forth! How’s that? The readers will drool over it, don’t you think?”

"....."

"Ah, I'm giving away such ideas for free... I should be charging for this. I'm losing out, seriously. I'm failing as an Elf."

"But...."

The cartoonist murmured with his head bowed.

"I'll... think about it."

The editor frowned.

"Think? What's there to think about?"

Without further reply, the cartoonist stood up.

True to his Earth Spirit nature, now known as Asura, the cartoonist's shadow grew large and enveloping, overshadowing the Elf editor. But the editor remained unflustered.

“You're not planning to draw your own comic, are you?”

Again, the cartoonist didn't respond but simply drooped his shoulders and turned away.

“That won't work! It won't sell!”

The editor continued to shout after the cartoonist's retreating back.

“After 15 years of hard work, you should know better, author!!”

It sounded more like a plea than a rebuke.

“Ah! It won't make money!!”

Holding the manuscript tightly, the cartoonist stepped out of the cafe. The editor's voice did not follow him outside.

Taking a deep breath, the cartoonist clenched his teeth, glanced at his own comic manuscript, then tensed as if to throw it away, but ended up hugging it close and began to walk.

[Key manifestation complete.]

The Tower's declaration echoed.

[The paths your life has taken have now become the myths of this world.]

[The 95th floor stage has been cleared!]

Of course, the cartoonist didn't hear the declaration. He simply walked towards his studio in silence.

But someone who heard the Tower's declaration quietly followed him.

[You are entering the 96th floor.]

---

Chapter 393: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (6)

---

[Our sect is righteous.]

His master began the conversation with these words.

[What is righteousness? How would you answer that?]

Pondering over his master's question, he delved into thought. 'Righteous' means just and upright.

He answered as he thought.

[I believe it means to pursue what is correct.]

[What is correct?]

He contemplated before responding.

[It means something that is not wrong.]

[What is the difference between what is not wrong and what is wrong?]

He thought over it but could not find an answer.

His master lifted his bandaged hand and pointed in a certain direction.

[What does 'that' look like to you?]

He looked where the master pointed. The spring sky was torn with blueness, with cotton-like clouds floating by.

[It looks like clouds.]

[Right. They are clouds.]

The master nodded and asked again.

[How do 'they' appear to you?]

This question plunged him into deep thought again.

It was after some time that he responded.

[They appear lonely.]

[Why so?]

[Because they occupy such a vast sky all alone.]

[Hmmm.]

A horizontal crease formed on the master's bald face, indicating a smile had spread across it.

Crouching down awkwardly, the master said,

[What you first described is 'righteous.' ]

Calling a cloud a cloud is not wrong, said his master.

[Seeing everything in nature as it is, accepting things as they are. Mountains are mountains, clouds are clouds, wind is wind, and water is water. This is the mindset of righteousness.]

Pffft.

The reed held between lips devoid of eyes and nose moved like a smoking pipe.

[What you described next is 'erroneous.']

Imposing one's feelings onto a cloud is incorrect, the master stated.

[Why is the sky so clear? Because it doesn't understand my feelings. Why does the cloud float alone? Because it sympathizes with my situation... Such a perspective, such interpretations prevent mountains from being mountains and water from being water. This is the mindset of sorcery.]

Chewing on the reed, the master elaborated.

[In other words, righteousness involves emptying oneself to encompass the world, whereas sorcery involves using oneself as a rope to entangle with the world.]

[.....]

[Both have clear limitations. In the world of righteousness, a mountain is merely a mountain and cannot be connected to me. Conversely, in the world of sorcery, everything in existence cannot exist without me.]

While listening to the master's explanation, he thought about those who had forged him and those he had slain.

The master showed his bandaged fist.

[I hit your head, because it was part of our sect's initiation process. Why do you think such a procedure exists?]

[To empty the mind.]

He answered and, with a respectful posture, added,

[Because only when empty can it be filled.]

[That is correct.]

The master nodded.

[It's difficult for a person to see a mountain simply as a mountain due to the contexts ingrained in their minds. It's necessary to cut off these contexts at least once. You, being of special origin, needed to be hit more.]

[I thought it was because my head was hard.]

[That was part of the reason, too.]

Silence lingered for a moment.

The master chuckled and then removed the reed from his mouth, holding it between his index and middle finger.

[Thus, we have emptied you, my disciple. But do not misunderstand. Both righteousness and sorcery have their values, as much as they have their limits. In other words, both are dangerous if taken to extremes.]

[By dangerous, you mean...]

[Imagine a renowned martial artist of righteousness. This illustrious martial artist, having reached the state of an immortal, can only see humans as merely humans. Whether it's a person grieving the loss of a child or someone born into wealth and never knowing want, in their view, they are simply humans. ]

The master sighed.

[As one becomes accustomed to seeing the world as it is, they eventually come to regard everything as non-entities. Truly, one who sees all as equal is incapable of empathy and becomes a monster detached from humanity.]

After clearly stating this, the master looked at him intently.

[Do not become such.]

[.....]

[I have taken you as my disciple. I have emptied you. Having been forged amidst sorcery, I will teach you to see the world correctly. But, my disciple! That 'world' includes the hearts of those who forged you and your feelings towards them.]

With his sword serving as a cane, the master spoke.

[The loneliness you've harbored until now is also part of this world. It need not be overvalued nor discarded. Accept its weight as it is.]

The master's sword pointed towards the cloud drifting across the sky.

[Accept it!]

He saw it.

[Accept the world, accept yourself!]

He did so.

[AAAAAAARGHHHHHHHHHHHHHH—!!!]

He stood up abruptly and took a deep breath. He opened his mouth and screamed.

A roar filled with a spring-killing fervor echoed far and wide.

His expression did not change. As he shouted with all his might, his eyebrows furrowed slightly. There were no tears, hence no sobs.

But it was his scream.

[Yes.]

The master nodded.

[Let it out. Cry. Keep what you've received, not to discard but to make room for other things. Next, I will teach you—]

The master spoke with renewed vigor.

[How to smile.]

The master kept his promise.

---

[Key manifestation complete.]

This time, the tower's declaration came swiftly, echoing immediately as they stepped onto the 96th floor.

[The number of works depicting your life, the number of people who have seen these works, and among them, the number of people whose lives have been changed due to these works, meet the required criteria.]

[The 96th floor stage has been cleared!]

Thus, the staircase leading to the 97th floor appeared.

However, the one who heard the tower's declaration did not step toward the staircase. Instead, they quietly followed the Earth Spirit cartoonist.

The Earth Spirit cartoonist was holed up in his workshop, lamenting his fate.

"Damn it. Am I lacking money or dignity? No, I get it. If you don't have money, you lose dignity. I understand, but really... Ah, should I climb the tower too? Learn martial arts and live the life of an adventurer?"

As one grumbles repeatedly, a smooth path forms. The cartoonist's complaints flowed effortlessly, even without the aid of alcohol.

"Why did I choose a pen instead of a sword? Why did I smear ink instead of blood?"

His gaze shifted from his own manuscript to the comic magazine released this month. The cover featured a character from the comic by Kim Seul-Lam or Park Seul-Lam, who supposedly built a building in Paradise.

His self-pity quickly turned to resentment towards others.

"Envious... damn bastard. I wish others would just like what I enjoy drawing too. Damn it. Everyone else lives as they please, so why do I have to suffer like this..."

Jealousy weighs down the heart. Grinding his teeth, the Earth Spirit cartoonist eventually succumbed to exhaustion and collapsed onto his work desk. Like a wet cotton absorbing water, his mind, filled with thoughts of divine figures, the Black Dragon Witch laughing 'hohoho', and the Tower Master transforming between a bearded old man and a hypercube, faded away.

Snores filled the small workshop.

[You may enter the 97th floor at any time.]

Someone quietly observed the cartoonist, now lost in sleep.

The cartoonist couldn't feel that gaze. Not because he was asleep, but because no one in this world could feel that gaze.

Yet, the gaze was undoubtedly fixed on the cartoonist. Its owner was clearly present in the same room as the cartoonist.

-.....

In this world, an intangible hand touched the cartoonist's shoulder.

It moved up and down.

As if comforting, the hand gently soothed the sleeping cartoonist.

-.....

The lips of the hand's owner moved slightly.

Their voice didn't reach the cartoonist. Neither did the touch. Since they were on different planes of existence, there was no way for the comfort to be conveyed, leaving no trace behind.

-.....

But that wasn't the case.

-....., ....., .....

No specific message descended like a divine revelation. The cartoonist didn't suddenly awaken with a skill, nor did he undergo a mental regression filled with ideas for hit comics.

Instead, each time the hand caressed his shoulder, the cartoonist's breath became more peaceful.

Jealousy subsided, and resentment faded.

-.....

That night, the cartoonist had a dream.

It was a disjointed dream... Therr was a man... a human man... cooped up in a space even smaller than the cartoonist's workshop, venting his grievances and lamentations about the world... everything outside the tower was unjust... everything inside the tower was corrupt... it seemed there was no place for the man anywhere....

Suddenly, this inconsequential man received a skill.

A skill that suited him perfectly... as if someone had watched him for a long time and crafted it specifically for him, it fit so well it was hard to believe it wasn't made just for him... if there was anything special about the skill, it was only because it was created solely for him... the skill encapsulated his life....

Perhaps the man was not alone.

Even while kneeling in lamentation, even while spewing resentment towards the world, the man was not alone. Someone was with him. The man didn't feel it at the time, but now, he knew it. Clearly, without a doubt.

-For you.

The man, while comforting the cartoonist, slightly parted his lips.

-May fortune be with you.

The cartoonist sprang up.

As if he had seen a ghost, he looked around. Inside the darkened workshop, he was alone. At least, that's how he perceived it.

"....."

Pondering over the dream he just had, the cartoonist thought for a long time. Like the sigh of an old woman dissolving into the winter wind, he desperately clung to and pieced together the fleeting contents of the dream, imagining a story.

Initially, he wasn't sure, but the images gradually became bold and vivid.

The cartoonist nodded, then made a phone call.

"Hello, editor?"

“Author?”

The irritable voice of the Elf, just awoken from sleep, came through.

“What’s this about at this hour?”

“Ah.”

The cartoonist's face flushed. It was dawn.

“Sorry... should I call back later?”

A groan came from the other end.

“No, it’s not the first time... just go ahead. What is it, author?”

The cartoonist's face turned red for a different reason before he cleared his throat.

“It’s about the comic...”

“Ah, yes. Hmm. I’ve thought about it too, but what if instead of a beautiful boy Tower Master, we have a cute mascot animal with a jewel on its forehead—”

“Can I redraw it?”

Silence echoed.

The cartoonist waited anxiously for the response, which came after a while.

“Redraw?”

The tone was unreadable over the phone. From that response, the cartoonist couldn’t tell if the editor was angry, shocked, or simply curious.

Feeling somewhat defensive, the cartoonist explained,

“Yes... I think I can draw something better than what I showed you...”

Silence again.

The cartoonist hurriedly added,

“No, it’s just... I really think I can do much better than yesterday’s...”

“Are you sure?”

This time, the cartoonist was silent.

The editor pressed,

“So, are you certain?”

The cartoonist thought deeply. Was he sure? Was he confident in this path?

Could he really do it?

It was uncertain. Confidence? He had never been confident about choosing the path of an artist. Whether those who design their lives with clear vision truly exist in this world is something the cartoonist didn't know.

But still...

Despite that...

“I can take responsibility.”

The cartoonist answered with his head bowed.

A long silence.

Finally, the voice on the other end let out a sigh.

“You should be making some money by now...”

The cartoonist understood that tone. With a voice half embarrassed and half excited, he said,

“I will make it. I should be able to... probably.”

“Probably? What does that mean...”

“Please help me.”

The cartoonist said.

“Just help me a little.”

Silence flowed between them over the phone.

In the end, as history often records, the Elf conceded first.

“Sigh, really.”

The editor lamented.

“Alright. I’ll wait.”

Joy bloomed on the cartoonist’s face.

“Thank you!”

“If you’re really thankful, make it a hit. Let’s finally get some bonuses, shall we?”

“I’ll do my best...”

“Yeah. I’m hanging up.”

The call ended.

Placing down the phone, the cartoonist nodded. He neatly folded the manuscript he had drawn last time, stored it away in a drawer, and picked up his pen. His fingers, more excited than his heart, tapped the blank manuscript paper with the pen.

He still wasn’t sure, but this time, the feeling was good.

Really good.

-.....

A similar feeling was shared by another.

He watched the cartoonist begin his work. The pen raced across the paper so swiftly it seemed not one but six pens were at work, and the expressions of the characters, unconsciously mimicked by the cartoonist's face, felt not singular but triple. Engrossed in his work as if possessed, the cartoonist's dedication was a true reflection of his race's name, Asura.

Perhaps the cartoonist won't earn as much as he hoped.

He might be disappointed by the reaction of the people, and despair over his own capabilities.

But after overcoming all those hardships, he should be able to produce a work he feels he did his best on.

The cartoonist himself didn't know this. Nor did the editor.

But the one accompanying them knew it well.

-.....

As the clouds floated across the spring sky, a warm gaze swept over the cartoonist and then turned away.

[You are entering the 97th floor.]

The end was nearing.

---

Chapter 394: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (7)

---

His master was not a perfect person.

[That's not how you do it. Look closely.]

There was always a hint of excitement in those words.

[Well done. You're quite good.]

Those words were always tinged with a bit of jealousy.

[I have nothing more to teach you in this area. You're better at it than I am.]

And those words were always mixed with a touch of despair.

It wasn't solely because he was particularly perceptive that he could sense these emotions. It was because his master made no effort to hide them.

When he had first joined, his master had made it clear.

[I will treat you exactly as you are.]

[.....]

[I won't embellish. I won't hide. I won't deceive. You will always see me as I truly am. The me you see will correspond exactly to the depth of my essence.]

The master looked him straight in the eye.

[Therefore, you must become strong.]

[.....]

[Sometimes people claim they're just being 'honest' as an excuse for their behavior. What they forget is that anyone's heart can be sharp enough to cut through someone else's. Just as there's no etiquette in carrying an unsheathed sword around, dealing with someone frankly is never just a heartwarming tale.]

The master took hold of both his shoulders and continued in a firm tone:

[Yet despite that, I will be honest with you. Your heart will be cut by me countless times. Be prepared for that. Understand?]

He nodded.

It was as his master said. Raw honesty was indeed a terrifying thing. Through actual combat, he learned that even when the people of Taeumgul clung to him, even when enemies pointed their swords at him, they were never completely honest.

His master also taught him how to cope with this knowledge.

[Don't give consideration to what cannot be considered. Cut through it. Don't avoid it; face it head-on. Don't accept what can't be accepted. Counter it. Face me with the mindset of wielding a weapon in a duel. Endure. Confront. Grow stronger!]

He did just that.

He didn't avoid getting hurt. He didn't try to superficially please. He just treated the person known as his master as he truly was... and his master treated him the same way. There was no misunderstanding to wedge between them, just as there can be no gap between mountains and fields.

Therefore.

[It's about time for me to leave.]

He couldn't misunderstand the meaning of those words.

[Master.]

[I've lingered for quite some time.]

His master was dying.

The divine humans, a race that lived by absorbing sunlight through their skin and drawing sap with their mouths, did not change much in physical form from birth to death. One could roughly guess their age by the luminosity of their skin. Already dim when they first met, the master, now akin to a candle burning down to its last, was on the brink of extinguishing.

[I was not strong enough to live forever. That's all there is to it.]

The master coughed. His body flashed brightly once, then dimmed.

Learning that not misunderstanding can be terrifying, and at the same time, sad, was something he had come to know.

[I'm glad.]

And also, it could be as painfully joyful.

[That I could meet you before I left.]

In those words were sincere apologies and deep gratitude.

[That I could teach you many things.]

Contained within those words were profound regret and immense relief.

[It was a blessing to be your master.]

Those words held bottomless anxiety and soaring pride.

[Master.]

His master could have said other things.

I'm sorry. I was wrong. I wasn't enough.

That he couldn't lead the way consistently, that he couldn't even stand beside him due to his own weakness, he could have asked for forgiveness.

But instead of that, his master chose to express gratitude for their meeting. Instead of apologizing for his shortcomings, he was thankful. And it wasn't a lie. It wasn't a fabrication. Despite both being equally true, despite neither choice being false, his master chose that path.

He knew this without deceit.

Thud!

He pressed his forehead to the ground.

Thud!

The master, lying on the sickbed, maintained a faint flicker as he watched him.

Thud! Thud! Thud!

These were bows offered to the master.

Silently, the master received those bows. Each bow carried gratitude, sorrow, and once more, gratitude. If each slice of the Primeval Blade had ensnared a soul in the sky, then the bows he made surely drew those souls down to the earth to rest in peace.

There were seventeen bows in total.

The master smiled. Without eyes or a nose, just the movement of his lips could convey a broad smile.

[Thank you.]

The master closed his eyes.

It didn't take long for the flickering to fade, leaving behind only a pale body. By the time that happened, he no longer had a master.

[.....]

Living in a world without his master was not as daunting as one might expect.

His master had taught him. There are problems in the world that exist regardless of one's strength.

A single person's heart could be sharp enough to wound him. The need to face each person with the mindset of crossing swords meant the world was full of adversaries. He could kill every living person in the world, but conversely, he couldn't save even one dying individual.

He was not invincible.

He was just a bit lucky.

He was just born a bit stronger.

That was all.

He was an ordinary person.

At that moment, he realized he was not lonely.

---

The declaration of clearing the floor came as soon as they entered, just as before.

[Key manifestation complete.]

[The slices of the world you've woven into your own are now completely bound to your world.]

[Worlds that were destroyed have been granted another chance in the realm of the dead.]

[The 97th floor has been cleared.]

Yet the one who heard the declaration did not step onto the staircase to the next floor. Instead, they quietly walked through the world.

No— through worlds.

"In this universe, as a cosmic knight would say..."

He walked through a world made up only of points and lines, a world without stars, filled with countless artificial satellites and the massive corridors that connected them.

"In the legend of the renowned Dawn Cottage, there's a terrifying tale."

"What tale is that?"

"I don't believe in legends..."

"What's with this crazy old coot?"

He wandered through a world where a lone cottage stood atop a dimly lit mountain peak. A world that was nothing more than that cottage.

"Mom! Mom! Look at this!"

"Yes, my child. This is called 'dried pollock'. Where did you find it?"

"Ooh! Uncle Pollock gave it to me!"

A world where a free-spirited girl held the hand of her frail-looking mother, crossing a pedestrian crossing.

In that world, the woman and the man briefly locked eyes. Perhaps even with the woman's daughter, who might be her child.

It might have been mere coincidence, or they might have genuinely shared a glance. The man himself didn't know.

In truth, the man wasn't even sure if he and the silver-haired woman had genuinely shared any communication in the previous world, or if it was just an incredible coincidence.

But he knew he would find out soon.

Very soon.

-.....

After traversing several worlds, the man finally stopped in front of a blooming red peony in spring.

Beyond that peony, a sword was embedded in the ground.

There was nothing else. No tower-like tombstone, no mountain-like burial mound. Although it seemed maintained, as there was no rust on the blade, the area was indistinguishable from a flower garden, filled with wildflowers and weeds.

But this place was more than just a flower garden.

It was merely that the sword, along with that peony, were just flowers among the weeds and wildflowers.

-.....

The man began to bow toward the flower.

-.....

In his first bow, the man encapsulated a world where an innocent child's pain was used to achieve immortal happiness, the death and rebirth of that world.

-.....

In his second bow, he encapsulated the silver heart stuck in eternity, a world that died for a duty beyond love and lived again for a love beyond duty.

-.....

With the third bow, another world.

The fourth bow, the fifth bow, the sixth bow...

-.....

Eventually, in the last, the ninth bow, the man included the peony that bloomed at the end of an eternal winter.

-.....

The man bowed deeply.

Then he stepped back until the peony was out of sight before turning around to walk away.

[You are entering the 98th floor.]

---

Chapter 395: The Time He Waited, The Time He Walked (8)

---

After his master died, he wandered the world for a while.

He was unparalleled.

He walked alone. Yet, people lined up to block his path and queued to follow in his wake.

[Stop, you wicked demon! How dare someone like you claim to be a disciple of the Sun Sage and falsely represent the righteous factions!]

[My son, the Primal Blade! When will you return to us?]

[You are a formidable one. I pay my respects.]

[My lord, I am called Myohuseong, and I wish to light your way....]

There were those who swung weapons, those who clutched at his sleeves, those who sought a handshake, and those who bowed, but they all shared one thing in common— they all surrounded him. The weight of the footsteps he left behind was deepened by all those he met.

Thus, wherever he passed, great roads were formed.

It was the Great Road March.

[Sword Demon.]

[Sword Dragon.]

[Sword King.]

[Sword Heaven.]

[Sword Saint.]

The myriad titles bestowed upon him were unified on those great roads.

[Sword Emperor.]

That became his new name.

One whom all blocked yet none could obstruct. One whom none could follow yet all sought to follow. One who walked with none yet was accompanied by all.

The Sword Emperor traversed this world of myriad swords like a comet.

However, this period wasn't named the fifth slashing strike in the Ten Thousand Sword world solely because of the Sword Emperor's path that cut deep like a blade's mark. It was also the time when "that" appeared.

People whispered amongst themselves.

[What is that?]

It was a colossal tower.

Yet, this tower was too significant to merely be dismissed. It was tall and thick.

Those who had lived in cities would not dare to consider it a mere tower as it was larger than the largest city they knew. Those who had climbed mountains would find it taller than any mountain's ridge they had ascended, and those who had ventured into the sea would not dare to think of it as a mere tower as it stood towering over the entire horizon.

[It's like the hilt of a sword that a giant has thrust into the world to split it apart.]

That's what people whispered to one another.

This murmuring spread in the following words.

[Who built it?]

[What dwells within it?]

[What being resides at its summit?]

And it was concluded with these words.

[Why can it be seen from anywhere?]

Just as they said, the tower could be seen from everywhere.

It was a strange phenomenon. It's impossible for something to be in two places at once.

Yet, wherever one turned their head, the tower was there, beyond.

Beyond the city, beyond the mountains, beyond the sea, beyond the roads, like a backdrop that wouldn't fade, casting its base far into the distance.

[Is it too big?]

Someone who claimed that by walking far enough, one would return to their starting point because the world is round, speculated as much.

[Is it a mirage?]

Someone who found it strange that no matter how much they approached or fled, it never got closer or farther, speculated as much.

[No.]

The one who provided a clear answer to the heated debates was the Sword Emperor.

[It's following us.]

The people could not immediately comprehend the Sword Emperor's words. The tower was following them? Did that mean the tower was alive?

The Sword Emperor affirmed it plainly.

[It's waiting.]

[Waiting?]

[Yes. Can't you feel this 'waiting'?]

People looked at each other.

Anger is easily felt. Love, contempt, too, can be easily detected. But to feel 'waiting' was somewhat unfamiliar.

Yet, the Sword Emperor naturally used that unusual term. Even more astonishingly, what he said next surprised those gathered even more.

[I guess I should go and have a drink.]

"Ah," the Sword Emperor stood up. He stretched leisurely.

He said,

[I'll be right back.]

[Excuse me? Where to?]

[Up there.]

It sounded as if he was saying he'd pop by the tavern in front for a moment. His too-calm demeanor left the people unable to grasp the meaning of his words.

[Whoever wants to come, follow.]

And the Sword Emperor did not give them a chance to understand.

[I'll be waiting.]

That day, into the Ten Thousand Sword world, marked by blades, a single forged blade entered.

It was over 150 years ago.

---

After paying my respects with a triple prostration at my master's funeral, I entered the 98th floor.

[You are entering the 98th floor.]

The moment I set foot there, I was seized by a peculiar sensation.

-.....

A familiar feeling.

The sensation of peering into something familiar.

-This place is.....

The Aegim Empire.

The very world where I met Shiny and fought with Ester.

I was standing in the quiet imperial audience chamber.

-It's been a while since I've been here.

I murmured.

Beside me, floating leisurely, the Guardian Spirit crossed his arms and chuckled slyly.

-It's been a while since you've seen someone too.

-Someone I haven't seen in a while?

-Remember what your family's advisor used to say?

-Eh? Ester?

-Right. Before she became your advisor.

-Oh, hold on. It's been quite some time..... Ah, perhaps the one who said she would send me to the 99th floor..... Ah.

Indeed.

As if in tune with my realization, a familiar sound rang out.

-.....

It was the sound of raindrops.

Drip, drip... drip-drip-drip. Drip...

Rain. The abandoned droplets from the sky hit the audience chamber window. A blurred streak slowly spread before being swiftly washed away by a new downpour.

-.....

Even in a world that had come to a halt, only the rain continued to flow.

And then, a voice reached me.

"Lord?"

I lifted my head.

From afar, Ester was walking towards me. That face, which I hadn't seen in so long, bore an expression as if she had seen a ghost.

"My Lord? ...Is it really you?"

Hmm.

I raised a hand with a pleased expression.

-Yeah, advisor. It's been quite some—

In the next moment, a terrifying shock struck me.

-Ugh...!!

Like a fly swatted by a flyswatter, I was slammed to the ground. Then, a waterfall of aura struck down on me again. I nearly perished!

-Wait, why are you suddenly— ugh!

"Why do you think!?"

Hmm.

Well, because it's been too long... No, wait a minute.

-How can you see me— kheuk!

"Because I am! Here! The test administrator of the 98th floor!"

-Being able to contact me means— ugh!

"Yes! The pillars came and explained! That you, Lord, would be coming soon, so I should prepare!"

-That I can be touched means— kik!

"Yes! Really, what in the world... seriously!"

I closed my mouth. The rapid-fire explanations made perfect sense. Even more so, the threat of being shattered with each question added made me wary of opening my mouth.

Ester, seemingly unable to contain her emotions, huffed and puffed for a while before lifting her red aura-wrapped greatsword again.

"Anyway, please take a few more hits!"

No.

Even if I keep my mouth shut, am I still going to be hit regardless?

-Just a moment, advisor. Isn't replacing the joy of our reunion with violence— gyaaak!

For a while, the beating continued. The sound of pouring rain and the shock that rang in my ears blurred together, indistinguishable, until Ester's sword finally stopped.

Not by Ester's will.

"That will be enough, advisor."

It was Shiny's voice.

I lifted my head. In my beaten view, I saw Shiny, step by step, descending.

Ester hissed.

"Hwiya."

"Yes. I understand the sentiment but... still."

Understood?

I wish she hadn't understood— just as I thought that, Hwiya added something.

"Ester's current look is just like those girls in the novel genres Viper loves...."

"Aaaaaack!"

Ester screamed. Hwiya extended a wing to gently pat Ester's head before turning to me.

Hmm.

I spoke.

-Hello, Shiny. You are—

"I'm also the test administrator of the 98th floor."

-Ah. Indeed. Just like Ester—

"I was also managing floors 11 through 20."

-Hmm. The reason you're interrupting me now is—

"Do you want to ask?"

-No...

I hung my head.

Both Hwiya and Ester, who had barely recovered her shattered self, glared at me with icy eyes.

Hwiya was the first to speak.

"Please come back soon."

-.....Hmm.

I couldn't argue against those words, laden with a sigh. After all, I had been walking among people for a long time without revealing myself.

-I'm sorry.

I had no choice but to bow deeply, sincerely.

-I'll be back soon.

"Yes. ...Hmm."

Hwiya spread her five pairs of wings wide. The Goddess of the Sword stretching was like a blanket dried in the morning sun, scattering a soft fragrance around.

"We, along with the advisor, will help ensure you can do that."

A moment later, a message window opened.

[The Goddess of Protection offers you a reward.]

[The Demon King of Autumn Rain offers you a reward.]

[Please choose one of the two rewards.]

-Uh.

I unwittingly blinked.

It was inevitable.

Because those were messages I hadn't seen in a very long time.

-You guys.....

As if anticipating my reaction, a selection window floated up before me.

+

[The Goddess of Protection]

Description: The Goddess of the Aegim Empire, moved by your dedication, offers you the honor of preparing a meal for her.....

+

-Uh... wait a minute. Is this saying I should prepare the meal? Not that she'll prepare one for me? And this is described as an honor?

+

You can prepare fried egg soy sauce rice, a Sormewin-style feast, or even fry chicken. Regardless of your choice, your cooking will undergo a strict evaluation and will be scored.....

+

-Excuse me!?

+

O Warrior of the Goddess! Please return soon.

And please, give Silvia a good thrashing!

*Why can't I receive the Goddess's reward if I choose the Demon King's reward?

+

-No! The last part is really weird! Using a quest message like that, Shiny, you.....

As I stared at Shiny with a bewildered face, I was even more taken aback by the new message that appeared.

+

[The Demon King of Autumn Rain]

Description: The Demon King admires your feats. The Demon King proposes that you secretly collaborate with her. She promises the exact same reward as the Goddess, with an additional gift.

Hurry back and read 99 recommended novels by Ester and leave at least a 1200-character review!

If you promise that, the Demon King will use his power to transport you directly to the 99th floor.

*Only one person can receive the Demon King's reward. (It's just you anyway.)

---

*If multiple people choose this reward, one will be randomly selected. (But that won't happen.)

---

*If no one chooses, the Demon King's reward will be automatically selected.

-Ester, you too... Hey, you guys.....

As I muttered with a dumbfounded face, looking at their faces made me laugh.

I couldn't help but laugh.

-You guys are really.....

Once upon a time.

There was a Demon King who became an avatar of vengeance after all it had was burned away. Because of that Demon King, a Goddess who could only watch as all she had achieved was submerged beneath a flood had no choice.

-Ester.....

The Demon King wished for nothing more than for others, even by a sliver, to not find happiness. Not even the future. Certainly not its own happiness.

The Demon King wished only for those who plunged it and its precious beings into misery, those who by their mere existence allowed this, to fall into hell.

-Shiny..... Hwiya.

The Goddess tried her best to prevent it.

Like scooping out water from an overflowing dam by hand. Desperately pleading with us to not fall for the Demon King's tricks, to give their already ruined world one more chance.

-You guys.....

Thus, the two, while opposing each other, used every character in the quest window to point their swords at each other. Tempting us, begging us, mocking, lamenting, all so that we would choose them and not the other.

There was such a time.

-.....

And now, those two were speaking to me through that very quest window.

Hurry back, they said.

We'll be waiting, they said.

That was.

That was a very beautiful thing to me.

-.....Yeah.

From the 91st floor to the 97th floor, what I had felt once again enveloped me.

The experiences I had while climbing the tower were not meaningless.

-I'll be back.

[Key manifestation complete.]

I said, wiping the corners of my eyes. Really, barely managing to speak.

Ester and Hwiya looked at each other and smiled faintly.

[The 98th floor administrator— the otherworldly managers you first encountered grant you passage.]

"Yes."

"Come back safely."

[The 98th floor stage has been cleared.]

Thus, they sent me off.

[You are entering the 99th floor.]

■.

As soon as the sandstorm dispersed, what enveloped me was an almost violent fragrance of flowers.

The fragrance of flowers in my sanctuary, is like a curtain soaked on a rainy day— subdued, only delicately touching and mingling with the weary lives, never overpowering.

But what filled this place was a completely different, vibrant scent.

The scent of those living unreservedly. The fragrance of those indulging in life without holding back.

“.....Sigh.”

I steadied my dizzy head, and almost immediately, I noticed another anomaly.

My palm distinctly felt textures.

Breathing was perceptible.

Temperature could be felt.

“.....Indeed.”

I clenched and unclenched my fist. I closed my eyes once and then opened them. A feast of natural colors as dazzling as the fragrance assaulted my eyes.

Amongst the living, I, too, was alive.

"....."

And there, I saw him.

Sitting cross-legged atop the overflowing flower bed, he was there. Perhaps he had been sitting there for a very long time. Amidst the ever-changing seasons, he seemed to have been weathered alive into stone, covered in moss beyond grass, flowers, and trees.

The wind blew.

Because he had been so still, at first, it seemed only his robe fluttered. Caught by that fluttering, it took a moment to realize he had extended his arm to the side.

His large hand grasped the hilt of a colossal sword submerged beneath the flower bed.

His shoulder, arm, and hand writhed independently as if alive.

The sword was drawn.

With a movement as fierce as a rising dragon, the flowers were not crushed, nor were the grasses broken. Instead, the flower bed merely rippled like the surface of a lake.

Standing amidst the flower bed, soaking his feet, he rose.

He turned around.

The piercing sunlight shattered into light and shadow upon his angular muscles. The shattered sunbeams danced around the flower petals like beads, and his sprawling shadow merged with the shadow of the grass on the ground.

The open sky was traversed by clouds as grand as mountains. Within this narrow world, he stood alone, a mountain range unto himself.

The wind blew again.

Dandelion seeds, whoosh, scattered.

“Come on in.”

Under the azure sky, the Sword Emperor smiled.

“You're late, you zombie bastard.”

---

Chapter 396: Our World (1)

---

“I anticipated this.”

I began.

“You've hinted at the 99th floor a few times, making cryptic remarks—”

To correct myself,

I intended to begin.

“Quiet, zombie! Eat this first!”

The clouds in the sky split in two.

Then the sky itself cleaved apart. Following the real line of the bifurcated sky, a crack formed in the void, extending towards me and rapidly widening.

I exclaimed,

“This is absurd...!”

The moment I raised my dagger, an explosion ensued.

Boom...!

The aura I had infused into the dagger snuffed out like a flame hit by sand. I frantically pumped aura through the hilt, but soon realized the futility of my actions.

“Arghhhhh!”

It was akin to raising a shield against an oncoming tsunami. Even if some called that person a Don Quixote rather than a hero, from the perspective of someone once hailed as a hero, doing something that leaves a meaningful impact is the bare minimum.

Thus—

"Enough, for the love of...!"

With a grunt, I shifted my grip on the dagger.

The angle of entry skewed, and the Sword Emperor's strike was somewhat diverted. Given the sheer volume, it was impossible to block, but at least I had bought some time to breathe, which was all I needed.

I shouted.

"Do it now!"

The ground swayed and shook.

The roots spread beneath it, the grass above, sunflowers, anemones, lilies, larkspur, lilies of the valley, starflowers, poppies, marigolds, and morning glories— all trembled in unison. Pollen scattered in the air. Vitality and the will to live overflowed.

On this trembling land, however, I remained unshaken, firmly rooted in place.

What I envisioned was not a pillar, but a great tree.

The World Tree.

I imagined roots sprouting from beneath my feet, extending deep, very deep, and spreading wide, endlessly wide. Even if the ground shook, I wouldn't be disturbed since my roots reached the far end of the opposite side. Not only was I unshaken, but the trembling of the ground itself was due to the vibration of my roots.

I absorbed it all.

The scattered vitality, the nutrients spread throughout the ground, the grains stored in termite nests, the single breath of an unnamed insect hibernating for winter— I drew them all in. Energy rushed into me like a waterfall in reverse, but I didn't hoard it. Instead, I directed it all to one place, my left hand gripping the dagger.

I had become a conduit.

A tremendous energy flowed through me towards the dagger I held.

It exploded.

Boom...!

The Sword Emperor's strike from the sky was repelled by my own that burst forth from the ground.

The Sword Emperor, like a butterfly on a spring day, twirled and landed gently on a blade of grass, coming to a stop.

“That's right.”

The Sword Emperor grinned.

“You've learned to manipulate external energy.”

“What are you doing!”

I fumed, yelling out.

The Sword Emperor, not losing his smile, replied.

“Well done.”

“What? No, I mean, it's a bit embarrassing to be praised like that... I've been practicing what you hinted at in the Heaven of Truth and outright pointed out on the 91st floor all this time. No, no, that's not it. Why did you suddenly attack—”

“Knowing and using are different matters. I thought you might not know how to apply it in real situations since it's your undertaking.”

“Really now...”

I scratched the back of my head.

“Thinking about it, there were many hints even before you told me.”

"....."

“To manifest Ki, it's common to accumulate internal energy. And the most used method for accumulating that internal energy is to sit cross-legged in places with good water and air and meditate.”

These are commonly referred to as Ki Cultivation Methods, Energy Accumulation Techniques, and Internal Energy Heart Techniques.

“In other words, most of the Ki used by martial artists originates from the outside. They digest and refine it and melt it inside, which then becomes what we call [internal energy].”

Turning the Ki that exists outside of me into my own.

That's the essence of Internal Energy Heart Techniques, and why things like millennium-old ginseng, thousand-year-old maca, purified rock oil, and the medicines made by Apothecary, as well as that giant tortoise nearly made of aura, function as spiritual medicines.

“But the world and I are not separate entities.”

In the Demonic Cult, [I] am [the rope that ties the world together].

In the Orthodox Faction, [I] am separate from each object in the world, but precisely because of that, [I myself am also part of the world's end].

Subjectification and objectification. The advantages and disadvantages of each are clearly reflected in the martial arts of each faction.

It's commonly believed that while it's easier to advance to a certain extent in the Demonic Cult, it's difficult to go beyond, whereas in the Orthodox Faction, it's hard to reach a certain level, but there are more experts beyond the extreme compared to the Demonic Cult, probably for this reason.

“There's no need to obsess over growing [my internal energy] within me.”

As I spoke, I dispelled the image of roots I had spread beneath my feet.

“No matter how much I grow my internal energy, even to the point of transforming and shedding my mortal shell, there's a limit to the vessel that is [me].”

As the image of the roots receded, the pathway for absorbing external energy closed.

“Rather, it's more efficient to make [myself] into [a conduit].”

Naturally, the World's Ki that had been flowing into the dagger through my body dispersed.

“Of course, to [strengthen that conduit], I need to be somewhat stronger myself.”

I took a deep breath.

The external energy that flowed out with my breath filled my dantian, which was empty of internal energy, like a vessel.

“Even that is not a necessary condition.”

I looked at the Sword Emperor.

“That's why master could split mountains even without a speck of internal energy.”

“That's right.”

The Sword Emperor nodded.

“The core structure of Internal Energy Heart Techniques is mainly twofold: [Meditation] and [Circulation]. Whether it's the Nine Yang God Technique, the Purple Dew Heart Method, or the Valkenheim Mana Cultivation Technique, they all have these two elements, differing only in the depth of meditation they induce and the path they use to transport Ki.”

"....."

“Among these, meditation is for absorbing external energy into me. By deeply understanding the world, I break down the boundary between the world and myself, allowing me to absorb energy from the entire world. Circulation is to guide the absorbed Ki to the Dantian. As you just said, by combining the Ki I had with the absorbed Ki and refining it, I enhance my own Ki.”

The Sword Emperor plucked a piece of the severed cloud and sat upon it, raising a finger.

“But if you truly understand this, you can immerse yourself in deep meditation under any circumstances, breaking down the boundary between the world and yourself, and directly transport the world's Ki to the desired location, making [your own internal energy] unnecessary.”

The Sword Emperor stated plainly.

“That is the essence of the Sword Heart.”

This entire process involved no grand ideologies, abstract metamorphoses, or inscrutable mysteries.

Once the premises are known, it all becomes logically possible.

Such is the secret of all magic.

“Have you been here all along?”

“Yeah.”

The Sword Emperor chuckled with his arms crossed.

“My ghosts that were attached to you and the old man... um. I do control them, but explaining this is even more complicated than explaining the Sword Heart.”

“Try explaining anyway.”

“Let me show you.”

With that, the Sword Emperor flicked his finger.

+

[Sword Constellation - Root]

Rank: A+

Effect: You can create your own spiritual beings to advise those climbing the tower. Whisper your experiences of climbing up to the 99th floor in their ears. Those who receive your advice will be astonished by your vast knowledge.

*However, the recipient must possess a skill that complements this one. Without it, no one will recognize you.

*Synchronization between you and your spiritual being(s) occurs at specific intervals, typically daily, but this may shorten or lengthen depending on the floors the advisee is climbing.

*The knowledge applied to your spiritual being(s) may be distorted or modified as it passes through the tower. These alternative guidelines are determined by the Pillar Assembly.

+

Indeed.

I understood.

“Just like messages in a chat program don't go directly to the recipient but first pass through a [server], the messages you send through the Guardian Spirit also go through the tower as a [server] and get censored in the process.”

“Similar. Uh, how should I put it? It's more like—”

“Ah. Is it closer to [Puppeteer’s Parrade sharing memories]? No, rather than sharing memories...”

“Right. It's like copying and pasting my memories to create them. Then, periodically synchronize and absorb the created Guardian Spirits' memories. After that, update again with another copy-paste. But during that process, the tower's censorship comes into play, and it's not done in real-time, so...”

I recalled the Guardian Spirit of the Sword Saint looking puzzled when it had just been copied.

Well, waking up in another world after falling asleep would be just as bewildering.

“When I was getting thrashed by the fox...”

“Yeah. Because there's a periodic synchronization process, I noticed something was off quite early.”

But with the time lag, coupled with the fox and the tower's double memory manipulation, that's how they indirectly helped.

I was completely convinced.

“Huh. So besides me and the Sword Saint, there could be others you're attached to...”

“Wanna know?”

“No. Honestly, I'm curious, but I won't ask because...”

I took out a new roll of duct tape and started rewrapping the handle, torn from the recent clash.

“Having you here means I'm the first to arrive anyway.”

The Sword Emperor's smile deepened.

That was enough of an answer, so I asked the next question.

“What's the quest for the 99th floor?”

“What do you think?”

“Well.”

I stroked my chin.

I looked around. The splendid flower garden welcomed me as always.

Despite the recent clash, where the Sword Emperor and I used the world's energy, there was no change, as if removing a spoonful of water from the ocean. Not only because the consumed external energy was returned to the world but also because the world was so powerful.

Naturally, my gaze settled on the Sword Emperor and stopped.

I smiled.

“Shall we settle it with a duel between us?”

The Sword Emperor also smiled.

“You've grown a lot, our zombie.”

“It's my growth spurt.”

“You're more of an uncle than I am now, aren't you?”

“Try calling me Uncle Gong-Ja.”

“Zombie ahjussi*.”

*Korean word for referring to older middle-aged men.

“Considering your juvenile jokiness, I'm definitely the adult here...”

“Ahjussi, shall we spar?”

“Oh, well.”

By then, I had finished wrapping the duct tape around the dagger's handle. As I tore off the tape with my teeth, I asked.

“So, what is it? What's this ninth key that's kept someone like you pinned here on the 99th floor for over a century?”

As if waiting for my question, a quest window appeared.

+

[The Ninth Key]

Do you remember the moment you first entered the tower?

+

The Sword Emperor must have seen this quest window numerous times, but it was my first.

I read the following sentences.

+

What was in your heart when you first entered the tower?

What was the first skill you acquired?

What did you seek to prove?

+

The Sword Emperor stood with his arms crossed.

+

Here is a man. He said everyone could become like him. Thus, his final key must naturally be for someone to become like him.

+

I was reading the quest window.

+

Here is a man. He asked if he could become like someone. Thus, his final key must naturally be that someone he wished to become.

+

The quest window spoke.

+

And now, here.

Finally, there are two men.

+

I looked at the Sword Emperor.

The Sword Emperor was looking at me.

+

Your key is each other.

+

The next moment, the world resounded loudly.

---

Chapter 397: Our World (2)

---

[Key manifestation complete.]

[The 99th floor stage has been cleared.]

The flower garden split wide open.

[You are entering the 100th floor.]

Something surged up from the depths of the split garden.

It was a colossal mirror.

It was too large to merely reflect a person. It was of a mythic size that could reflect an entire legion in formation. The edges were jagged with crystal growths, and its surface bore a sinisterly dim purple hue on both sides.

Like a barrier from hell, the mirror stood between me and the Sword Emperor, featuring nine keyholes.

[Please insert the keys.]

I lifted my head and slowly approached the keyholes.

Although mirrors, unlike glass, couldn't show what's beyond them, somehow I knew that the Sword Emperor was mirroring my actions on the other side.

[The first key by those who breathe within the shadows you cast.]

I peered into the first keyhole.

+

What kind of person were you?

Were you strong? Were you lovely? Were you beautiful?
Were you regrettable?

+

I took out the key and inserted it into the first hole.

“I was someone people could rely on.”

From the other side, the Sword Emperor's voice echoed.

“I wanted to be someone worth waiting for.”

The clanking sound resonated in unison.

The brightness and saturation of the mirror increased by a notch.

The more distinct purple mirror brought forth the next question.

+

[The second key by those who chose to follow you.]

What were the apostles to you?

Were they tools? Were they lovers? Were they family?

+

I inserted the second key.

“My apostles were peers, equals to me.”

Similarly, the Sword Emperor's response came from the other side.

“My apostles were like brothers to me.”

The brightness of the mirror surged once again.

+

[The third key by the gods you faced.]

What were gods to you?

+

“Beings capable of carelessness and mistakes, thus, naturally, capable of growth.”

“Had I not met my master, I might have ended up like them.”

I sequentially inserted the fourth and fifth keys.

“Honestly, I did have some regrets. It was sorrowful. If only I had been there, if only I had stayed till the end, at least till the conclusion with the Grey Spider. Maybe then, I could have done something more.”

“Well, I don't see it that way. Just like you talked about the first wave, the grey tide lived as they wanted. The one who was my 94th floor key was the same in that sense. Those who don't blame others walk on their own feet, naturally not leaning on others for support.”

“I was pleased to hear stories about me spreading far and wide. And I was scared. People assigned meanings to every facet of my life that I myself didn't know. I'm not talking about malicious distortions here, nor am I talking about misunderstandings. It was realizing that what I thought I had under total control, myself, wasn't really the case.”

“To become a myth is to go far beyond being just a subject of tales. People don't argue whether the nice neighbor has hemorrhoids or athlete's foot. But if that neighbor is bald, and the ones talking like baldness, then the story gets complicated. People fight as much for those they admire and respect as they do to exclude those they dislike and disdain. And being a cause for war is a shitty situation.”

Clank, clank.

The emerging phrases and the act of inserting the matching keys turned into a dialogue between me and the Sword Emperor, with the mirror between us.

“I felt I wasn't alone. Probably the Tower Master had been with me all along. Right from the moment I entered the tower till now.”

“Yeah. And she's probably watching us right now. Hey~ Lady~ Watching us~? We'll be there soon~”

“...Oh come on. Um. Anyway, if you were watching, you could've helped out sooner. Like when I first met the Tower Master and heard about her ideals. But then again, thinking about it, about the alternate timelines Mutia showed me. When someone gains an opportunity, it means depriving another of the chance they could have had.”

“Hmm.”

“Even if that someone didn't know they could have had that chance, the one who reversed time would feel it, even if vaguely. Even if they don't feel it, they'd have doubts. Is this really the best? Is this truly the best path for everyone, in the grand scheme of things?”

“Zombie, can you hear? The screams of countless victims created every time you reversed time. The footsteps of doom from an avenger who lost everything due to the butterfly effect of your actions that day are steadily approaching you.”

“Doing everything is the same as doing nothing. The Tower Master chose to bear everything by doing nothing. On the other hand, I chose to bear all the consequences of the altered causality caused by my actions by doing something. If anyone blames me for that, it's a burden I must carry.”

“That's too arrogant. I understand what you're trying to say, but...”

“Then what about you, Sword Emperor? If you could turn back time, would you?”

“Would turning back time prevent regrets?”

Clank.

“No. Usually, it causes even bigger regrets. You might resolve those regrets, but then you're immediately blocked by even bigger regrets. It's a continuous cycle.”

“Conversely, does living without turning back time prevent such issues?”

Clank.

“Indeed. Definitely.”

“That's it. Whether you turn back time or not, it ends up the same.”

Clank.

“It's a bit much to say it's all the same.”

“To someone who can't run, a sprinter seems like a person with special powers. To those who can't traverse time, a regressor seems like a monster, but in the end, they're all just people.”

“That reminds me of what the Apothecary said, but isn't that too arrogant? The Apothecary was also someone who wouldn't lose to anyone in arrogance.”

“Being able to do something means you can also die because of that something. People who can do things others can't often suffer in ways ordinary people don't. In that sense, the world is fair.”

Clank.

“Sword Emperor.”

“Say you could still save your master, what then?”

.....

“Even if you say, [The first wave went where it wanted], even if you're completely convinced, don't you have to persuade yourself again every morning when you wake up? Don't say no. I've watched you fall asleep and wake up.”

“You're right.”

I sighed.

The mirror was almost transparent by then. Even a transparent mirror couldn't show what's beyond, so I couldn't see the Sword Emperor. I just saw myself reflected in it.

“Every morning when I wake up, I ponder.”

“Hmm.”

“Whenever I feel the wind is a bit chilly, whenever I see peonies at the florist while walking down the street, eating ice cream with Heretic Inquisitor and Viper, I think about how wonderful it would be if the master were still alive, if I could bring the master back right now.”

“I know.”

“In the end, I decide not to. I think that's truly honoring the Master. But then I wake up the next day and think again, [But the dead can't wish for anything. But is leaving them dead really for their sake? Isn't that just my own satisfaction?]

“I know.”

“[If I revive the master, the master wouldn't forgive me, but isn't that just me being afraid of suffering? Isn't that all there is to it?]

If alive, if still present, wouldn't the master eventually find happiness again?

“In front of the master's grave... in front of those red peonies, I pondered with the nine worlds in my mind as I bowed.”

"....."

“It's paradoxical. Contradictory. Pathetic and pitiful. Perhaps this dilemma will never leave me as long as I live.”

“Rather, it will probably intensify as time goes by. You also mentioned earlier, now every morning you'll think about the Grey Spider once more, won't you?"

"Yeah."

"Brat."

I looked into the keyhole that remained in the mirror.

Only one was left... I gazed quietly into that last keyhole... That's when it happened.

With a bang, a blade tip shot out from the keyhole.

"....."

I recognized that blade. It was far too massive to merely be called a sword, it was the Sword Emperor's weapon.

The giant blade, reminiscent of a parrotfish, twisted slightly. The thinned mirror, as if sensing the atmosphere, cracked and crumbled like sugar.

Amidst the falling purple glass eyes, the Sword Emperor stood.

He pointed the tip of his sword at me and said,

“Sitting there harboring such deep thoughts, are you not ashamed?”

“You're the one being indifferent like a true orthodox.”

“I've always been quite cool, you know. So cool that seeing a whiner makes me want to crack their skull.”

“Think you can?”

“Now it's finally possible.”

Despite the mirror's collapse, the ninth keyhole remained in its place, with the Sword Emperor's sword still inserted.

The Sword Emperor, as radiant as the unfolded flower garden, was smiling brilliantly.

“Let's have a match.”

"....."

I said,

“Is there a need?”

“I don't need it. You do.”

.....

“I've been impressed by you since quite early on.”

“Well, I do have some exceptional talent.”

“Yeah. So exceptional that not even bleach could straighten out those wrinkles. But despite being all wrinkled up, there was something about you that truly amazed me.”

The Sword Emperor continued with a smile.

“You performed rites for those kids.”

The 10th floor.

His words and my actions flashed before my eyes.

“It was a perspective I hadn't considered. And if you hadn't shown me, I would never have thought of it. Do you know what I felt when I saw it?”

“What did you feel?”

“[Ah. Is this how my master saw me?]”

I tilted my head, not understanding, but after a moment, I was taken aback and lifted my head.

A familiar expression floated on the Sword Emperor's face, one I could never have imagined.

“I felt humiliated.”

It was the first time I realized this man could wear such an expression.

The Sword Emperor smiled broadly again, but the remnants of humiliation lingered in that smile like an aftertaste.

“But if you can do it, then I should be able to do something similar.”

“Sword Emperor.”

“I'm best with a sword, so if I were to do it, it should be with a sword, shouldn't it?”

The Sword Emperor flicked the tip of his sword.

“Come. I'll give them solace.”

At a loss for words, I simply said,

“You were the ghost.”

“Not anymore. And it'd be cheesy to say I'm offering consolation.”

“What's wrong with a little cheesiness...”

“Gong-Ja, from now on, I'll console you...”

“Eeeek! Total goosebumps!!”

“I warned you.”

“Damn...”

The wind blew.

Unknown flower petals scattered wildly.

There, beyond the shattered mirror, across from the ninth keyhole, the Sword Emperor spoke.

“My title is the Sword Emperor, the one who was honed at the bottom of the Dark Moon Cave, a disciple of the Sun Sage, inheritor of the righteous spirit of the orthodox sects, recognized as the supreme being in the world known as the Ten Thousand Sword World.”

Sword Emperor.

Origin, Ten Thousand Sword World.

Supreme Being.

Orthodox Sect.

“Let me request a bout.”

I remembered.

I remembered the expression I wore reflected in the mirror before it shattered. It was an expression that the Sword

Emperor would want to smack for being so pitiful.

Now, it might not be the same. Or perhaps, it's even more so. Honestly, I'm not sure. I tried to smile.

It didn't go well.

Not only when sad, but also when happy, people wish to cry.

“My epithet is the Heaven that Gathers Wails. As the future ruler of the tower's netherworld, my other titles include Wailing Heaven, the Moon of Ivansia, the White Lion of the Earth Spirit Tribe, and the protector of Asuras, the legitimate heir to the Demonic Law of the Heavenly Demon...”

No, that's not right.

I corrected myself.

“I am the Vice-Lord of the Demonic Cult.”

The Wailing Heavenly Demon.

Origin, World of the Lone Child.

Supreme Being Above All.

Demonic Cult.

“Let's engage.

In a duel.

Begin.”

Chapter 398: Our World (3)

---

The sun, which was hanging bright in the sky, suddenly wavered.

The Sword Emperor made his move.

He struck like a bolt from the blue, without warning or herald. Following the skewed trajectory of sunlight, the sword flashed once, and immediately after, a missile-like white flash soared through the air.

"Three moves,"

I, too, raised my sword in response.

A shadow stretched over the flower bed beneath me, resembling the remnants I was riding on.

"Won't you yield even three moves!"

The shadow flickered along the path of the sword.

Demonic Heavenly God Sword

The First Form

Sword of Starving Death - Heart

Shadows sprawled on the ground bit into the earth in unison.

Vital energy was sucked from the ground. It was more akin to harvesting than training, closer to vampirism than harvesting. It was as if a swarm of hungry ghosts had crashed into a feast, gulping down food without even breathing. With the world's energy voraciously absorbed in such a manner, I hurled it straight up into the sky.

The surging blood-red shadow cleaved through the Sword Emperor's dragged-down flash of light in a thunderous manner...!

The Sword Emperor's vital energy was peeled away like an apple skin. The peeled layers of vital energy turned into a white hailstorm, pouring down.

The world flashed as if a million firecrackers had gone off at once.

I took that flash as a signal for my counterattack.

Demonic Heavenly God Sword

The Seventh Form

Sword of Contusing Death - Heart

Brightness and darkness mixed within the flickering world like a dance. From each appearing shadow, crimson vital energies were spewed forth. With no rhyme or reason, and nowhere to escape, the Sword Emperor faced the crimson tendrils with a smile.

"You, of all people,"

His fully revealed teeth gleamed like those of a lion.

"Aren't going to let me off with three moves, are you!"

The tip of the Sword Emperor's sword moved.

A sound reminiscent of a tongue clicking echoed.

If it was indeed the sound of a tongue clicking, it surely would have been made by the void itself.

—Whoosh.....!!

The void opened up.

It was as if a transparent giant was opening its lips to take a breath. The world's energy I had shot through the shadows like a conduit was sucked into the rift opened in the world.

It was sucked in.

And then it burst forth.

Boom.....!

Not vertically, but horizontally, a waterfall of light poured down.

The moment I saw the oncoming barrage of light, I realized what was happening.

"The vital energy I shot—"

Before I could even utter my retort about him swallowing and spitting back my energy, the Sword Emperor responded.

"As if it were yours to claim—"

Before he could finish, I reacted.

"Hup—"

I gripped a dagger.

Lifted it.

And buried both heels deep into the ground.

"Haa..."

Shadow is the offspring of light. If there exists something infinitely vast and boundless as light, it must be the shadow. With the oncoming flash of light, the shadows became as distinct as if they were anchored to the ground, to the world itself. I anchored my whole body in place.

I stood firm.

Then, as if a lightning rod was struck by a bolt of lightning, the wave of light struck the tip of the dagger.

"Urgh.....!"

Blood burst forth from my lips.

The blood quickly dried up and crumbled away. I could feel the blood flowing through my veins depleting from within, as if a desiccant was injected into them.

If being struck by the strike of the Constellation Killer felt like being burnt up by lightning in an instant, this strike from the Sword Emperor was like having the scorching sunlight beat down right in front of my face.

"Ugh..."

I breathed.

I breathed deeply.

With my heart burning up, I took a breath... and then,

"Hryaap.....!!"

I began my energy circulation.

Demonic Heavenly God Sword

The Second Form

Sword of Parched Death - Heart

Like a parched old woman guzzling seawater, I drank in the light mass just as it was, with its scorching thirst. I gathered the absorbed light mass into my heart.

In sync with that thumping heartbeat, I sent it toward my dantian and brain.

My vision flashed.

The light mass spread and burst along my veins and spine. It filled my trembling body, my drying blood. Gritting my teeth to take the shock in, I replenished it with the light I had taken in.

I exploded it.

"Swo.....!"

As I screamed, the streaks of light extending from my body burst forth from every pore.

".....!"

The Sword Emperor flinched, raising his sword to block.

He was fast enough. But it was too late. Like a porcupine shooting its quills all at once, the light mass I had expelled from my entire body whipped past the Sword Emperor.

"Keuk!"

Although the impact of the wide and thin rays of light wasn't significant, it was enough to disrupt his stance, and that was sufficient.

The void closed up.

The scent of incense burning in a temple wafted through the air.

"Thanks for purging the impurities... very, very much appreciated...."

While emitting smoke from my body, I spoke.

The Sword Emperor burst into a scoffing laugh.

"Crazy zombie bastard."

"It was you who started it... Whirling it around like that... It's not like it's noodles or something...."

"It was mine in the first place."

"Since when was there mine and yours in external energy...."

"Right here."

The Sword Emperor said.

Before I could retort further, he gripped his sword.

"Now you understand why I didn't yield those three moves."

Of course.

"Yeah."

I understood. I had no choice but to.

I...

"You have become stronger than that master of yours in winter."

"Yes."

The flowers of this world were living their lives with strong and resilient poison.

Despite the exchange of strikes that could split the heavens and scorch the earth, the flowers remained. They sang the song of their lives, entrusting themselves to the wind.

Among the scattering dandelion seeds, a man nodded.

"Are you happy?"

I was happy.

"Are you sad?"

I was sad.

"Both?"

I just felt a little like crying.

Amidst the emotions swirling like a double helix, only the Sword Emperor's eyes shone clearly like the midday sun.

"It's too early to be submerged in either."

I took a breath. I roughly erased the dampness sneaking deep into my nose.

"This."

The Sword Emperor gripped the hilt of his sword.

"This right now."

The tip of the sword moved.

"Needs to be received first."

And then.

Martial Sword

Formless Art

Sword of Singularity

The world turned upside down.

---

I pulled my arm back, holding the sword. I took a step forward.

I put strength into my shoulder.

I thrust forward.

As a conclusion, it was a single stab.

And with that one stab, the world flipped over.

From below to above? From above to below? From left to right? From right to left?

No.

The world turned inside out, from within to without.

Like shoving one's hand into a stuffed doll and turning it inside out, the world expelled itself from the single point where the Sword Emperor's stab exploded.

Spring arrived. Summer burst forth within spring. Before summer even reached the edge of the world, autumn exploded. And from the core of autumn, winter, and then spring again, summer, and once more autumn spewed out.

A mandala made of greenery, leaves, flowers, fruits, grains, falling leaves, and bare branches swirled in a storm.

I knew that strike.

"It was the sword technique, used by "master."

"Yes, the final," strike that was unleashed.

"Now I see," it was such a sword technique.

"Do you only—" see?

"That's not," it.

Words spoken and unspoken passed between the Sword Emperor and me.

"Ah..."

I watched as the strike, not slicing through space but through time, time, and countless times layered upon each other, possibly in a spherical shape, leisurely flew towards me.

It was beautiful.

It was impossible not to be overwhelmed.

"This isn't—"

Just a simple Sword Heart.

It wasn't about shooting the gathered external energy.

"Your world.....!"

The sanctuary the Sword Emperor had built.

His life.

[The Garden of Thundering Flowers unfolds before you.]

His life covered me.

[In the beginning, there was it] [Nothing else existed] [Day of the Sword] [Moon of the Sword] [Day of the Sword] [Hour of the Sword] [Minute of the Sword] [Second of the Sword] [In the moment when gears perfectly meshed] [Oh! It became!] [Finally, it was forged!]

[The Primal Blade]

As if a dam had burst, countless images flickered before my eyes.

[Our] [Waiting] [Anguish] [Hunger] [Thirst]

[This world exists,]

[Only for you]

[All other humans are mere phantoms] [I am] [Alone]

[What is]

[So full of worry]

[On]

[Your] [Your] [Your] [Your] [Your] [Your] [Your face]

Semi-Divine Eye.

[What is so full of worry on your face]

That which occasionally opened after glimpsing into the life of the Tower Master, from this strike, was finally reading into the Sword Emperor.

"You..."

You were born alone.

You were forged.

"You..."

You longed for a sibling. You felt loneliness. You didn't want to be alone. You were seeking an opponent who could fight without holding back, someone into whom you could pour your entirety, someone like that. Then you met the master—the master taught you that you weren't so special.

You were...

"Satisfied,"

[He realized he wasn't alone.]

"Sword Emperor, you are satisfied—"

"I am satisfied!"

The Sword Emperor shouted aloud.

"I was a created life! A given life! I knew how to run before I could walk and was revered before I could shake hands, a shitty life!"

"Sword Emperor..."

"But!"

If the sun had vocal cords, it would have sounded like this.

"It was a life mired in happiness!"

With a shining voice, the Sword Emperor exclaimed.

"I affirm my life! Every meeting! Every parting!"

"Ah ha..."

"Brilliant Heavenly Demon!"

The Sword Emperor, still in his thrusting pose, shouted.

"How about you!"

"I..."

"Did you laugh! Did you love! Did you live! Were you happy!"

"I—"

"I know because I was there with you!"

The man who climbed the tower with me smiled proudly.

"But not as much as me!"

"Sword Emperor,"

"Accept my life! Feel it! Look up to it!"

I smiled.

"That's..."

I reversed the grip on my dagger.

The feel of the duct tape, freshly wrapped but already peeling and burnt to tatters, moistened my palm.

I saw the incoming strike from the Sword Emperor, the sphere of the mandala.

I made my mark.

Demonic Heavenly God Sword

The Ninth Form

Sword of Solitude Death

The dagger, twisted horizontally to avoid my ribs, cleanly pierced through my heart.

Blood flowed.

Slower than a snail creeping along a rainy window, the trickling blood ran down my wrist, soaked my sleeve, and then dropped, plink, onto a blooming flower at my feet.

"You..."

The moment the Sword Emperor hesitated, the flower that drank my blood began to wither.

"You..."

"I..."

[He realized he wasn't alone.]

"I sought refuge in the tower."

"Kim Gong-Ja,"

"I had no parents. I respected the director, but at that time, I was still too young, I couldn't truly see him as my parent. I couldn't make contact. I couldn't ask for help. I..."

I thought of the Black Dragon Witch.

A strong and noble person. A formidable figure facing the tower alone and the world outside. But even she, when she first stepped into the tower, did so because there was nowhere left for her outside. She...

"Sought refuge."

I thought of the Sword Saint.

There were those in the tower who had left behind their achievements outside, entering with a light heart. There were those who entered to challenge.

The Black Dragon Witch was not one of them.

Neither was I.

"I had nowhere to belong."

Everywhere I went, I seemed like an unwelcome guest.

Among people laughing and chatting, where everyone had places to go and homes to return to, rushing their steps on the streets, but only I seemed to be floating adrift.

In a city overflowing with light, my star, moaning in fever, seemed not to want me.

"So I came here."

Appropriately, I had no parents.

It was symbolic.

"Unlike you."

If you were forged by the world, I was discarded by the world. If you had all who shaped you as parents, I was an orphan abandoned by my parents.

So,

"Just like you."

We both left the worlds we grew up in behind and came here.

"Kim Gong-Ja,"

"Sword Emperor, sir."

Blood flowed.

The slowly trickling blood drenched my feet. My blood, spreading along the shadows, withered everything it touched.

It made everything rest.

"Don't you feel unsatisfied?"

The Sword Emperor hesitated once more.

I lifted my lips into a smile, still with the dagger plunged into my heart.

"I am satisfied—"

"Satisfied..."

[He realized he wasn't alone.]

"You weren't satisfied, were you!!"

Just like I had considered my master not wanting any more of life,

[He realized he wasn't alone.]

But just like every time I awoke, I wavered,

[He realized he wasn't alone.]

In the end, you were the same.

"Satisfied,"

You were satisfied with that - you weren't satisfied with that - you could have been satisfied with that - you wanted to be satisfied with that.

That you,

"Ahah,"

For some reason, Bambolina flitted through my mind.

The golden-haired child who truly found everything in this world beautiful, the eternally youthful boy who smiled so brightly without a care, but even he yearned for something beyond. Because he was human. Because we are all merely human.

Because you, too, are just human, I,

“You!”

Screaming at you like this,

"I'll satisfy you!"

You roar at me like a beast.

“If you can,” you say, challenge me,

"I will!" I scream back in response,

[The Garden of Withered Flowers unfolds before you.]

From my heart, I spread my shadows.

The shadow with both Yin and Yang swallows the bright sunlight. My sanctuary, a resting place for weary souls, encroaches upon the Sword Emperor's flower garden.

"Ha!"

The Sword Emperor laughed.

Like a dragon taking a deep breath, he laughed heartily, very heartily.

"Ah ha,"

I laughed.

Like whispering, softly, very softly.

"Ahaha,"

"Ahahaha,"

"Ahahahahahaha!"

The Sword Emperor's time mandala unraveled.

Spring, summer, autumn, winter, and spring again, were all unrolled and unfolded.

The once unstoppable torrent of time, within a halted world, folded its wings.

“To have blocked that...”

The Sword Emperor stamped his foot down.

"It's not over yet!"

I stamped my foot down too.

Our swords— my dagger and his greatsword— clashed, making a clear, chilling sound.

"Good!"

"Yes, it's good!"

Ding!

"Good! It's good! Ah!"

"Yes, yes, it's thrilling!"

Ding!

"You're quite something, Wailing Heavenly Demon!"

"And you, Primal Blade!"

Shadows flowing from my heart shot toward the Sword Emperor. The Sword Emperor, gathering light in one hand as if grabbing the neck of a dragon, parried and slashed with his sword. Ding! I barely managed to deflect with the dagger raised. Then, I spun around and aimed the dagger at his neck.

Even that was blocked, and I laughed.

The Sword Emperor laughed.

"I am not alone!"

He laughed even louder.

"I am not special!"

He laughed with genuine satisfaction.

"I am!"

The Sword Emperor swung his greatsword. He slashed.

Thunder struck.

"I am ordinaryaaaaah!!"

"Yes, Primal Blade! And I am!"

To you, I am.

"I am not lackingaaah!!"

I swung my dagger. Ding! Ding! Ding.....! I did not let go, clinging to the Sword Emperor, who parried with his greatsword, like a wolf biting and hanging on.

"I am not incomplete!"

I am,

"I was not born wrong!"

Now I,

"Have a place to return!"

"Yes! There is! Of course, there is!"

"Like you,"

"Like you!"

Ding!

Our weapons collided.

Our gazes met.

Then separated.

"So, I am,"

"We are!"

With a final intertwining of light and shadow, and a ding sound, the moment it all dissipated...

My dagger and his greatsword were crossed in the air, locked into an unseen keyhole.

"Living is alright!"

And then, the world shattered into pieces.

---

Chapter 399: SSS-Class Hunter who Lives to Die (1)

---

-Breaking news.

-The King of Death, who ventured to conquer the 100th floor of the tower, has been out of contact for some time, hasn't he? There was speculation that he might have failed, and there were rumors that the Black Dragon Guild, along with the other four major guilds and the King of Death family, would send search parties. But now, it seems all those rumors can be put to rest.

-The top rank in the hunter ranking!

-The King of Death has conquered the zenith!

Roars of cheers echoed throughout Tam's Square.

-As you can see, Babylon's squares are now a cauldron of festivity. Everyone probably heard through Tam's messages even before we could report it. Did you hear, announcer?

-Yes. From what we've checked, it seems everyone in the tower heard that announcement.

-This reminds me of when the Celestial Martial Guild Master and the Constellation [Ruin-Harvesting Cow] created an unranked item before.

-Right. Back then, there were prophecies that the Ruin-Harvesting Cow would block the King of Death's path, causing quite a stir in the tower. There were debates about whether all the worlds within our tower should band together to form a large hunting party, or whether we should wait and see.

-The controversy only settled after the Celestial Martial Guild Master returned and explained what had happened.

The announcer wiped his forehead.

-Compared to that time, the current situation is practically calm. The biggest chaos we're seeing across the worlds of the tower is probably the shortage of liquor and chicken.

-Yes. It's undeniably good news, with no room for misunderstanding.

-Those opposing the King of Death, like the [Group Demanding Truth from the King of Death], seem eager to misconstrue it, but what do you think?

-We'll connect to the scene.

Masked individuals gathered, raising placards reading [King of Death(X) King of Lies(O)], [The Manufactured King of Death], [The Dark Connection between the King of Death and the Aegim Empire], [The Traitor of Earth - Puppet of Sormewin], and more.

The leading figures raised their voices.

-We, the [Group Demanding Truth from the King of Death], colloquially known as [KingTruth], have gathered here today to point out the high likelihood that the message, which is claimed to have been broadcasted throughout the tower, has been manipulated.

Listening to our expert (.....) In essence, they say the King of Death has bribed the tower. Observations have been made of the tower's administrators showing favoritism towards the

King of Death (.....)

Or the message itself could be the result of a skill. Even if it's not a skill, our group suspects the very fact that the King of Death ascended to the throne of a Constellation is questionable. But look, if it's true that the King of Death has become a Constellation, it's possible for him to send the same message to countless people simultaneously.

(.....) Up until his early twenties, he lived a life as aimless as a drawn picture; how could such a person become the tower's representative hunter and conquer the 100th floor? Anyone with even elementary school-level common sense could immediately tell this doesn't make sense.....

The announcer narrowed his eyes.

-What are these people talking about?

-I'm not quite sure either. Essentially, they're saying it's manipulation, it's a scam, and even if by any chance it's true, it's still a conspiracy cooked up with the tower, so the King of Death has achieved nothing. Even if he's reached the 100th floor, does it improve people's lives by even a gram?

-Seems like we don't need to pay attention to such words. It's been a while since the message about the 100th floor was sent, have you heard anything from the King of Death himself?

-We've been continuously in touch with the wide-area communicators, the five major guilds, the House of Ivansia, and the apostles of the King of Death's family, but still... Ah.

The announcer's expression changed suddenly.

-We've just received a message from the King of Death!

-Really! Which side?

-It's from the Black Dragon Guild.

The people conducting the broadcast understood what that meant. The fact that it was the Black Dragon Guild, not any other place, that announced receiving a message from the King of Death meant all private contacts with him had concluded, and what to announce and what to keep secret had been perfectly decided.

In that case, the broadcasting station felt less burdened. The announcer said:

-Please connect us to the scene.

The screen shifted. The hall of the Black Dragon Guild appeared.

Previously, there was a vote regarding the fate of the tower.

Whether to be pioneers or to settle, the people of the World of the Lone Child chose to move forward.

No one would dispute that it was the King of Death's speech that decided the direction of the vote.

The hall of the Black Dragon Guild on the screen was the very place where that legendary speech was made. Likely, the Black Dragon Witch had orchestrated even the associative effect.

Kim Gong-Ja, the protagonist who stirred the tower, stood in the same spot he had been during that speech.

-Ladies and gentlemen, the King of Death!

-After announcing his departure to the 90th floor 16 years ago, the King of Death reveals himself for the first time in 16 years!

The announcer exclaimed excitedly.

Beyond the screen, in the hall of the Black Dragon Guild, a chaotic noise could be heard.

[Everyone, there's no need to rush; the King of Death will soon return to your side...]

[Journalists, please maintain order for entry...]

Members of the Black Dragon Guild were managing the chaos and ushering in the journalists.

Meanwhile, the announcer commented on the situation inside the hall.

-Ah, the King of Death isn't actually standing there! It's a hologram.

-There's the Wide-Area Communicator standing right next to it. Seeing the King of Inventions there as well, it seems like a real-time connection is guaranteed.

-Just now, the [KingTruth] claimed that if the actual King of Death doesn't appear, it would be a scheme by the Black Dragon Guild. What do you think?

-As I've said repeatedly, we don't need to listen to their words. I was a bit disappointed myself when I realized it wasn't actually the King of Death appearing, but just a hologram. However, just having a similar thought to them makes me feel completely unworried about that alone, which I appreciate.

-While we're discussing this, it seems the hall has been somewhat organized. I'll move on to the press conference...

Soon, journalists gathered in front of the projected Kim Gong-Ja.

They asked.

-Hello, King of Death! Or should we now call you the Wailing Heaven?

The first question was thrown at him upon his return.

The King of Death smiled.

-You can call me whatever you like. It seems members of [KingTruth] are also here; you too can call me whatever you prefer. Even Flame Retard is fine, but I do prefer being called Kim Gong-Ja. Calling me 'Sir Gong-Ja' makes me feel more at ease.

That was his first response.

The journalists threw the next question.

-We received the message about your conquering the 100th floor. Congratulations. What was beyond it?

-What rewards did you receive?

-What happened there?

-What are your plans now?

Despite the Black Dragon Guild members' best efforts to control the order, the questions almost burst out simultaneously, like a serpent with many heads. It didn't matter.

They were all stories that needed to be told.

Kim Gong-Ja took a deep breath.

"I am—"

---

I met with the Tower Master. Became a Pillar. Parted ways with the Sword Emperor. Talked with my comrades.

I accepted the first event calmly. Or rather, when the Tower Master appeared in the collapsed world after the final key was turned, neither I nor the Sword Emperor were in any state to kick up a fuss.

The Tower Master described it like this:

"You two look like a pair of sergeants who've collapsed in the middle of a soccer field after a hard game."

Lying spread-eagled on the ground and gasping for breath, I didn't even turn to look at where that amethyst voice came from and said.

"Isn't soccer... a game you play with eleven people, not just two?"

"You revealing that you're from a generation that never served in the military is quite the plot twist, Gong-Ja."

I had no idea what she was on about.

I then looked up at the Tower Master.

Just as the summit of a mountain is merely a white dot when seen from afar, so too was the Tower Master just a lone figure standing on that white dot, looking down at the Sword Emperor and me.

The Sword Emperor raised a hand in greeting.

"Hello, Aunty."

“Hey there, Uncle.”

The Tower Master also raised a hand in return.

I laughed.

“Isn’t this where you’re supposed to go ‘Who, who are you calling aunty?!’ while blushing, or shadow your eyes with darkness and ask ‘What... did you just say?’?”

“Wailing Heaven, please be aware that the term ‘ordinary’ cannot encapsulate what you just said. Are you trying to cast me in what role?”

Indeed, fitting for the goddess of fertility with twenty-four children. Even though I was motherless, I imagined that's how it would feel if my mother found a manga I was reading.

The Tower Master sighed and fluttered his sleeve.

“If you insist on using ‘ordinary,’ you should say it like this: ‘Don’t people usually meet in a more sacred and impactful atmosphere?’”

“That response, I already know. Because originally, we should have met here for the first time.”

But I had already faced the Tower Master several times. Compared to my first encounter with the Sword Emperor, the impact was inevitably less.

Even so, a greeting more formal than "Hi, nice to see you" might have been possible. As I thought this, the source of that atmosphere-less meeting scratched his cheek.

“This is our first time meeting, right? I'm the reason why the Pillar meetings were convened several times. There's no need to censor it; I remember.”

"If we don't count the time I encountered your avatar on the 29th floor of the World of the Lone Child, and if we don't count the times you've always been by our sides, if we only count the times we've met face-to-face, then yes, that's correct."

“How about a drink?”

“For the first proposal to come from those who've just crossed the 100th floor, overcoming the zenith, to be this...”

The Tower Master snapped her fingers with a smile.

“Not a bad idea at all.”

A holographic summoning circle appeared in the empty world.

The Sword Emperor pulled a porcelain liquor bottle from his belongings. I was incredulous.

“Isn't that alcohol at least 140 years old?”

“Probably even older? You know, time flies where I stayed.”

“Sword Emperor, sir... Have you heard of something called an expiration date? When I lived alone, I used to open cans of tuna that were years old and add them to expired ramen, but that's really not good. It kind of... makes life feel barren...”

“Don't you know that alcohol gets better with age? Stop your nonsense and prepare some side dishes.”

The Sword Emperor, still seated, pushed my back with his foot.

Ah, such a hassle, I grumbled, but stood up anyway.

“Didn't you bring the Pillars?”

“I didn't.”

“Why not?”

“Because most of the Pillars wouldn't welcome you. Especially you, Wailing Heaven.”

I recalled the attitudes of the Pillars, excluding the Princess, towards me when the Staff of Time Immemorial was revealed.

Laughing while igniting aura instead of fire, I said.

“I like provoking those kinds of people.”

The Sword Emperor also snickered.

"This guy really has a knack for that."

"And you seem like you'd be good at fanning the flames beside him, don't you think?"

"Should I hang around and play by your side for a while, like I used to?"

"I'll appoint you as the official consultant of sarcasm for the King of Death family."

I cooked fried rice with the aura ignited. Come to think of it, these eggs and rice were also pretty old, but since I had kept them in the all-too-convenient magical bag, they should be fine. It's not like these folks here would suffer food poisoning.

Meanwhile, the Tower Master had prepared cups and dishes.

"I didn't come here just for you. Now that there's finally a pioneer, shouldn't I get to enjoy something too?"

“Watching the Pillars suffer from the banter between me and the Sword Emperor from a distance... Tower Master, you seem like you'd really enjoy that.”

“Of course, I'll enjoy it, and I'll continue to enjoy it thoroughly, but still.”

The Tower Master smiled as she placed a cup in front of each of us.

“I want to enjoy this peaceful atmosphere for now.”

I finished the cooking.

I shaped the fried rice into rice balls and topped them off with a touch of oyster sauce.

The Tower Master seemed taken aback by the egg fried rice.

“Wailing Heaven, do you consider rice a side dish?”

“Egg fried rice with oyster sauce is delicious.”

"Wailing Heaven, do you consider rice a side dish? I asked again because I wasn't sure if you heard me correctly the first time."

"It's salty, so it goes well with alcohol. Especially with slightly sweet makgeolli or fruit wine, it's a perfect match. The Sword Emperor's drink is makgeolli, right?"

"It's distilled liquor."

"Sword Emperor, sir, even outside of the Guardian Spirit, you're still the Sword Emperor... At crucial moments, you're utterly useless..."

The Sword Emperor shot a drop of alcohol imbued with aura at me, nearly piercing my heart and sending me into regression.

The Tower Master scolded us.

"How can it be that before and after breaking through the zenith, it's still nothing but fighting and mischief?"

"Oh, dear. Tower Master, life is a series of [struggles], isn't

it?"

"Wailing Heaven, please don't try to compete with Viper in that regard. Have a drink instead."

So, the Sword Emperor and I did just that.

The Tower Master first poured liquor into my cup.

"You've worked hard."

Mm.

"Yeah."

---

Chapter 400: SSS-Class Hunter who Lives to Die (2) (End)

---

As my cup was filled, I took the bottle and poured some for the Tower Master.

"Kim Gong-Ja, you're slated for a Pillar position, aren't you? Has your mind changed on that?"

"Yeah, I am."

As I poured the drink, I continued.

"And I haven't changed my mind about aiming to become the Tower Master either."

"Hmm. It's common for all new employees to aim for the CEO's position. It's a valid ambition."

The Tower Master spoke while looking at the rising liquor in her cup.

"Just be careful not to shatter that ambition. You've barely managed to take on the [netherworld] among the portfolios the Pillars manage."

"....."

"If you wish to challenge me, Kim Gong-Ja, plunder the sanctuaries held by all the Pillars."

The cups were now full.

I set the bottle down.

"What sanctuaries do the other Pillars hold?"

"That's for you to discover in time. While ambition is good, discussing work matters at a welcome party might dampen the mood."

"Fair point."

I lifted the cup filled by the Tower Master.

She, too, lifted the cup I had filled for her.

"Wait."

"I will."

Our cups clinked together.

With a clear sound and ripples in the reflected surface, the two of us smiled. I drank the liquor filled by the Tower Master. Initially cold, the drink ignited a fire in my veins as it slid down my throat. A sense of fulfillment, relief, and anticipation for tomorrow.

There were no explicit messages, but I realized that I had become a Pillar, officially taking charge of all the netherworlds in this tower.

While I was immersed in this realization, the Tower Master also poured some liquor for the Sword Emperor.

"Thanks for coming."

The Sword Emperor took the bottle and reciprocated by filling the Tower Master's cup.

"No need to mention it."

The bottle was placed back on the tray.

They clinked their full cups and drank. After a sigh laced with the spirit of the drink, the Tower Master said,

"Kim Gong-Ja, a Pillar position was destined for you. You've accepted that position."

"Congratulations, Gong-Ja. You've made it as an executive in a conglomerate."

"But, Sword Emperor, there was no specific promise made to

you."

The Tower Master looked directly at the Sword Emperor.

A purple mirror reflected the Sword Emperor.

"What do you desire?"

"Nothing in particular."

The Sword Emperor answered plainly.

"If there's a difference between a tower and a mountain, it's whether someone built it or not. But what does it matter to someone who's reached the top, be it a tower or a mountain?"

Holding the bottle again, the Sword Emperor filled the Tower Master's cup.

"It's time for me to leave."

The Tower Master hesitated.

To the Tower Master, the Sword Emperor said,

"Grant me the 'Authority to Leave the Tower.'"

"Ah."

The Tower Master sighed.

"So you're bringing that up."

"You guessed?"

"From the start, your reason for entering this tower was to have a drink with me."

Snow-like amethyst breaths accumulated on the white pinnacle.

"I'm possessive. I don't wish to let go of any treasure I hold. Literally, until my skin rots, my flesh crumbles, and my bones collapse, even as those bones mix with the earth, I wish for them to mix within my box."

That was something I too had realized when I learned there was an netherworld in the tower.

"But even so..."

Drinking the poured liquor, the Tower Master muttered with his gaze lowered.

"A warrior cannot be leashed."

With her face obscured by the cup, the Tower Master appeared powerless, unlike when she hinted at the domains of the Pillars earlier.

Instead, she seemed infinitely fragile and lonely.

I realized this look was familiar.

'Ah.'

It was the director.

The current expression of the Tower Master resembled that of the director watching our backs as we left the orphanage.

'.....'

In hindsight, the Jaa Soo-Jeong in the side story had also bid me farewell with such a face.

Perhaps all parents share the same expression when parting with their children.

"I'll visit occasionally."

The Sword Emperor, having drained his cup, thumped my head gently with his large hand.

"I'll come to see this garden turn grey. And if this guy is moping around, I'll kick his ass."

"Ah, when have I ever moped..."

Ignoring my muttering, the Sword Emperor looked at the Tower Master.

"I'll visit occasionally, have a drink with you like this, so don't worry."

"Yeah."

The Tower Master said.

With a visage clearly struggling to suppress his loneliness.

"Please do visit occasionally."

To the Tower Master, who has encompassed countless numbers of worlds within the tower's box and witnessed even more lives and deaths, farewells must always be a freshly painful thorn.

I thought of the fox. During my ascent of the 90th floor, the fox, along with the Goddess and the snake, had hidden herself, suffocating in her loneliness. The Grey Spider beside me now, the Sword Emperor, my master, and even Raviel had all faced their greatest enemy not as a more powerful being but as the sheer absence of anyone beside them.

Even for the mighty, loneliness is the only blade that reaches them.

I deeply felt that the Tower Master was also struggling against that blade.

I bowed my head.

"Thank you."

The Tower Master lifted her head.

To the Tower Master, who still wore a face tinged with loneliness as she looked at me, I said, just like I had once thanked her before,

"Thanks to you establishing this tower, we were able to come this far."

I said.

"I was able to become someone."

I spoke of what I had learned.

"The Sword Emperor wasn't the only one."

I spoke of what I had learned.

"Ester didn't need to become a Demon King."

One by one.

"Hwiya didn't establish a wrong nation. Kim Yul wasn't born trash. Master..."

One by one.

"Master didn't face a meaningless death. Raviel could be a bit happier, and Silvia could find happiness without hurting or belittling others. Anastasia could smile more genuinely, and Paladin could pursue justice without actually killing anyone. Bambolina wasn't an incomprehensible monster. Liǎofàn..."

Each name, like raindrops, seemed to pour into me from somewhere else, not here. With every overflow from my heart, there were people I had met. I,

"Sarbast Aegim,"

"Hamusutra,"

"Fox,"

"The first wave,"

"The director,"

"Yoo Soo-Ha,"

I am.

"I wasn't born wrong."

I filled the Tower Master's cup as I bowed deeply.

"Thanks to you building this tower, all of this could be proven."

Liquor overflowed from the cup. My reflection appeared in the spilled drink on the tray.

It soon became unclear.

Tears falling from my chin had disturbed the surface.

"Thank you, mother," I said to the Tower Master.

"Thank you, brother," I said to the Sword Emperor.

"I'm glad to have met both of you."

Silence fell.

"Mm."

Breaking the silence was the Tower Master.

"Mm."

With her arms crossed and head bowed, the Tower Master repeated it several times.

Mm, mm, and then,

"I'm pleased!"

The Tower Master's face, as she spoke, was brighter than the sun reflected in the Sword Emperor's coronet.

A hand touched my forehead. With the same warmth as that hand, the Sword Emperor said,

"Call me anytime."

"Yeah."

I wiped my eyes and nodded.

"I will."

Time passed.

We shared a few more cups of liquor.

When the fried rice was all gone, naturally, the bottle was empty too.

"Then..."

"Yeah."

Both the Sword Emperor and I carefully stood up.

The Tower Master did not. She sat there as she had when drinking, because this was her home.

It was her place.

But the Tower Master clasped her hands and looked at us.

"May fortune be with you both."

And with that, she let us go.

---

There's not much to say after that. Everything mentioned before covers it all.

I became a Pillar.

I didn't start working right away. Even I needed some rest. The souls that had waited for me while I climbed to the 100th floor, I'm sorry, but please wait a little longer. I intended to meet those who were still waiting for me in life first.

How can you skip work on your first day, the Staff of Time Immemorial scoffed. I joked that if it was already upset about this, how would it endure the time we would spend together? The Staff of Time Immemorial just sighed.

I parted ways with the Sword Emperor.

The Sword Emperor received the 'Authority to Leave the Tower.' Astonishingly, this authority applied to 'all worlds where the tower was established.' In short, the Sword Emperor could not only return to the original Ten Thousand Sword World but also to my modern Earth, the outside of the Grey Spider's Tower, and even the world where the Tower Master was born.

The Sword Emperor, who seemed to have developed a competitive spirit after our encounter on the 10th floor, surprisingly burned with a desire to compete. When parting, he said he would visit the world of the great Tower Master to face the being praised as the strongest swordsman across all worlds, the Absolute Sword Duke.

However, it seems it will take a considerable amount of time before that plan comes to fruition. The Sword Emperor, who had been stuck on the 99th floor for a long time, had just as much to catch up on. He would first visit his homeland, the Ten Thousand Sword World, to meet those still alive. Then he would come to Babylon, the 1st floor of our tower, to share a drink with the Sword Saint. If there were others he had been close to, he would share a drink with them too. After that, he would visit my flower garden to pay respects to the Grey Spider. Only then would he set off for the Tower Master's world.

I envy the carefree Sword Emperor, but like he made his choice, I made mine. I have a responsibility to live my life.

I talked with my comrades.

To be honest, I never imagined I'd receive so much scolding in my life... well, to be more honest, I did imagine it. I think it's only fair to be scolded after making them worry and wait. That, too, is a responsibility I must bear in living my life.

Even though hearing all those scoldings felt like my heart would break, being able to touch the fox's fluffy fur helped me calm down. Although the fact that the fox later bit my finger is a secret just between us. As we talked, I shared my experiences, and my comrades shared theirs. Given what they had observed and experienced while I ascended the 90th floor, the situation was sorted out quicker than expected. The snake, who had appeared at the fox's call, had evolved into something akin to an Anaconda, gathering divinity during my absence. Nonetheless, the gaps were filled thanks to the secrets it shared along the way. I'm truly grateful for that.

Once the situation was sorted, the topic of future plans came up, and that's when this press conference was planned. It was Anastasia's suggestion. I gladly followed the advice of a wiser friend.

"That's all."

Most of it, I shared with the journalists watching me through the projector screen. I hid what needed to be hidden and omitted what needed to be omitted, but it still took quite some time to tell the tale.

Perhaps the journalists will have an easy time finding stories for a while. Whether that's a happy or a troublesome thing, I'm not sure, but if any of them find joy in it, they're welcome to delight in it a bit more. I was ready to answer all the questions that came from this conference.

Then, a journalist asked.

"What do you plan to do now?"

I lifted my head.

I saw the journalists looking at me, the camera capturing me, and beyond that, the many people watching me through the camera.

"What will I do now?"

First, I plan to enjoy being alive by playing with Raviel. That's truly my plan for the future, without a hint of deception.

But I didn't say that.

Because surely, somewhere beyond that camera, there's someone like me from the past, cooped up in a small room, looking at me on the television with the same face I had when looking at the Flame Emperor.

In those days, the Flame Emperor never said the words I wanted to hear in any interview. And now, I understand it's not something to resent. The Flame Emperor lived as the Flame Emperor and spoke as the Flame Emperor.

If there are words I wish to hear, I have to be the one to say them.

"Mm."

The words I, at thirty-three, wanted to hear.

The words I wished my idol would say to me.

"I will..."

I spoke of something I could share with everyone.

"Live through today."

That, too, was an utterly honest plan for the future.

- The End of SSS-Class Hunter who Lives to Die -

---

Afterword

---

Author's Afterword:

Hello, this is Sinnoa!

The story of SSS-Class Suicide Hunter, also known as [Suicide Hunter], has come to an end today. I couldn't ask for more if you enjoyed it.

There might be side stories in the future, but for now, the main story has concluded...!

Answering what SSS-Class Suicide Hunter is about isn't an easy task for me as the author. Putting aside the fact that it mixes many genres, the title itself is SSS-Class Suicide Hunter...

Speaking of the title, there was a chance to change it to 'A Hunter who Dies to Live' before it went premium. Sometimes I wonder if it would have been better that way. However, after going premium, the ISBN was registered, so... (..) it became impossible to change...

I sincerely thank all the readers who have spent a long time with a novel titled as such...!

SSS-Class Suicide Hunter was a story about loneliness.

How to deal with loneliness, how incredible a person who can make someone feel not lonely is, wasn't it a story about what it means to be a savior?

SSS-Class Suicide Hunter was a story about life.

You don't need shining talent, strength, or skills. It was a story that there is value in being alive, even if you can't prove anything to the world or are failing to do so.

SSS-Class Suicide Hunter was a story about death.

It was a story about love and friendship, about choices and responsibilities.

I'm not confident if I have successfully conveyed all these themes I eagerly wanted to include. Looking back, there always seem to be shortcomings and regrets. If I, the author, see them, I can only imagine how the readers must feel, leaving me without a face to show. It's all due to my lack of capacity as an author.

Yet, this inadequate story was able to reach so many of you by chance and receive such generous love.

I'm grateful to everyone on the JPlus management team who spared no support for Sinnoa's first work, to Manager Jong-seong Lim, who leveled up from agent to manager midway, to Cornbits who drew the first cover, to Mintaka KIM who drew the second cover, to Phantasmagoric Beetle, and to everyone who supported us.

And of course, to all the readers who read this work.

If it weren't for your company, love, and support, it would have been impossible for me to complete this journey.

As a writer who sits in front of a monitor to work, it's easy to forget that you are always living with people and writing for people living in reality.

Thanks to the voices, comments, and interest of the readers, I was able to barely remember that fact. At least, I could try not to forget it.

Thank you.

Because of you, Suicide Hunter was possible, and beyond that, I was able to be here.

I will continue to work hard!

My next work will likely start being written after at least a year. In the meantime, I plan to spend time learning things I lacked and wanted to learn by attending classes. I hope to return a bit more grown when we meet again.

The weather is getting hotter. This summer is expected to boast the worst heatwave in recent years, and it seems the novel coronavirus is still lurking, holding its breath.

Please take care of your health.

Have a great day.

This was Sinnoa.

---

Translator's Afterword:

Hello, dear readers! This is the translator, Ryuu.

I find myself at a loss for words now that our adventure has reached its grand finale. It's been a wild ride, filled with laughter, tears, and more than a few moments of existential pondering (and the occasional desperate search through the glossary).

Who could forget the time we first met Kim Gong-Ja, our hero with a penchant for flirting with death more frequently than a lovestruck teenager with their first crush? Or the introduction of the Tower Master, who made us all pause and wonder, "Is this what Gandalf would be like if he got really into administrative work?"

Translating this novel was no small feat. There were times when the cultural nuances were as tricky to navigate as a minefield in stilettos. And let's not even get started on the puns and jokes that made me wish I had a lifeline to call a native speaker, or perhaps a friendly neighborhood spirit with a knack for languages.

One of the most memorable challenges was certainly the title itself. "SSS-Class Suicide Hunter" - a name that sparks more curiosity than a cat in a room full of laser pointers. It's a title that made every coffee shop writing session an adventure in itself, with passersby casting puzzled glances my way, probably wondering if I was working on a self-help book with a very niche audience.

And who could forget our forays into the philosophical? Discussions about loneliness, the value of life, and the essence of friendship often left me pondering my own existence and reaching for the nearest tub of ice cream for comfort. This novel wasn't just a story; it was a journey into the soul.

To the readers who stuck with us through thick and thin, through every misinterpreted idiom and every cultural reference turned comedic goldmine, I salute you. Your comments, theories, and occasional corrections were the wind beneath my wings, the espresso shot in my morning coffee.

As we close this chapter (pun intended), I can't help but feel a mix of relief and melancholy. Relief because my nights will no longer be haunted by the fear of mistranslating a pivotal plot twist. Melancholy because I'll miss our daily rendezvous with Kim Gong-Ja and his merry band of misfits.

But fear not! Like any good serial, the end is never truly the end. There are side stories to anticipate, and who knows? Perhaps our paths will cross again haha.

Until then, keep reading, keep questioning, and most importantly, keep laughing at the absurdity of it all.

See you around, hopefully enjoying more of my works,

Ryuu

---

Editor's Afterword:

Bruh, Ryuu really wrote a lot. Anyways, I'm the editor of this series, Abstract.

I joined the team mid-way through the series and enjoyed my time editing the series. Although I never really understood what the MC or author were tryna do, but hey, shit was good XD.

Thank you all for sticking with us until the end of the series and I hope y'all stick around for more since Ryuu is gonna go goblin mode soon. See ya around folks!

Glossary

---

1. Tower
2. Timeline
3. Translator's Note

Tower

---

[image]

The tower

The Tower was said to have mysteriously appeared out of nowhere, Hunters lived differently compared to the people living from the outside world and the tower can be seen on the horizon from anywhere on Earth. Hunters all stepped into the tower and mostly lived there. Whether they liked it or not, they faced life-threatening events regularly. Whoever stepped foot in the tower could never leave, that was one of the rules in the tower.

History

---

The Tower was created by Ja Soo-jung she made the Tower so that it would be the only place where all the sadness in the world gathers so she can take the burden of it on herself.

When the Tower first appeared, numerous individuals entered in search of fame, riches and adventure. The first decades of the Tower was characterised by suffering and strife, as numerous groups attempted to establish authority and dominate over the Tower. There existed a slave system, terrorist organisations, racial discrimination and clashing sentiments, eventually coagulating into a chaotic hodge pot which 'seemed as though the whole of humanity's history was compressed into one thing'. Additionally, the outside world had taken to sending 'unwanted' individuals into the tower, such as war refugees and orphans, thus fostering the image of the Tower as 'society's garbage can'.

Eventually, the five leaders of the current five great guilds gathered. Black Witch proposed the eternal non-aggression pact. Countess agreed under the condition that she would hold monopoly over the Tower's economy. Heresy Inquisitor agreed under the condition that each guild would be allocated territory in exchange for his ability to cover-up crimes, while Sword Saint, then head of the Vigilante's Guild and Rank 1, agreed to step back and turn a blind eye. In the face of then conflicting beliefs and principles, all leaders agreed to carry out what happened next under their own beliefs and principles.

Over the next 5 days, the original 10 great guild was reduced to five and a mass genocide was carried out. On the 1st night, 4,653 people were killed. On the 2nd night, 10,171 people. The 3rd night saw 8,275 people murdered. The 4th night saw 7,412. Lastly, on the 5th night, 23,781 people were killed. After the deed was done, all five guild leaders collectively agreed to never speak of the incident again. This event also led the Sword Saint to abandon the Vigilante's Guild.

Structure

---

The tower has many floors that are connected one by one and each of the floors is made up of one world. Those worlds are only a replica or clones observed by the tower owner with its ability, however, all of them are real even though it is just a cloned world. Each of the floors is filled with different kinds of monsters, to get out of the floor, you need to clear the stage. It is different from the outside world since you can have skill cards and auras when you enter the tower and become a hunter. Each of the floors has different ways to clear it and the worlds are all different from each other.

Stages that are not attacked basically move in units of time independent of each other, and if you challenge a stage, it is linked with the time on the first floor of the tower at the moment of challenge.

The society in the tower was much more bloody than the outside world. To put it nicely, the strong ate well, and the weak were the meat. It didn't matter even if the hunters wanted to escape the tower and live lavishly in the outside world. Those who had entered the tower had abandoned their wealth, their relationships, their nationality, and their identity.

The tower had different themes on floors. The 1st floor to the 10th floor was [Tutorial] while the upper floors all have different plays.

Only the Countess can interact with the world outside, she was the only hunter who has the title 'Count,' however, she can only send and receive things from the outside world.

- The hunter's nationality doesn't matter inside the tower.
- Retired hunters work in the first-floor city as a waiter, chef, etc.
- All the hunters in the tower have auras in their bodies.

Three skills have been revealed to support the tower's structure, the fourth skill is not revealed until completion. They are...

- The Earth Bone Dragon's Skull
- The Ice River Dragon's Breath
- Mansaeng

System

---

- System Message - like most webcomics that have hunter or game themes, the tower also has a system message where a message window will appear only to the hunters.
  - They can check their skills by saying "Open skill card."
  - They can check their current status by saying "Status Window."
- Rankings - The tower ranks the hunters and it will show up through a hologram after they clear the stage. The one who ranks first has the most privilege, they get a lot of rewards and have the right to decide. The people who contributed the most would get the rewards first and will be summoned first to the next floor.

Skills

---

The tower gives a skill to those who they acknowledge and that's when hunters awakened their skill. The skill awakening sound would normally say something like "The Tower is moved by your determination," or "The Tower rewards you for your honest efforts," or "The Tower praises you for your achievements."

Monsters residing in the tower also have their own skills.

Stages

---

Individual Route

- 1st Floor City : Base
  - It is a city where hunters could rest however long they wanted. It was a step for beginners to get used to the tower. It is also called the Babylon/ Naraka/ City of Ascension.

- 2nd Floor : Hunting Ground
  - It is a hunting ground where hunters can hunt slimes.

- 3rd Floor : Hunting Ground
  - The inhabitants living on this floor are Orcs. They are ridiculously strong, their attack patterns are simple and has tough skin.

- 4th Floor : Hunting Ground

- 5th Floor : Boss Monster
  - The Goblin King is the boss monster and is the one staying on this floor. He is a senior member and was strong.

- 6th Floor : Hunting Ground
  - It is a hunting ground where wolves are the inhabitants on this floor. These weren't ordinary wolves. They were engraved by what appeared to be tattoos which could be seen even through their thick hair. These were Meadow Wolves and the more complex the patterns on their bodies, the stronger they were. This place is where Kim Gong-ja killed Yoo Soo-Ha during the first few chapters.

- 7th Floor : Hunting Ground
- 8th Floor : Hunting Ground
- 9th Floor : Hunting Ground
- 10th Floor : Boss Monster
  - This floor is the last tutorial in the tower. It has an old big mansion and inside it are thousands of dolls, the Hellfire Maiden is the boss monster on this floor.

Public Route

[image]

The map from 11th to 20th floors

All information below from the 11th to 20th floors is written by the Author Shin Noah.

- 11th Floor : Imperial Port

- It is close to the fishing port where the seafood is mainly supplied. It is also used as a commercial port, but it trades with a nearby port adjacent to the seashore or along a river.

- 12th Floor : Imperial Capital

- The largest city in the world. It is a magnificent and colorful place, but there is no day when it is comfortable with the struggles of all kinds of forces and political blood. The water and sewage facilities are very well done, but the sewage system is huge as well. That means, yes, the sewer is infested with monsters...
- Hunters without tinnitus these days are aiming to level up while going around the quest hit and run. Unlike the 1st to 9th floors, which have only hunting content, you can build relationships with natives (NPC), and there are many empty houses, so the top 1 has reached real estate saturation. There are also more and more people who have homes and hideouts here, avoiding floors.

- 13th Floor : Temple

- It is a temple built in a place that separates the east and west of this world. In the tradition, it is said that this place, also called the Dragon Emperor's spine, was tightly wrapped around it. Its authenticity is unclear, but it has been handed down in the goddess's temple as if it were orthodox.
- As it was built in a place separating east and west, many people come and go. As such, incidents occur often. As a result of the Heretic Inquisitor's negotiations, hunters can receive full-fledged quests from temples under the jurisdiction of the Guardian Goddess Church, including this one. By completing these quests and accumulating achievements, you can receive better quality equipment or better quality healing miracles.

- 14th Floor : Fairy Forest

- It is home to the elves. Elves are also spreading throughout the world. However, the elves are also home to this forest. Elves in different worlds have different shapes, but the lifespan of the Elves in the Chumsan World is about 300 years.

- The home of the elves is clearly in the forest, but it is protected by a magical barrier. So it can never be reached by blindly wandering.
  - There are a lot of rare herbs, berries, mushrooms, and animals. One of them is the balloon cat.
  - There are also a lot of powerful monsters. From pretending to be trees, things that all predators could use as role models, and things that wouldn't feel uncomfortable. The fact that there are a lot of rare things means that many people don't want to step into it.
-
- 15th Floor : Mermaid Lake
    - It is the home of mermaids and lizards, and other children who are difficult to live in the land for a long time. If mermaids are nobles, Lizardmen is more like a knight. Apparently, the mermaids are in the upper ranks, but Lizardmen don't take it.

- Here, the difference in lifespan between the mermaid and the Lizardman and the social structure resulting from it plays a part. The life span of this world mermaid is approximately 500 years. Lizardmen's lifespan is about 50 years, which is a whopping 10 times difference. Thus, the Lizardmen in this world have one mermaid for each clan, and the clan is cared for by the mermaid. The mermaids take care of the Lizardmen, and the Lizardmen are building a mutual respect & symbiosis society that protects the mermaids.
- Lizardmen can be active outside the lake. Somehow educated, mature Lizardmen, half of them stay in the lake, half of them go outside and wander around the world before returning.
- Mermaids, on the other hand, have difficulty getting out of the lake. So, the outer oil itself hardly occurs, but if you have to go outside the lake somehow, you can move while floating around with floating water droplets.
- Mermaids and Lizardmen are also good at magic. Among them, the mermaids have excellent magical skills that they are called 'the wise men of the lake'.

- It is such a lake, but it is by no means a peaceful place. Most of the monsters that seem to be friendly with water live. The lake is enormously wide and the water is terrifyingly deep, and there are also many giant monsters that can cause a deep-sea phobia. And since the water of this lake itself comes from the open sea after going through Cheomsan once, the eggs of the open sea monsters that Cheomsan could not filter outflow in and hatch, causing a riot.

- 16th Floor : Volcanic Zone

- Defeat the twisted Nether monsters pouring out of the volcano, climb to the top, and defeat the Death Knights riding small drakes (Wyverns) in the nest. Lava is flowing all over the place, and if you drop your foot, you take enormous sustained damage.
- After clearing, that is, before being invaded by Estel, even if it were a volcano, it was not a place full of rocks and stones, it was just a lush mountain.

At the top, there was a mountain lake full of clean water, which is said to be among the three thousand and six thousand of Baekdusan Mountain. Near Sanjeong Lake, some fighters valued honor.

- Despite belonging to humans, half human-half weapons, which paid more attention to their dragongari and spearmen rather than humans, are ranked as competition. The score of the horse dragon skill competition is higher. Among them, there is a special Wyvern instance, which is said to have been tamed by one of Shi Emperor Aikim's associates. Since then, those who know how to ride this special object have come to be called prophecy dragons.

- 17th Floor : Merchant City Federation

- They lived together in a large river where the water flows from the Sanjeong Lake, which is located at the top of the volcano, and the water flows from the Great River. The ancestors were serfs or exiled criminals who fled from a small state on the 19th floor, but now that they gained their wealth, they bought a genealogy and succeeded in laundering them.

- It is a republic made up of merchants, but it does not go back to a particularly democratic process. This is a place where rich humans have more power to speak. It will be similar anywhere, not on the 17th floor, but it is uncommon for people to stop killing opponents by using it with more spear swords as well as the right to speak.
- The slave traders are also active. There is no hesitation in capturing those who have fallen out of the 19th and 18th floors behind civilizations, that would have been their ancestors before the Emperor of the Shim era, and sent them to the east. In some cases, they are so unrestrained that they stop hunting for slaves on their own.

- 18th Floor : Great Plains

- It is a plain where nomads live. It is a paradise for field bosses, not only the nomads, but also the big monsters, giant toothed worms, and huge wolves from time to time.
- The indigenous peoples who live here are strong and belligerent nomadic peoples.

- 19th Floor : Small Nations
  - It is a place where absurdity and irrationality, barbarism, and savagery run wild. Civilization, culture, and technology are centuries behind the eastern empire.
- 20th Floor : Paradise
  - It is now a desolate land that has not been touched for a long time.
- 21st Floor: Rest Area
- 22nd Floor: Chronicles of the Heavenly Demon
(Genre: Martial Arts, Fusion)

- 23rd floor: Saga of the Iron Knights in Space (Genre: Sci-Fi)
- 24th floor: Dawn Mountain Cabin Journal (Genre: Mystery, History)
- 25th Floor: The Tale of Sormwyn Academy (Genre: Romance, Fantasy)
- 26th floor: Festival City Apocalypse (Genre: Sports)
- 27th floor: Bakery Street Epic (Genre: Cooking, Business Management)
- 28th Floor: Me and Our Scapegoat (Genre: Fairytale)
- 29th floor: Tale of the Ascending City - Side Story (Genre : School)
- 30th Floor: [Corner Librarian] who lived in [The Great Library of All Things]

- 31st to 49th Floor: Race War Continent

Rankings

| Rank  | Hunter Name |
|-------|-------------|
| 1st   | Kim Gong-Ja |
| 2nd   |             |
| 3rd   |             |
| 4th   |             |
| 5th   |             |
| 6th   |             |
| 7th   | Sword Saint |
| 8th   |             |
| 9th   |             |
| 10th  | Sword Saint |
| 11th  |             |
| 12th  |             |
| 13th  |             |
| 14th  | Pharmacist  |
| 15th  |             |
| 16th  |             |
| 17th  |             |
| 18th  |             |
| 19th  |             |
| 20th  |             |
| 21st  |             |
| 22nd  |             |
| 23rd  |             |
| 24th  |             |
| 25th  |             |
| 26th  |             |
| 27th  |             |
| 28th  |             |
| 29th  |             |
| 30th  |             |
| 31st  |             |
| 32nd  |             |
| 33rd  |             |
| 34th  |             |
| 35th  |             |
| 36th  |             |
| 37th  |             |
| 38th  |             |
| 39th  |             |
| 40th  |             |
| 41st  |             |
| 42nd  |             |
| 43rd  |             |
| 44th  |             |
| 45th  |             |
| 46th  |             |
| 47th  |             |
| 48th  |             |
| 49th  |             |
| 50th  |             |
| 51st  |             |
| 52nd  |             |
| 53rd  |             |
| 54th  |             |
| 55th  |             |
| 56th  |             |
| 57th  |             |
| 58th  |             |
| 59th  |             |
| 60th  |             |
| 61st  |             |
| 62nd  |             |
| 63rd  |             |
| 64th  |             |
| 65th  |             |
| 66th  |             |
| 67th  |             |
| 68th  |             |
| 69th  |             |
| 70th  |             |
| 71st  |             |
| 72nd  |             |
| 73rd  |             |
| 74th  |             |
| 75th  |             |
| 76th  |             |
| 77th  |             |
| 78th  |             |
| 79th  |             |
| 80th  |             |
| 81st  |             |
| 82nd  |             |
| 83rd  |             |
| 84th  |             |
| 85th  |             |
| 86th  |             |
| 87th  |             |
| 88th  |             |
| 89th  |             |
| 90th  |             |
| 91st  |             |
| 92nd  |             |
| 93rd  |             |
| 94th  |             |
| 95th  |             |
| 96th  |             |
| 97th  |             |
| 98th  |             |
| 99th  |             |
| 100th |             |
| 101st |             |
| 102nd |             |
| 103rd |             |
| 104th |             |
| 105th |             |
| 106th |             |
| 107th |             |
| 108th |             |
| 109th |             |
| 110th |             |
| 111st |             |
| 112nd |             |
| 113rd |             |
| 114th |             |
| 115th |             |
| 116th |             |
| 117th |             |
| 118th |             |
| 119th |             |
| 120th |             |
| 121st |             |
| 122nd |             |
| 123rd |             |
| 124th |             |
| 125th |             |
| 126th |             |
| 127th |             |
| 128th |             |
| 129th |             |
| 130th |             |
| 131st |             |
| 132nd |             |
| 133rd |             |
| 134th |             |
| 135th |             |
| 136th |             |
| 137th |             |
| 138th |             |
| 139th |             |
| 140th |             |
| 141st |             |
| 142nd |             |
| 143rd |             |
| 144th |             |
| 145th |             |
| 146th |             |
| 147th |             |
| 148th |             |
| 149th |             |
| 150th |             |
| 151st |             |
| 152nd |             |
| 153rd |             |
| 154th |             |
| 155th |             |
| 156th |             |
| 157th |             |
| 158th |             |
| 159th |             |
| 160th |             |
| 161st |             |
| 162nd |             |
| 163rd |             |
| 164th |             |
| 165th |             |
| 166th |             |
| 167th |             |
| 168th |             |
| 169th |             |
| 170th |             |
| 171st |             |
| 172nd |             |
| 173rd |             |
| 174th |             |
| 175th |             |
| 176th |             |
| 177th |             |
| 178th |             |
| 179th |             |
| 180th |             |
| 181st |             |
| 182nd |             |
| 183rd |             |
| 184th |             |
| 185th |             |
| 186th |             |
| 187th |             |
| 188th |             |
| 189th |             |
| 190th |             |
| 191st |             |
| 192nd |             |
| 193rd |             |
| 194th |             |
| 195th |             |
| 196th |             |
| 197th |             |
| 198th |             |
| 199th |             |
| 200th |             |
| 201st |             |
| 202nd |             |
| 203rd |             |
| 204th |             |
| 205th |             |
| 206th |             |
| 207th |             |
| 208th |             |
| 209th |             |
| 210th |             |
| 211st |             |
| 212nd |             |
| 213rd |             |
| 214th |             |
| 215th |             |
| 216th |             |
| 217th |             |
| 218th |             |
| 219th |             |
| 220th |             |
| 221st |             |
| 222nd |             |
| 223rd |             |
| 224th |             |
| 225th |             |
| 226th |             |
| 227th |             |
| 228th |             |
| 229th |             |
| 230th |             |
| 231st |             |
| 232nd |             |
| 233rd |             |
| 234th |             |
| 235th |             |
| 236th |             |
| 237th |             |
| 238th |             |
| 239th |             |
| 240th |             |
| 241st |             |
| 242nd |             |
| 243rd |             |
| 244th |             |
| 245th |             |
| 246th |             |
| 247th |             |
| 248th |             |
| 249th |             |
| 250th |             |
| 251st |             |
| 252nd |             |
| 253rd |             |
| 254th |             |
| 255th |             |
| 256th |             |
| 257th |             |
| 258th |             |
| 259th |             |
| 260th |             |
| 261st |             |
| 262nd |             |
| 263rd |             |
| 264th |             |
| 265th |             |
| 266th |             |
| 267th |             |
| 268th |             |
| 269th |             |
| 270th |             |
| 271st |             |
| 272nd |             |
| 273rd |             |
| 274th |             |
| 275th |             |
| 276th |             |
| 277th |             |
| 278th |             |
| 279th |             |
| 280th |             |
| 281st |             |
| 282nd |             |
| 283rd |             |
| 284th |             |
| 285th |             |
| 286th |             |
| 287th |             |
| 288th |             |
| 289th |             |
| 290th |             |
| 291st |             |
| 292nd |             |
| 293rd |             |
| 294th |             |
| 295th |             |
| 296th |             |
| 297th |             |
| 298th |             |
| 299th |             |
| 300th |             |
| 301st |             |
| 302nd |             |
| 303rd |             |
| 304th |             |
| 305th |             |
| 306th |             |
| 307th |             |
| 308th |             |
| 309th |             |
| 310th |             |
| 311st |             |
| 312nd |             |
| 313rd |             |
| 314th |             |
| 315th |             |
| 316th |             |
| 317th |             |
| 318th |             |
| 319th |             |
| 320th |             |
| 321st |             |
| 322nd |             |
| 323rd |             |
| 324th |             |
| 325th |             |
| 326th |             |
| 327th |             |
| 328th |             |
| 329th |             |
| 330th |             |
| 331st |             |
| 332nd |             |
| 333rd |             |
| 334th |             |
| 335th |             |
| 336th |             |
| 337th |             |
| 338th |             |
| 339th |             |
| 340th |             |
| 341st |             |
| 342nd |             |
| 343rd |             |
| 344th |             |
| 345th |             |
| 346th |             |
| 347th |             |
| 348th |             |
| 349th |             |
| 350th |             |
| 351st |             |
| 352nd |             |
| 353rd |             |
| 354th |             |
| 355th |             |
| 356th |             |
| 357th |             |
| 358th |             |
| 359th |             |
| 360th |             |
| 361st |             |
| 362nd |             |
| 363rd |             |
| 364th |             |
| 365th |             |
| 366th |             |
| 367th |             |
| 368th |             |
| 369th |             |
| 370th |             |
| 371st |             |
| 372nd |             |
| 373rd |             |
| 374th |             |
| 375th |             |
| 376th |             |
| 377th |             |
| 378th |             |
| 379th |             |
| 380th |             |
| 381st |             |
| 382nd |             |
| 383rd |             |
| 384th |             |
| 385th |             |
| 386th |             |
| 387th |             |
| 388th |             |
| 389th |             |
| 390th |             |
| 391st |             |
| 392nd |             |
| 393rd |             |
| 394th |             |
| 395th |             |
| 396th |             |
| 397th |             |
| 398th |             |
| 399th |             |
| 400th |             |
| 401st |             |
| 402nd |             |
| 403rd |             |
| 404th |             |
| 405th |             |
| 406th |             |
| 407th |             |
| 408th |             |
| 409th |             |
| 410th |             |
| 411st |             |
| 412nd |             |
| 413rd |             |
| 414th |             |
| 415th |             |
| 416th |             |
| 417th |             |
| 418th |             |
| 419th |             |
| 420th |             |
| 421st |             |
| 422nd |             |
| 423rd |             |
| 424th |             |
| 425th |             |
| 426th |             |
| 427th |             |
| 428th |             |
| 429th |             |
| 430th |             |
| 431st |             |
| 432nd |             |
| 433rd |             |
| 434th |             |
| 435th |             |
| 436th |             |
| 437th |             |
| 438th |             |
| 439th |             |
| 440th |             |
| 441st |             |
| 442nd |             |
| 443rd |             |
| 444th |             |
| 445th |             |
| 446th |             |
| 447th |             |
| 448th |             |
| 449th |             |
| 450th |             |
| 451st |             |
| 452nd |             |
| 453rd |             |
| 454th |             |
| 455th |             |
| 456th |             |
| 457th |             |
| 458th |             |
| 459th |             |
| 460th |             |
| 461st |             |
| 462nd |             |
| 463rd |             |
| 464th |             |
| 465th |             |
| 466th |             |
| 467th |             |
| 468th |             |
| 469th |             |
| 470th |             |
| 471st |             |
| 472nd |             |
| 473rd |             |
| 474th |             |
| 475th |             |
| 476th |             |
| 477th |             |
| 478th |             |
| 479th |             |
| 480th |             |
| 481st |             |
| 482nd |             |
| 483rd |             |
| 484th |             |
| 485th |             |
| 486th |             |
| 487th |             |
| 488th |             |
| 489th |             |
| 490th |             |
| 491st |             |
| 492nd |             |
| 493rd |             |
| 494th |             |
| 495th |             |
| 496th |             |
| 497th |             |
| 498th |             |
| 499th |             |
| 500th |             |
| 501st |             |
| 502nd |             |
| 503rd |             |
| 504th |             |
| 505th |             |
| 506th |             |
| 507th |             |
| 508th |             |
| 509th |             |
| 510th |             |
| 511st |             |
| 512nd |             |
| 513rd |             |
| 514th |             |
| 515th |             |
| 516th |             |
| 517th |             |
| 518th |             |
| 519th |             |
| 520th |             |
| 521st |             |
| 522nd |             |
| 523rd |             |
| 524th |             |
| 525th |             |
| 526th |             |
| 527th |             |
| 528th |             |
| 529th |             |
| 530th |             |
| 531st |             |
| 532nd |             |
| 533rd |             |
| 534th |             |
| 535th |             |
| 536th |             |
| 537th |             |
| 538th |             |
| 539th |             |
| 540th |             |
| 541st |             |
| 542nd |             |
| 543rd |             |
| 544th |             |
| 545th |             |
| 546th |             |
| 547th |             |
| 548th |             |
| 549th |             |
| 550th |             |
| 551st |             |
| 552nd |             |
| 553rd |             |
| 554th |             |
| 555th |             |
| 556th |             |
| 557th |             |
| 558th |             |
| 559th |             |
| 560th |             |
| 561st |             |
| 562nd |             |
| 563rd |             |
| 564th |             |
| 565th |             |
| 566th |             |
| 567th |             |
| 568th |             |
| 569th |             |
| 570th |             |
| 571st |             |
| 572nd |             |
| 573rd |             |
| 574th |             |
| 575th |             |
| 576th |             |
| 577th |             |
| 578th |             |
| 579th |             |
| 580th |             |
| 581st |             |
| 582nd |             |
| 583rd |             |
| 584th |             |
| 585th |             |
| 586th |             |
| 587th |             |
| 588th |             |
| 589th |             |
| 590th |             |
| 591st |             |
| 592nd |             |
| 593rd |             |
| 594th |             |
| 595th |             |
| 596th |             |
| 597th |             |
| 598th |             |
| 599th |             |
| 600th |             |
| 601st |             |
| 602nd |             |
| 603rd |             |
| 604th |             |
| 605th |             |
| 606th |             |
| 607th |             |
| 608th |             |
| 609th |             |
| 610th |             |
| 611st |             |
| 612nd |             |
| 613rd |             |
| 614th |             |
| 615th |             |
| 616th |             |
| 617th |             |
| 618th |             |
| 619th |             |
| 620th |             |
| 621st |             |
| 622nd |             |
| 623rd |             |
| 624th |             |
| 625th |             |
| 626th |             |
| 627th |             |
| 628th |             |
| 629th |             |
| 630th |             |
| 631st |             |
| 632nd |             |
| 633rd |             |
| 634th |             |
| 635th |             |
| 636th |             |
| 637th |             |
| 638th |             |
| 639th |             |
| 640th |             |
| 641st |             |
| 642nd |             |
| 643rd |             |
| 644th |             |
| 645th |             |
| 646th |             |
| 647th |             |
| 648th |             |
| 649th |             |
| 650th |             |
| 651st |             |
| 652nd |             |
| 653rd |             |
| 654th |             |
| 655th |             |
| 656th |             |
| 657th |             |
| 658th |             |
| 659th |             |
| 660th |             |
| 661st |             |
| 662nd |             |
| 663rd |             |
| 664th |             |
| 665th |             |
| 666th |             |
| 667th |             |
| 668th |             |
| 669th |             |
| 670th |             |
| 671st |             |
| 672nd |             |
| 673rd |             |
| 674th |             |
| 675th |             |
| 676th |             |
| 677th |             |
| 678th |             |
| 679th |             |
| 680th |             |
| 681st |             |
| 682nd |             |
| 683rd |             |
| 684th |             |
| 685th |             |
| 686th |             |
| 687th |             |
| 688th |             |
| 689th |             |
| 690th |             |
| 691st |             |
| 692nd |             |
| 693rd |             |
| 694th |             |
| 695th |             |
| 696th |             |
| 697th |             |
| 698th |             |
| 699th |             |
| 700th |             |
| 701st |             |
| 702nd |             |
| 703rd |             |
| 704th |             |
| 705th |             |
| 706th |             |
| 707th |             |
| 708th |             |
| 709th |             |
| 710th |             |
| 711st |             |
| 712nd |             |
| 713rd |             |
| 714th |             |
| 715th |             |
| 716th |             |
| 717th |             |
| 718th |             |
| 719th |             |
| 720th |             |
| 721st |             |
| 722nd |             |
| 723rd |             |
| 724th |             |
| 725th |             |
| 726th |             |

Timeline

---

The Appearance of the Tower

---

The Tower mysteriously appeared one day and that was the start of the Hunters, it can be seen on the horizon from anywhere on Earth.

Other World Timeline

---

Sword Emperor

He lives in a town, he was untidy and sings horribly that over thirty people broke in tears. He was famous for having good eyesight since he was young.

He entered the tower when it appeared and conquered it faster than anyone else.

At some time, he died at the 99th floor of the tower.

Hellfire Maiden

She pleaded for food until a wealthy and 'kind' mister took her in his mansion. Horrified by the scene of the other orphans getting tortured, she was traumatized and a fire broke out making her die without fulfilling her wishes.

She became the boss monster on the 10th floor tower.

Future Timeline

---

- Kim Gong-Ja stayed in the orphanage when he was a kid and was given the name 'Kim Gong-Ja' by the caregiver.
- Marcus Calenbury left his family, connections, and fortune to become a hunter.
- Countess, Paladin, Black Witch, Viper, and Heresy Inquisitor subjugated the 2nd floor together.

- Marcus Calenbury became the Rank 1 Hunter.
- At the age of 21, Yoo Soo-Ha became an average F-Class hunter who lived in an apartment. He always wakes up at 11:00 AM and would start hunting on the second floor of the tower at 2:00 PM.

May 6th, hunters ranked 2nd and 7th in the world intend to challenge and defeat the 10th floor of the tower. The Sword Saint still refuses to work with anyone else.

June 7th, during summer, Yoo Soo-Ha awakened on his birthday. During this time, Kim Gong-Ja in his early twenties only had a cheap hoodie, sweatpants, and a new knife.

Three weeks and four weeks later from May 6th, When Yoo Soo-Ha obtained the [Returner's Clockwork Watch (EX)] skill, he used it to win the lottery and won first place, not once, but twice.[5]

One year later, Kim Gong-Ja, who was 22 years old, started collecting articles related to Yoo Soo-Ha and hanged them to his wall. He was one of many people who believed Yoo Soo-Ha was a hero, he was obsessed with him and praised him for being upfront and honest.

- 'Gold Piece Cat' is a well-known mascot of the Tower.
- Saintess Isabelle, who has the greatest beauty, was selected by the Bureau. She earned the title 'Saintess' for giving her earned-hard money to the orphanage.
- Kim Gong-ja waited one year to get a medicine from Master Alchemist.
- The Black Dragon Guild was created and the Black Witch is the one who leads it. Master Alchemist became a rank 5 hunter who leads a guild filled with doctors and pharmacists. Saintess Isabelle became a rank 9 hunter, famous for her exceptional beauty that matched her stellar personality. Paladin became a rank 10 hunter and is the leader of the Vigilante Guard.
- Marcus Calenbury suddenly disappeared for 22 days. The life that Yoo Soo-Ha wished for came true, he became famous and was crowned as the rank 1 hunter.
- The Black Dragon Guild tried to clear the 40th floor of the tower but failed. Yoo Soo-Ha was the first person to have cleared the 40th floor of the tower. Yoo Soo-Ha and the Saintess were rumored to be dating. During this time, Kim Gong-Ja became jealous of Yoo Soo-Ha at the age of 32 and wants to become like him. The tower acknowledges him because of his envy and gives Kim Gong-Ja an S-Rank Skill, named [I Want to Become Just Like You (S+)].

One day later, Saintess Isabelle killed Yoo Soo-Ha by poisoning his drink and Yoo Soo-Ha returned 24 hours prior.

Loop 1, Kim Gong-Ja came across Yoo Soo-Ha killing the Saintess, he tried to escape but was eventually found by Yoo Soo-Ha and died.[2] Kim Gong-Ja's skill activated and copied Yoo Soo-Ha's skill, it was the [Returner's Clockwork Watch (EX)]. Kim Gong-Ja then returned 24 hours prior.

Loop 2, Kim Gong-Ja thought Yoo Soo-Ha carried him back home but realizes that he returned 24 hours prior.

One day later, Kim Gong-Ja read every bit of information written in the newspaper about Yoo Soo-Ha in one of his interviews. A fire broke out and Kim Gong-Ja went to where the fire started, the Master Alchemist was confused on why the Saintess had not arrived yet. Paladin politely asked Yoo Soo-Ha for help but he refused, Kim Gong-Ja decided to kill him and he jumped into the fire. He returned 24 hours prior and killed himself 4,090 times.

Current Timeline

---

This timeline is when Kim Gong-Ja returned back 11 years in the past...

Kim Gong-Ja's revenge and the meeting with the Sword Emperor

A few days before, Marcus killed a few top-ranking hunters because they provoke him by mentioning his grandchildren.

May 6th, Kim Gong-Ja returned 21 years old.

Loop 10, Kim Gong-Ja repeatedly killed himself 10 times to collect information about Yoo Soo-Ha's schedule. He followed Yoo Soo-Ha at the 2nd floor of the tower and covered himself in blood, he asked Yoo Soo-Ha for a healing potion but Yoo Soo-Ha tried to attack him so Kim Gong-Ja kicked his crotch and killed him. A few hours later, he went to a bar and saw Marcus who has arrived. Marcus noticed Kim Gong-Ja following him and mistook him as an assassin sent by the Black Dragon Guild because Kim Gong-Ja's kill count is around 4091. Kim Gong-Ja's head was cut off by Marcus.

Loop 11, Kim Gong-Ja obtained the [Sword Constellation (A +)] skill and meets Sword Emperor. Sword Emperor tells Kim Gong-Ja that he has a rare talent of not being afraid of death and that he'll help Kim Gong-Ja be stronger than Marcus.

In next three days , Kim Gong-Ja killed Yoo Soo-Ha once more and avoided the Sword Saint. Kim Gong-Ja went to the Merchant's Union and received his prize for winning the lottery. Kim Gong-Ja was about to buy an elixir but Marcus came so he went to a poor neighborhood to meet the Master Alchemist. before she became famous Kim Gong-Ja made request for an elixir from the Master Alchemist.

Four days later, May 13th , on lunchtime, the Master Alchemist came at Kim Gong-Ja's room while carrying three boxes of elixirs.

The next day, Kim Gong-Ja headed towards the hunting ground and drink his elixir, he then felt the effects of the elixir. Kim Gong-Ja fights with an Orc, his body couldn't handle the aura and an Orc went to him and Kim Gong-Ja died. The Sword Emperor and Kim Gong-Ja were shocked to know that monsters had skills too. The Sword Emperor tells Kim Gong-Ja that he can see the skill card's effects and Kim Gong-Ja screamed with joy, he then picked the [Chiik, Chik (F)] skill card.

Loop 1, Kim Gong-Ja arrived at the 3rd floor hunting ground to hunt Orcs and activated his new skill.

The 10th and 11th Floor of the Tower

One week later May 21th, Loop 5, Kim Gong-Ja went to the 5th floor, he took down the Goblin King and copied the skill

[Goblin High Society (F)]. He became an E-Class Hunter and made a bet with the Sword Emperor. He went to the 10th floor and told a fake story to the doorkeeper to let him in. He went inside the house and saw dolls telling him to play with them. He used his aura but it eventually went out and died by the flames. He then picked [Night and Day Fire Caution (자나 깨나 불조심)] skill and regressed 24 hours ago but because of his skill, he received a penalty of the Hellfire Maiden. Both Kim Gong-ja's and the Sword Emperor's consciousness are floating around while they watched the Hellfire Maiden's trauma. After that, Kim Gong-ja regressed 24 hours ago.

Loop 1 May20th Kim Gong-ja and the Sword Emperor were shocked and went back to the mansion again. Kim Gong-ja activated his new skill and played with the dolls. He patted each of the dolls until he reach the basement where the Hellfire Maiden was located. The Hellfire Maiden thanked Kim Gong-ja as she melted down like paper. The Sword Emperor complimented Kim Gong-ja and a voice in the sky suddenly announce that the 10th floor stage was cleared and fireworks exploded. More news about the announcement were posted online and everyone wonders who's the one who cleared it. The doorkeeper of the 10th floor ran towards Kim Gong-ja and asked if he was the one who cleared it. Kim Gong-ja was reminded about the bet and tells Sword Emperor to call him "Kim Gong-ja-nim" forever. At the Starbucks, Kim Gong-ja teases the Sword Emperor and the Sword Emperor cried out, a brown cat appeared and a group of hunters started to recruit him. The brown cat transform into her original form, it was the Countess. The group of hunters left and after 10 minutes, Viper angrily arrived, next is Heresy Inquisitor, then Paladin, and last is the Black Witch. They ordered coffee and Kim Gong-ja took out a trump card, telling them if he wins, he'll apply all their guilds. Kim Gong-ja won every round and defeated the hunters, the Sword Emperor was happy that their bet ended. When the time hits 00:00, a goddess appeared and Marcus split the image, the goddess still continued saying the announcement. Kim Gong-ja received the rewards for clearing the 10th floor and the hidden stage reward, he then asked General Sarbast Aegim to kill him. General Sarbast hesitated but killed him in the end.

Loop 2, Kim Gong-ja was riding a horse with General Sarbast and led the soldiers, he got the [Discernment of the Battlefield (B)] skill and the Holy Sword of the Goddess of Protection. He killed a high Goblin King while using the [Chiik, Chik (F)] skill and ranked #1 for clearing the 11th floor. The highest ranking challengers were summoned to the 12th floor first.

Known Rankings

These are the top rankers in the tower.

Future Timeline Hunter Rankings

| Rank | Ranker                 |
|------|------------------------|
| 1    | Yoo Soo-Ha(current)    |
| 2    | General Aegim (former) |
| 3    | Blind Witch            |
| 4    |                        |
| 5    |                        |
| 6    |                        |
| 7    |                        |
| 8    |                        |
| 9    |                        |
| 10   |                        |
|      |                        |

|            |  |
|------------|--|
| 10 Paladin |  |
|------------|--|

Current Timeline Hunter Rankings

| Rank | Name (GL 140) |
|------|---------------|
| 1    | Paladin       |
| 2    | Paladin       |
| 3    | Paladin       |
| 4    | Paladin       |
| 5    | Paladin       |
| 6    | Paladin       |
| 7    | Paladin       |
| 8    | Paladin       |
| 9    | Paladin       |

Translator's Note

---

Hello everyone, considering this is the first chapter where I've been ahead of the old translator, I imagine a lot more of you guys are joining me on this journey from this chapter. Before you begin reading the chapter, I wish to let out some thoughts and context beforehand.

For the new readers, my terminologies are very different from the old translators. I've followed and amended the terms used by the manhwa translators and modified a lot of things. From my comparison, I also seem to be translating a newer version of the novel, which has some things modified by the author/publisher, hence the terms are vastly different, especially in the latest 'Race Wars' and 'Race Wars Part II' arcs. So, at the very least, I would recommend everyone to re-read the 'Race Wars' arcs. I understand that not everyone would like my term changes and my methods, and I respect that. I am not a perfect translator, I doubt anyone is. Especially with a novel like this one, where the interpretations are so poetic and it's really up to the reader how they want to interpret a lot of things. This is simply 'my version' of the novel. It's my way of showing love to the series.

Now, time for some context, as some of you might have been wondering how this release rate was possible. I've basically been grinding translations for this novel at a, quite frankly, concerning rate during my uni semester break. I had initially decided to catch up within a couple months, but well, I ended up getting hyper-obsessed and did 10-15 chapters a day until today, when I'm caught up to the old translators. I plan to reduce my release rate soon, since I don't want to spend my entire 1-month semester break on my desk, typing while looking at a laptop screen, but I promise that I plan to consistently keep translating this novel until its end.

I hope you all will continue enjoying this hyper-obsessed fan's translations. Please do not hesitate to report any possible change suggestions or fixes by reaching out in our discord server.

For the ones who are still too lazy to re-read, here are some terms which will help you in this chapter, as well as coming chapters:

- Pure Humans Tribe: Humans - Sword Saint's race
- Ghost Tribe: Dokkaebi - Viper's race
- Mountain Calamity Tribe: Snails - Heretic Inquisitor's race
- Gill Fish Tribe: Mermaids - Paladin's race
- Vampiric Tribe: Vampires + Dream Demons - Black Dragon Witch's race

- Fairy Tribe: Elves - Countess's race
- Earth Spirit Tribe: Goblins/Hobgoblins/Asuras - King of Death's race

Thank you and enjoy reading!